Campus street changes to 1-way traffic

STEVEN DEARINGER/Collegian

K-State Police officer Mary Williamson directs traffic away from the northeast entrance of the K-State Student Union parking lot Friday morning. Only the south entrance can be used to enter the Union lot, as Mid Campus Drive has been turned into a one-way street.

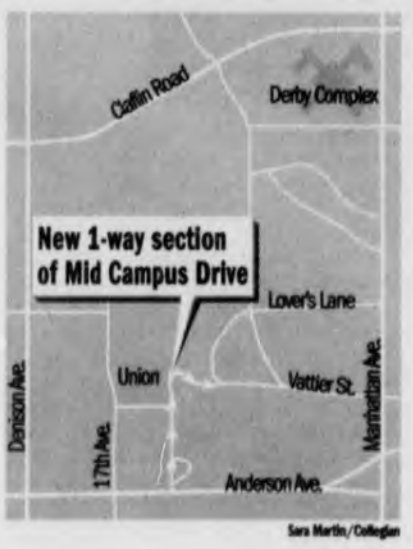
■ Students, faculty, staff cope with recent routing of street near K-State Student Union.

By ALISON PHALEN
Kansas State Collegian

Amid the normal chaos Friday afternoon around the K-State Student Union, there were two K-State Police officers to redirect the drivers who tried to enter Lot A-29 from the northeast outlet.

One man signaled to turn left from Mid Campus Drive, and Officer Oscar Ruiz pointed for him to continue going north. He rolled down the window to explain his intentions, and the officer told him he could not enter there. The driver sped away angrily.

Ruiz said this is the most common change drivers have difficulty accepting.



"I'm here to make everyone aware of the change," Ruiz said.

A portion of Mid Campus Drive switched to a one-lane, one-way street Aug. 11.

The new one-lane, one-way portion begins at the northeast exit of the Union metered parking lot, Lot A-29, and ends where Vattier Street and Mid Campus Drive intersect, just south of Anderson Hall. This means westbound traffic from Vattier must turn north by Anderson Hall.

Keira Mann, sophomore in English, said she is unhappy about the change because Football tickets available this week

By BRYAN MURPHY
Kansas State Collegian

The beginning of the fall semester can mean only one thing — football. With the season upon us, season football tickets are available for students to pick up today.

Carol Adolph, athletic ticket manager, said although students can pick up their general admission and ICAT tickets today, pick-up for reserved tickets began Sunday.

Inside:

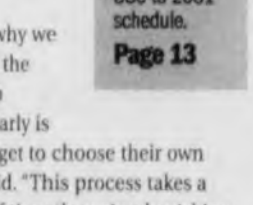
■ K-State adds USC to 2001 schedule.
Page 13

"The reason why we are giving people the chance to pick up reserved tickets early is because the fans get to choose their own seats," Adolph said. "This process takes a greater amount of time than simply picking up general admission tickets."

Reserved, general admission and ICAT tickets still are available for pick-up during business hours through Sept. 1.



"We will not be distributing regular season tickets after Sept. 1, because the first home game takes place Sept. 2," Adolph said.

A common problem many ticket buyers, especially students, experience is congestion in the pick-up lines at Bramlage Coliseum. Adolph said the congestion is due to the fact that most students pick up their tickets on the first or second day of distribution.

Fall 2000 paper works for changes, upholds traditions

The Collegian strives to be the No. 1 source for K-State news. Changes are made each semester to ensure this is maintained.

REED DUNN

The changes are done with you, the reader, in mind. Readers provide a large portion of news within the pages of our daily publication, so input and feedback are valued.

Story ideas are welcomed and encouraged, and can be submitted through e-mail or by calling the newsroom. Contact information can be found each day on page two. Students also can speak their minds by calling the Campus Fourum. Entering its fifth semester, the anonymous call-in line continues to be one of the most popular features in the paper.

No place like home

■ New students commence college life, adapt to K-State campus customs, traditions.

By NANCY FOSTER
Kansas State Collegian

After a seven-hour plane ride and two-hour car drive, Kyle Yaege has arrived in Kansas.

Yaege, freshman in business, lives in the residence halls. Unlike most freshmen, however, Yaege will not be able to drive home for the weekend. He is from Anchorage, Alaska, and said coming to K-State was never out of the question.

"I was encouraged to come here. I was threatened to come here, actually," Yaege said jokingly. "They said I had to keep up the tradition."

Yaege's grandmother and uncle live outside of town, his family owns land off of Interstate 70, his relatives attended K-State, and he was born in Manhattan. His ties to Manhattan and K-State are quite strong, and gave him all the more reason to leave Alaska to come to Kansas.

"I've known the town my entire life," Yaege said. "Anyone that's known me by any stretch of life has come here."

For that reason, his parents are more excited for him to go to K-State than sad about being states away from him.

"There's more pride in my coming here than anguish in my going away," he said. "My mom's only said something once."

Not only is Yaege excited to meet new people and have fun, but he's also excited to be in a different environment.

"In Anchorage, you get to be isolated. When it takes hours to get anywhere, you realize how far away from anything you are. There's probably more to do in this little town than in the town of Anchorage," he said.

The difference in temperature is another reason Yaege said he is excited. Describing conditions in his home state, Yaege said the 50-year storm recently hit Prudhoe Bay, a town about 100 miles north of Anchorage, dumping tons of snow. On a hot day in Anchorage, he said the temperature would reach into the 60s.

"We would generally sit around and wait to go somewhere warm," Yaege said.

"Friday, I spent the day just driving around thinking, 'This is nice.'"

For many freshmen, getting homesick is an issue, but Yaege said it's not a concern.

"The way things worked out for summer jobs, I didn't get to see them a lot. I would go a month and a half without seeing them. So, I hope I don't get homesick, but I don't think I will," he said.

Being an out-of-state student, Yaege said his only concern was making connections with people, but even then, he wasn't too worried.

The first night he stayed in the residence halls, he and his roommate

Church officials undecided on future of burned building

Manhattan Fire Department firefighters work to put out a blaze that destroyed an apartment complex at 500 Humboldt St. on July 25. The fire was caused when fumes from a gas stove ignited in a window air conditioner, causing an explosion.

The future remains uncertain for the apartment complex destroyed last month by a natural gas fire, First Christian Church officials said.

Church board members at First Christian, which owned the building at the intersection of Fifth and Humboldt streets, met last week to discuss possibilities for developing the land.

Mike Mayo, church board member, said the board decided not to commit to anything at this time.

"The discussion was not to take any immediate action to develop the site," he said. "We're taking a more long-term approach and looking at all the options."

Lending to the decision was the money factor, Mayo said.

"If we were to rebuild that immediately, it would cost three times the insurance money we got

Pi Kap house mother died Friday at hospital

After suffering from heart failure and fibrosis lung disease for several years, Pi Kappa Phi's house mother died Friday at Mercy Health Center on College Avenue.

Miriam Claudene Pillsbury, 74, was the house mother for Pi Kap for almost 15 years. She began in the mid-1980s, and then left shortly to work as a nanny in the governor's mansion, under Gov. Mike Hayden. She returned to Manhattan and resumed the position of house mother, where she continued to work until the weekend before her death.

Her duties in the house included supervising the house cook, buying for the food account, working with students, acting as the house director, the etiquette teacher and the hostess during certain weekends and house activities.

Pillsbury, also known as "Mom P." was awarded the Interfraternal Council house mother award of the year two times in the 1990s.

"She was just fantastic," Tim Lindemuth, chapter adviser, said. "She was just determined she wasn't going to let this get her down. She was just so active."

Lindemuth said she was an integral part of their fraternity, working closely with many of the members.

"She was a part of the governance of the house," he said. "She was so involved."

After being on bottled oxygen for more than a year, Lindemuth said Pillsbury knew her death was approaching.

"She was one of my best friends," he said. "We were a really great team."

Funeral services will be 2 p.m. today at the Irvin-Parkview Funeral Home, 1317 Poyntz Ave.

Memorial donations can be made to the Pi Kappa Phi Scholarship Fund at the KSU Foundation.

Traffic accidents on rise with start of semester

Manhattan's college population is back in town, and with it comes an increase in traffic accidents.

"With the increased volume in traffic, more accidents result. There's always a significant increase in accidents this time of year," said Sgt. Tim Hegarty of the Riley County Police Department.

Hegarty said he noticed an increase in the number of accidents beginning Friday afternoon, and there were more accidents than usual over the weekend.

"Right now, there's an increase of people ignoring traffic signals all around town. People are either not paying attention or driving too fast," Hegarty said. "Also, there are people not familiar with the town, and families that are helping students move in aren't familiar with the town."

Hegarty said that to avoid accidents, drivers should pay closer attention to traffic signals and speed limits.

"Don't try to beat yellow lights. That's something that happens a lot around here," he said.

There have been a number of accidents involving injuries, but nothing serious, Hegarty said.

He said school zones and areas around campus will start to be monitored very closely during the day starting this week.

"There are more cars now, and this is how is will be for the next nine months," Hegarty said.

Shopping mall cleared following gas explosion

CONCORD, N.C. — Officials evacuated a large shopping mall Sunday after a natural gas explosion at a nearby construction site shot flames and debris 100 feet into the air.

Authorities reported no injuries from the explosion's fire.

Everyone working at the construction site was accounted for, said Sherry Lee, a spokeswoman for the Concord Fire Department. She said gas to the line had been shut off and firefighters were putting out the flames.

Authorities did not know late Sunday what had caused the explosion.

The construction site was several hundred yards from Concord Mills mall and several freestanding restaurants, all off Interstate 85 about 20 miles northeast of Charlotte. Mall officials said the construction site was not part of the mall's property.

KSU families celebrate, meet other students

Stephen Bia, 10, (left) and Jae Hyun Kang, 10, jump inside an inflatable trampoline Saturday afternoon during the Jardine Terrace Apartments' Opening Olympics.

Eric Ballegu, 9, laughed with two others while jumping up and down in the moonwalk Saturday afternoon at Jardine Terrace Apartments' Opening Olympics.

"It's very fun," said his mother, Dayana Ballegu, a resident of the complex for about three years. "The kids love it. I like it."

Though it was the second year for this event, it was the first time for Ballegu and her three children to attend. The Olympics were sponsored by the apartment complex for the second year to provide its residents the opportunity to have some fun and meet new people, Monica Fouquet, Jardine assistant coordinator, said.

"It's to bring our community together. We have a lot of new members, and a lot that have been here for a couple of years, so it's a chance to let them meet and get to know each other," she said. "We have a really diverse population, and I think it will help them to get out and mingle with each other."

The two-hour event was the opening activity for the complex, providing games and snacks for the residents. They participated sack races, hula-hoop races, a water-balloon toss and a watermelon feed.

"We had a really good response last year. We had around 200 people turn out, so we thought that it was definitely something we should continue," Stephanie Bannister, Jardine coordinator, said.

Music filled the air as the residents lined up for free soda, popcorn and cotton candy. Prizes were given away to those who brought their Opening Olympics invitation. Bannister said the invitations helped build anticipation for the event.

"I think it's a good chance so we can get together," said Changjie Sun, graduate student in mechanical engineering and a resident for about one month. "It's very good, because it makes us feel at home."

Sun said he knew some of the residents before the event, but that it was giving him the chance to meet new people.

Besides giving the residents a chance to meet each other, it also helped promote Jardine programs.

Heesun Cheon, graduate student in drama and therapy, had the chance to give out information for her Arts and Drama program, which provides children and their mothers the opportunity to create art projects together.

"It's a really good chance to practice what I learn and love with the people here," she said.

Cheon will have three different sessions and hopes to get at least 10 people at each session.

Another program that took advantage of the event was Jardine's tutoring program, which gets the parents and children of the complex involved in the teaching of their children.

Cheon said though she was promoting her program, she also was enjoying the day as a Jardine resident.

"It's my first time participating in this type of activity, but I was excited and surprised," she said. "Everyone is participating in activities and looks like they're having fun."

Sororities end recruitment; 525 pledge

By NANCY HULL
Kansas State Collegian

Classes and activities around campus barely have begun, yet more than 500 women already have found a place to call home throughout their years at K-State.

Sorority recruitment week started Aug. 11. After five days of attending formal recruitment parties at sorority houses, 525 of the 566 women who started the week pledged a sorority. Most of K-State's 11 sororities each welcomed about 50 new members Wednesday morning.

Annie Tompkins, freshman in open-option and new member of Alpha Xi Delta, said although the week was emotionally draining, she's glad she went through it.

"It really helped me with meeting people. I talked to so many girls over a short time," Tompkins said. "My people skills definitely improved. I'm much better at forced t lk and can talk to anyone about anything."

Tompkins said the friends she made on her floor at Haymaker Hall were the highlight of her week.

"My rush floor had the greatest girls, and we all clicked immediately. We had so much fun, and I know we'll stay in touch," Tompkins said.

The rushees stayed in the residence halls in groups of about 25 with greek women who served as recruitment counselors during the week.

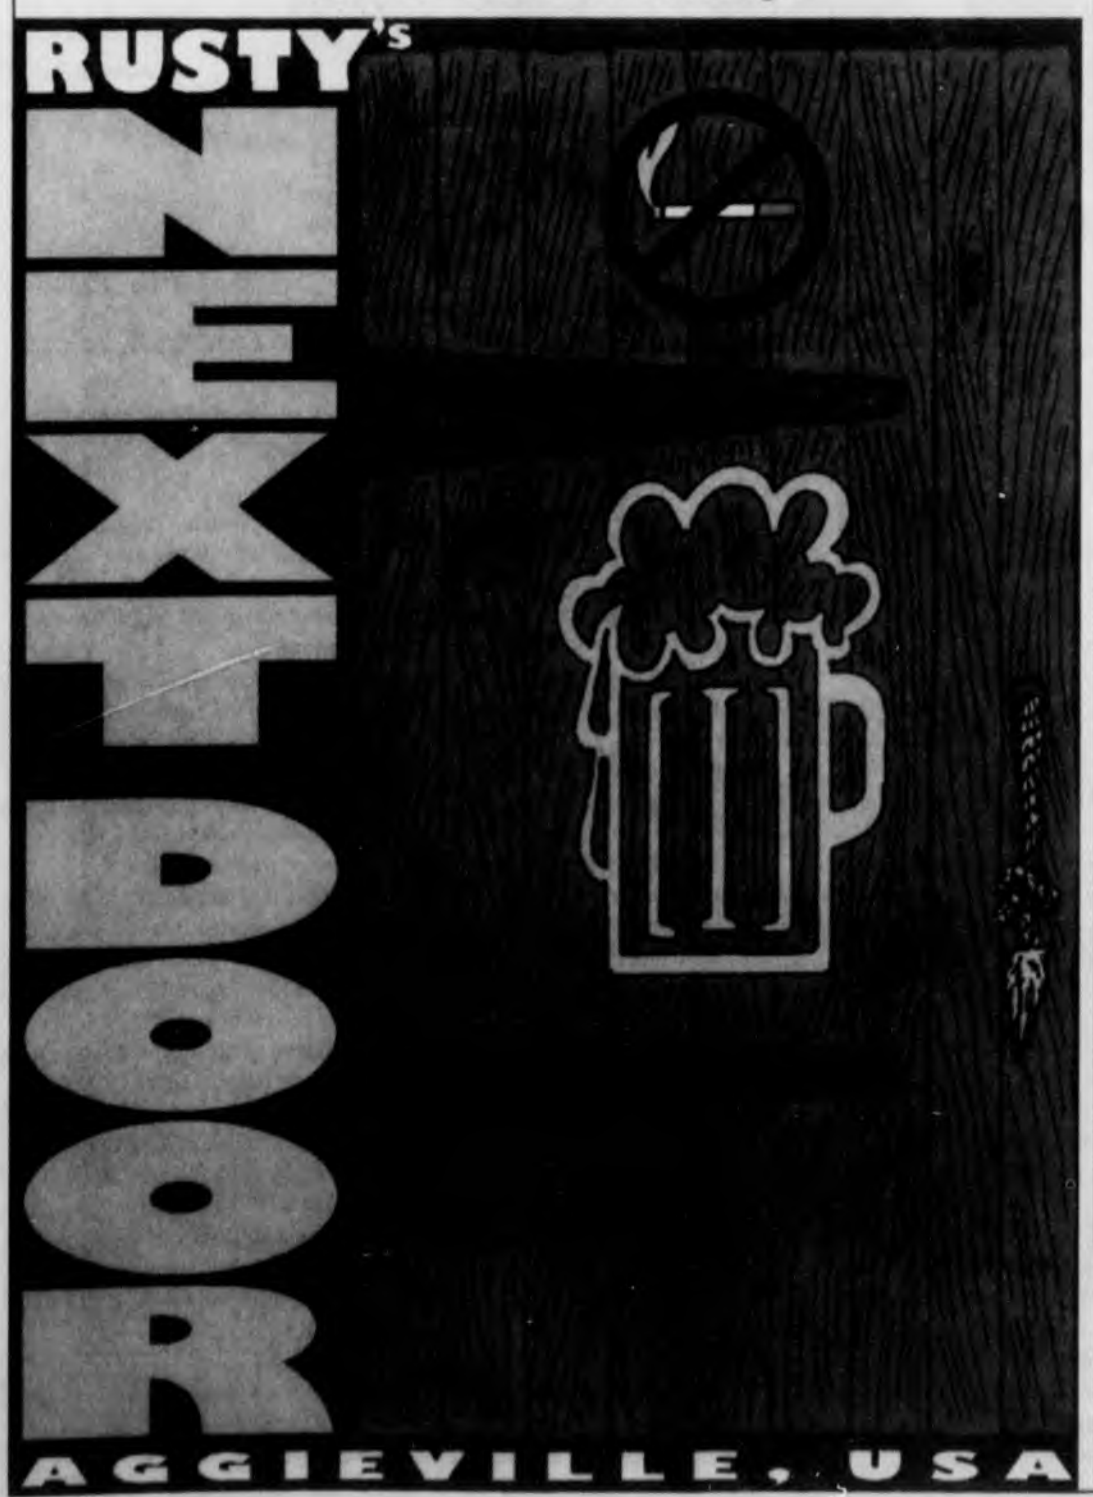
Kristina Bono, junior in marketing and international business and member of Kappa Kappa Gamma, said her role as a recruitment counselor was challenging.

"I was the person they looked up to, so I had to step up to help them and be the big one. After a hard day, I'd be there to cry or laugh with them," Bono said.

"I really had to help them when they were feeling down after not being asked back to a house or when they couldn't decide which houses to go back to," she said.

Bono said she thought recruitment week helped the rushees to become more independent.

"Having to be at a certain place at a certain time or catch a ride with a friend taught them a lot," Bono said. "I had a blast with the girls during the week. It's not as much stress as rushing girls. I'd love to do it again."



Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, said 60 more girls decided to rush compared to last year.

"Interest in sorority life continues to be strong, and freshman enrollment is up from last year," Robel said.

"The greatest benefit of rushing is to become part of a small support group that cares about its members and will be there to motivate and care during the years at K-State," Robel said. "Regardless of the outcome, they meet a lot of people and become acquainted with the campus."

New 1-way road causes chaos on KSU campus

Students, beware.

For those K-State veterans and the new additions to our university, be prepared. Not only will you face the normal challenges of a new school year, you, also will be faced with a driving test that is explained as being nothing short of ridiculous at best.

Mid Campus Drive not only is a partial one-way, as it has been in the past, but now is completely one way.

Mark Taussig, university landscape architect, said that until about five years ago, Mid Campus Drive was all one way. Taussig said the campus development subcommittee of transportation was the group that suggested changing it back to a one-way. He said there are five or six reasons why this is a good idea, and that there are only one or two negative aspects.

For now, it appears as if it's going to be more of a pain than anything.

The traffic coming north off Anderson Avenue must stay on the road unless drivers make the first left turn. Drivers going north on Mid Campus Drive no longer can turn left into the metered section of the K-State Student Union. After the $11.5 million budget for the Union's renovations, why make driving to the Union even less accessible than it already was? This is nothing more than driving in circles.

What is scary is the thought of students, professors and visitors forgetting the changes that have been made.

It also is a decision that is likely to cause even more traffic build-up, not only Mid Campus Drive, but also on the adjacent roads.

In the future, it might help to prevent accidents, but for now it will just be the result of chaos, confusion and congestion. Once again, this is a problem that is not being solved, just moved to a different location.

The Collegian's Campus Fourum is an anonymous call-in system that allows readers to voice their opinions on topics relevant to the publication.

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous, call-in opinion line. Students calling the Fourum will have 30 seconds to speak about issues on campus or in the news. The number is 395-4444.

Here are some tips for calling the Collegian's Campus Fourum:

• Keep your opinion based on issues, not personal vendettas.

• It might be helpful to write down your comments before calling. There only is time for about two or three short sentences.

• Give an original opinion. The Collegian will try to offer as many diverse opinions as possible, so be sure to put an interesting spin on your comments.

• Do not give too much background on the issue. Immediately state your stance or a plan of action.

• Be honest. We do not ask for your name, nor do we use Caller ID to see from whom the comments are coming. Your opinion is completely anonymous.

• The Collegian will not print any comments that are vulgar or obscene.

$20 million payoff for Cheney causes speculation among Democrats

TERRY L. WELCH

Dick Cheney recently was paid $20 million to settle his contract with Halliburton, the oil and construction company he once ran. His running mate, George W. Bush, told The Los Angeles Times that we shouldn't look askance at this large sum of money, that we should ask, "Does the board of directors know what they are doing? Are they expert? And let the experts make the decision as to what's fair."

While Democrats have taken the chance to ridicule Republican efforts to defeat minimum wage hikes, I, for one, am one Democrat who thinks the payment is justified. After all, Cheney has used his political clout on Halliburton's behalf for seven years, for which the company has raked in 50 times that amount in American tax dollars.

Note that, in his speech at the Republican National Convention, Cheney talked about how, after he left the position of secretary of defense, he went home to fish and spend time with his grandchildren. He took the time, as well, to take a few shots at President Clinton, saying the president's tenure was one of "squandered opportunities," and that, if Bush were elected, the Texas governor would restore "decency and integrity" to the office.

As Rob Walker pointed out in Slate magazine, one would think Cheney would be eager to mention his time as the chief executive officer of Halliburton as, under his management, the share price doubled. Walker bemoans the fact that Cheney was silent about his role as the head of Halliburton, because voters might want to know how Cheney's experience there would add to his qualifications as vice president.

He also seems puzzled by the fact that Cheney got the job at all.

"He managed to get the job with hardly any business experience," Walker writes, "apparently by impressing the firm's prior CEO during a fly-fishing trip."

I, on the other hand, am far from puzzled by the ease with which Cheney shifted into the position. One of the companies owned by Halliburton is a construction company known as Brown & Root, which has extensive contracts with the Department of Defense. The first contract between the DOD and Brown & Root, in which B&R agreed to build facilities for soldiers during Operation Restore Hope in Somalia, was finalized in August 1992, four months before Cheney left his defense secretary position and, according to the Associated Press, moved to Halliburton.

So let's draw a picture: Let's say he was fly-fishing when he "impressed" the former head of Halliburton. How might Cheney have impressed him? Never one to squander opportunities, he might have leaned over steelhead trout and hand-tied flies and said that, if he could have the CEO position, he would make sure B&R got hundreds of millions of dollars in contracts with the U.S. government.

Can I prove that this happened? No, but I don't have to. There is at least an appearance of wrongdoing, which, had Cheney been in the military rather than heading it, would have been illegal. In the U.S. military, when officers who have been in positions where they could influence contracts retire, there is a time limit, usually two years, during which they cannot seek employment with companies contracting with the military. This is not because all officers would use their positions unscrupulously, but because the Department of Defense wants to avoid even what it calls the "appearance of impropriety." Therefore, had Cheney been a service member rather than secretary, his actions not only would have looked bad, they would have been illegal.

Either way, who could blame Halliburton for taking him up on such an offer, if it was made? The contracts it has made with the DOD have gained the company profits nearing (if they haven't already exceeded) $1 billion. According to Scott Peterson, author of the fascinating "Me Against My Brother: At War in Somalia, Sudan and Rwanda," the profits Brown & Root made for building temporary shelters for service members in Somalia exceeded the total amount of monies used to rebuild Somalia's infrastructure. Each year, right now, the company gets $180 million for its efforts in the Balkans, and this is after it was blamed by the General Accounting Office in 1996 for being the main reason the the Bosnian mission was $327 million over budget.

Even the conservative Free Market Newsletter said the contract to B&R in Bosnia is simply a smokescreen for the dispensing of corporate welfare to politically connected businesses.

So it looks as if the former secretary of defense definitely earned his $20 million payoff. His hiring and employment certainly appears fishy, though, and, as I've already said, had Cheney been in any non-civilian position with the military, he could've been arrested. If it is true, it would mean Cheney made up for his lack of business experience by giving a corporation hundreds of millions of your tax dollars to hire him and then put $20 million in his pocket (not to mention $12.5 million in salary and $39 million in stock options) as a result.

In my eyes, it makes an unproven Arkansas real estate scheme and, yes, even illicit intern fellatio pale in comparison.

K-State upperclassman offers advice for incoming freshmen

TARYN FORT

I believe I might have had my first real epiphany of my young life this past week, and it is no less exciting than I am sure those lucky Democratic attendees hanging at Hugh Hefner's infamous Playboy mansion are experiencing as I write my first column for the semester (It's Democratic National Convention week!).

Epiphany, you say?

What in the hell is that, and what does it have to do with me having the opportunity to entertain readers of this publication that gets you through mindlessly boring classes required for graduation from this dear university, which wondrously (to me as well) awarded me a degree?

Well, I believe the definition of an epiphany is something close to a realization. A sudden, complete understanding. A reality check.

So, amid my summer Saturday afternoons spent at the poolside and recent awareness that it is possible for me to underestimate the deviousness of the male specimen, I thought that maybe, just maybe, I was not quite finished with what I am calling my pre-career job.

College.

For those of you freshman out there reading this as the first column of your first semester of school, I want to advise you on how to begin your career as a professional student.

Of course, there are those of you out there who will be out of here come time for grade distribution in December, but let's make that my No. 1 piece of advice to you as an upperclassman.

Get your grades. Get them, keep them and never let them go as long as you live here and financially support K-State.

This is a good school. There are good people here. There are vastly intelligent professors and graduate teaching assistants who are paid minuscule amounts of money to teach us day in and day out.

There is an opportunity for you to make or break yourself, and the easiest way to commit the latter is to flunk out. So go to that class that is as boring as "The Simpsons" would be if Homer had not ever been drawn up and take time to study a bit and make it to the test.

For God's sake, don't miss a final, no matter how much more fun it is to be at home parked on the couch in front of the tube while eating pizza.

I have taken a dip into the pool of reality, my dear people, and although I enjoy the power of writing and being a journalist more than anything in the world, it is extremely difficult to bring myself out of the mode of being a student when that is all I have been since age 4.

On my first real interview this past May, I took my news clippings in my backpack.

I do not own a briefcase, or even a leather satchel of sorts that would indicate some sort of professionalism.

But I will tell you that what I have learned here is the primary reason for me having the opportunity for a job and later the chance to accept it.

I have made my friends for life here at college.

I have had my heart broken and put back together.

I have had encounters, trysts, outings, becomings and crazy conversations on a beloved couch that probably cost $10.

So I guess where I am going with this in laymen's terms is to stick college out.

Stick out your head and open your mind to a completely new world that is sometimes terrifying and exhilarating at the same time. Let yourself evolve.

Stick it out, and don't be offended if nobody says hi to you on your first day out here, because you will meet those who are meant to be a part of your life soon enough.

So try not to forget class or studying, because that is the key to keeping your body in existence on this campus of colorful, unique people, despite the fact that at times there are going to be groups of females who look cloned purely because of their clothing.

I assure that this is going to pay off at some point, because it has for me, and I'm really not that much older or wiser.

People hurt you, and people are there for you, but in the end you will be an appreciative and strong person who took a chance by going to college.

Take those potato shooters and be a little crazy at football games and have your social jaunts. Mistakes are OK, too; just don't screw yourself out of an opportunity, because Disney World is a great memory, but college memories are untouchable.

Tennis recruit adjusts to Kansas

By BRYAN MURPHY
Kansas State Collegian

Steve Bietau, K-State's women's tennis head coach, has recruited players from across the Atlantic for many years.

Many Europeans have graced the hard courts at the L. P. Washburn Tennis Complex and dazzled local tennis fans with their skills and playing ability. This year, the tide has shifted back to North America, and the body of water to cross is not the size of an ocean. It is the Rio Grande, and the country from which this year's top women's tennis recruit hails is none other than Mexico.

Paulina Castillejos, freshman in management information systems, has had to do some serious adjusting. Moving from Puebla, Mexico, to Kansas was her primary change. In addition, most of the people living in the United States do not speak her native language of Spanish. But, as in many other things, she did not let any language barrier stand in her way as soon as she found out she was being recruited by Bietau.

"Her English is actually very strong, and that would probably have to be one of the most difficult transitions to make. But she has already done that, and she has been adjusting well so far," Bietau said.

Castillejos has a slightly different take on the language barrier.

"I learned English in school growing up and from my family, but it is still sometimes difficult to really express how you feel about things in English when you think in Spanish and try to translate," Castillejos said.

MICHAEL YOUNG/Collegian

Paulina Castillejos, freshman in management information systems, prepares for life at K-State after moving into West Hall last week. Castillejos was recruited from Puebla, Mexico, by Coach Steve Bietau for the tennis team.

Bietau said in the two times he has gone to Mexico to see Castillejos play, he has not noticed much of a cultural difference between Mexico and the United States.

"I don't think it will be as difficult for her to adapt to American culture as it has been for some of the European girls from the past," Bietau said. "A lot of it has to do with the fact that Mexico is so close to the United States."

Bietau said although he would have liked to recruit a player last semester, he was glad that Castillejos decided to come to K-State, in large part because she is so eager to learn, both on and off the tennis court.

"Her game doesn't have any big weaknesses. She is just a really solid tennis player," Bietau said.

Finally, there might be a problem with feeling welcome in a new country. Bietau said Castillejos seems to be happy, but it is hard to tell because she has only been in the United States for a week.

Castillejos said she is enjoying herself so far.

"I don't really miss home that much because I call there almost every day," Castillejos said. "Plus, I have found some other people from Mexico to become friends with. A lot of people seem to be willing to help me out, and that's really cool."

Castillejos said she knows she has a tough transition ahead, being in a new country with new people and starting out as a freshman in college.

"I'm here to train hard and to learn," Castillejos said. "I may have time for a social life later, but right now my focus is on school and tennis. I didn't come here so that I can sit and watch. I came to play."

Christie Horton, freshman in open-option, moves into Boyd Hall on Thursday afternoon after being accepted to Kappa Alpha Theta sorority.

Freshman kicks off college, sorority life

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

While other freshmen are frantically looking for their classes on campus, Christie Horton, freshman in open-option, can breathe a sigh of relief as she starts her first day at K-State.

Horton recently was accepted into the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority after Rush Week, Aug. 11-16.

"A sorority atmosphere is exactly what I was looking for to start college with," Horton said. "Now I have people that will be there to support me as a friend, and I also have instant study partners. These people can give me insight on classes, instructors and social activities because they have been there."

Horton said the process of meeting people began right away, and that it was a lot to take in at first.

"I had no idea what to expect that first night," Horton said. "All of the rushees were moved into a dorm, and then we immediately went to visit each house."

Horton said recruitment week was hectic for her, but her favorite part was skit day because she felt as though she was connecting with the members of the K-State greek system.

"I really enjoyed skit day," Horton said. "We started to become familiar with certain people and really got a feel for the sorority."

Horton said the last evening was stressful for her, but it also was an exciting time for all the women going through rush.

"The last evening was called 'pref night.' The idea was we should be comfortable in any of the three houses we accepted invitations from," Horton said. "Pref night was not what I expected. There were lots of ceremonies. The girls sang songs and showed us videos about their sorority. I really had a great time."

Horton said the end of recruitment was nerve-racking.

"The next morning, we received a bid card that said which house we were in," Horton said. "There was so many emotions, and we just had to say goodbye to the other girls, and then we were rushed off to our new house."

Horton said she did not receive her first choice, but was happy with the results.

"The house I was accepted into was not my first preference, but once I was in the house and involved with the other girls, I couldn't be happier," Horton said.

Mother begins journey toward college degree

By APRIL MIDDLETON
Kansas State Collegian

Kimberly Boyd is impelled to move up.

Boyd, freshman in business, has launched a personal journey in hopes of completing her final mission — earning her bachelor's degree.

Boyd is a married mother with three active children who works full-time as an accountant. She and her husband also have taken over the duties of youth directors at their church.

The most recent addition to an already near-full schedule for Boyd is college.

"I guess you could say I will be spreading myself thin, but that's what it will take," Boyd said.

Boyd's first day of class will be her first class since graduating from high school 15 years ago.

The experience is a hard one for her to describe. She said it will require rearranging home and work schedules. However, Boyd said she thinks she is prepared to embark in the adventure after tossing the idea around for almost five years.

As a single parent, Boyd said, going to college was impossible. Since marrying her husband and moving to Kansas three years ago, with a university nearby, she finally is prepared to make a personal decision to advance.

Boyd has worked in the accounting field since she was 17. She said she she wants more, which only could be achieved by continuing her education.

"In the accounting field, the only way I am going to advance is

Freshman student continues family tradition at K-State

By MICHELLE BERTUGLIA
Kansas State Collegian

It all began a few years ago when his brother brought home a limestone rock with the K-State logo on it from the Kansas State Fair. Craig Wanklyn, freshman in architectural engineering, said as he pulled out a scrapbook filled with pictures of rocks he had carved.

Ever since, Wanklyn has been carving intricate designs into limestone rocks for friends and family with the familiar K-State insignia on it. Wanklyn said it's a hobby of which he is proud. But now, he will begin carving something else: his place in the K-State community.

Wanklyn is from Lakin, a small town in the southwest corner of Kansas. There were 35 in Wanklyn's graduating class. Last Friday, he moved into Moore Hall with more than 500 other students.

The K-State tradition runs in the Wanklyn blood. His older brother, Kevin, is a senior in mechanical engineering. Purple already is a color of pride for him, with a K-State baseball cap and T-shirt. He said he came here because of the engineering program.

Getting a good education is a value that has been taught in the Wanklyn home. Mark Wanklyn, Craig's father, who is a farmer, said he believes there is little one can do in life without an education.

"If you don't get an education, you can see what will happen to you," he said. "Education is the key, and Craig will be successful."

Wanklyn graduated from high school with a 4.0 cumulative grade point average. He played basketball and golf, participated in band and the scholarship bowl and was a member of the National Honor Society. Wanklyn said his biggest fear is studying the wrong material for his first test.

He said he also is scared about being unprepared for the little things. Wanklyn said he prides himself on his organizational abilities.

"I like to keep things organized," he said. "I am a straight, neat, square person.

"There are lots of little things I am not sure about," he said. "I keep thinking what might happen, what's going to go wrong and how will I fix it."

But Wanklyn's older brother has full confidence in him and said he knows Craig will succeed this year.

"Craig doesn't simply attempt something — he dives in wholehearted," Kevin Wanklyn said. "He is tolerant yet focused, always knowing where he wants to go and getting there the way he needs to."

Wanklyn said he also was nervous about meeting his roommate, Paul Myers, junior in electronic journalism.

"At first, I was skeptical and had many thoughts, but honestly I didn't know what to expect," he said.

After a few hours of piddling around their third-floor room Friday, Myers and Wanklyn began the process of getting their room in order and became better acquainted. Confusion and a chaotic mess of their belongings filled the room as they talked about where to put each other's desks and how to set up their computer towers.

"I think we are going to get along fine," Myers said. "Always going grab-bag on a roommate makes you nervous, but I don't have a thing to worry about."

Myers said he thinks his age will be an advantage for Wanklyn. "I think it's cool that I can just help him out with whatever questions he may have about campus, Manhattan or whatever. That may be more to his advantage to live with someone who knows what is going on."

JUSTIN HAYWORTH/Collegian

Craig Wanklyn, freshman in pre-professional architectural engineering, talks to his brother on his cellular phone Friday afternoon between unloading boxes in his room in Moore Hall. Wanklyn is making the transition from the small rural Kansas town of Lakin to K-State life.

The rocks that Wanklyn carved line their window sill. Wanklyn said he likes to give them to friends and family as gifts. He said giving of himself is important to him.

"I don't think of myself as me — I am never centered around me, but instead around others," he said.

With carving out so much of himself for other people his whole life, Wanklyn said for the first time this semester he plans on taking it easy and just getting used to the transition of being in a bigger place. Wanklyn said he doesn't see himself changing too much.

His brother said he thinks Craig will change, but not too dramatically.

"He will set out his own path," he said. "He is now on a journey that has many roads to choose from."

Aggieville businesses welcome change

By SHAWN HEIN
Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan's most popular entertainment area for K-State students has undergone a few changes over the summer.

Safari Jack's Watering Hole has moved into Aggieville, taking the place of Lucky's Brewgrille. With everything from the tail of a airplane jutting out the building to the taxidermied animals lining the inner walls, Safari Jack's clearly gives a twist to the bar scene, co-owner Wade Phillips said.

The name Safari Jack's came from an Alabaman bar the other co-owner heard about, Phillips said.

"Jeff Mathis heard about a bar in Alabama called Dr. Jack's — Dr. Jack's Veterinary Taxidermy, and those two words were crossed out, and then it was just bar. We thought that was hilarious. And Dr. Jack's turned into Safari Jack's," Phillips said.

Safari Jack's features an old-fashioned movie projector and will screen movies on the outside deck Sunday through Tuesday nights. Phillips said he plans to show older movies.

"We want to show movies like 'Top Gun' and 'Animal House,'" he said. "Just kind of movies everybody likes."

Safari Jack's differences extend to its menu. The restaurant will serve appetizers and hamburgers, but will specialize in buffalo meat. Phillips said he hopes to add other unusual meats, such as rattlesnake and boar.

Phillips said Safari Jack's will try to be a diverse bar.

"A place where you can bring a date or an older couple in Manhattan could come and feel very comfortable until 10 o'clock," he said. "And then turn down the lights and let the kids tear the hell out of the place."

Anyone will be allowed into Safari Jack's until 10 p.m., after which time only patrons 21 years of age or older will be admitted.

Safari Jack's will feature the live band 96 Degrees on Wednesday.

Another addition to the Aggieville bar scene was the expansion of Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, which opened Rusty's Next Door. Next Door has the distinction of being the only non-smoking bar in Manhattan, and general manager Pete Anderson has seen no problems with this rule so far.

"It's gone over really well," he said, "pretty much like we expected."

Next Door shares the back porch of Chance for people who still feel the need to light up. The bar also has the same hours and nightly drink specials as Chance. Anderson said the similarities between the bars have helped Next Door.

"The place is big enough, especially with both bars, that we've been able to handle everything well," he said.

Expansion among owners also has hit the gourmet grocery business. Mark Skochdopole, owner of Java Expresso & Bakery, has opened up Mercado Grocery across the street from Java. The store features spices, coffee and imported foods. Skochdopole said he hopes the higher quality products will attract customers.

"People can come here and get stuff they can't get at Dillons," Skochdopole said.

The store also plans to have in-store promotions and samplings of products available Thursday through Saturday. Skochdopole said he eventually would like to add cooking classes to the menu. He said variety could be a bonus for the future of Mercado.

"We're trying to listen for what customers need," he said. "We are always looking for new things. We'll listen to suggestions."

Mercado will be open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday. The store is closed Sunday.

Also new to Aggieville this fall is Urban Design, which specializes in engraving and framing and features an art gallery. The opportunity for store owners Doug and Deborah Minner to open such a store is exciting, Doug Minner said.

"We wanted to expand on our careers and work for ourselves," he said. "We also wanted to bring art to people who wouldn't have had it before."

Urban Design's art gallery will feature local artists, and exhibits will show every six weeks. Doug Minner said this will be something new to Aggieville.

"This gives us a chance to add diversity to Aggieville," he said. "There hasn't been a gallery here before."

Safari Jack's Watering Hole replaced Lucky's Brewgrille in Aggieville over the summer. The bar features taxidermied animals inside, along with a menu that includes buffalo meat.

Local stores stocked for busy weekend

By SARAH BAHARI
Kansas State Collegian

TINA YODER/Collegian
Wal-Mart parking lot teems with cars Friday afternoon as students move into the residence halls.

Courtney Keith has been to Wal-Mart seven times in the past six days.

"I've needed to get school supplies, extension cords, snacks, a toothbrush," she said. "I just forget something every time."

Keith, freshman in English, is one of the more than 20,000 college students who have returned to Manhattan ready to begin the school year. Fortunately for those moving and returning, Manhattan has prepared for the August rush.

Wal-Mart manager Roy Hulett said the store has stocked up on popular items such as school supplies and residence hall room necessities.

"We try, based on historical sales, to build up on items students like to shop for," he said. "Things like stationery, housewares, electronics, as well as Kansas State apparel merchandise."

Hulett said frequently purchased items include storage crates, small refrigerators, desks and bookcases.

Wal-Mart also has moved more workers to the front of the store to help customers, Hulett said.

"We do everything we can to get them to the front of the store no matter when they come in," he said.

Varney's Book Store general manager Jon Levin said it too, has switched gears for the year.

It has put out new merchandise, trained workers and hired an extra 20-25 employees to help with crowds, he said.

The past weekend was one of the busiest in the year, Levin said. Business will slow back down by Sept. 1 and pick up again right after Labor Day weekend.

For those frustrated with crowds and long lines, Hulett said his only advice is to shop in the early morning when traffic is lowest.

Otherwise, people should just try to be patient with one another and enjoy the college-town atmosphere.

Keith, who moved into her Moore Hall room from California, said she liked her first weekend in town.

"It's really exciting," she said. "I like the big-campus feel."

Last fall, the Collegian changed printing locations to allow for daily color printing, and it will continue to be printed at the Salina Journal. A few weeks into the spring semester, the Salina Journal adopted the trend of a slightly smaller page size. The Collegian also made this transition, and, in an effort to accommodate the change, a redesign of the print edition can be seen this semester.

Things such as font styles, column spacing and graphic styles are some of the adjustments made as part of the redesign. Along with the print edition, the Electronic Collegian, now located at www.kstatecollegian.com, underwent a redesign.

Targets for the online redesign are concentrated on a snappier look for the site. The online redesign also is part of an effort by the staff to enhance online coverage. Through the semester, we hope to offer additional coverage in the form of audio and video clips. Readers can expect to find more polls about specific topics affecting K-State. The opportunity to chat with persons of interest might be available at a later time.

Many ideas have been generated on how to enhance online coverage, and we hope to develop these ideas as soon as possible. One option students may take advantage of is registering for an e-mail account through the eCollegian. By registering for e-mail, students also have access to an online planner.

At this point, many of the aforementioned items are a vision and will require much more work and communication to develop. Students already have spent hours of time working on this project, and hopefully will be able to move forward with this upgrade.

Now in its 105th year of publication, the Collegian hopes to continue providing great K-State coverage. Our primary audience is the students and faculty of the university, so comments and suggestions for improvement are always taken into consideration.

Reed is a senior in print journalism. You can e-mail him at rdunn@collegianmail.com.

Rescue efforts for submariners continue despite failing hope

By JIM HEINTZ
The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Norwegian divers struggled to open the escape hatch on a nuclear submarine that sank with 118 men aboard, but they found no sign of life Sunday as Russian officials said most of the vessel was flooded in minutes when it went down.

Officials from the Russian navy have all but ruled out hope that any of the crew remains alive nine days after the Kursk sank, crippled by a massive explosion.

President Vladimir Putin, widely criticized for his slow and low-key public response to the crisis, pledged Sunday that "until the last minute, we will do everything to save everyone who could be saved."

But he did not appear optimistic. "Regrettably, sometimes it's not us but circumstances which determine how the situation develops," he said.

The divers worked for most of the day and well into the night. They tried several times to wrest the hatch open with a crane but failed, Russia's RTR television network reported.

The divers found signs that some of the 118 crewmen might have tried to get out but were unable to open the escape hatch, Deputy Prime Minister Ilya Klebanov said on RTR. In a grim indication of what rescuers are likely to find when they get into the Kursk, Klebanov said there might be a body in the escape chamber.

The divers, working 350 feet below the surface of the Barents Sea, were moving slowly because of the depth. Each dive was taking several hours, navy officials said.

Speaking from the command ship directing rescue operations, Klebanov said the divers might have to go to a navy base to determine whether their bulky diving suits could safely pass through the escape hatch if it is opened. That would cause a further delay.

No decision had been made on whether a British mini-submarine that arrived Saturday would be used in the rescue operation. Klebanov said the escape hatch was so badly damaged that it was unlikely the British vessel could latch on.

"The British submarine is similar to ours, so we believe that it will be unable to dock either," he said.

Conflicting signals emerged from the three-nation rescue operation. Russian officials have said for days that the escape hatch is severely mangled, but a spokesman for the Norwegian military said Sunday it was in good shape.

"We confirm that the hatch is intact," Capt. Erland Raanes told The Associated Press by telephone. The hatch is "so good that there are possibilities there."

But he said later that an unspecified pressure problem was making it difficult to open the hatch.

New details emerged Sunday of how severely the Kursk was shattered in the first few minutes.

For days, the Russian navy had insisted the submarine was in good condition.

"Water almost instantly flooded the submarine's hull up to the fifth or sixth compartments. The crew in those sections died almost instantaneously uncontrollable and the submarine became ," Klebanov said.

McCain begins recovery following cancer surgery, eager to return to campaign

By ALISA BLACKWOOD
The Associated Press

PHOENIX — If John McCain could have his way, he'd blaze through his recovery from skin cancer surgery and return to campaigning for the Republican Party as soon as possible.

"Obviously, Senator McCain would like to get back to the campaign trail tomorrow, but it depends on his recovery time," McCain spokeswoman Nancy Ives said Sunday.

The Arizona senator was expected to remain at the Mayo Clinic Hospital through today or Tuesday while recovering from Saturday's surgery to remove two melanomas from his left temple and left arm, said a statement released from McCain's office. Melanoma is the most serious form of skin cancer.

Preliminary findings showed that the cancer has not spread to McCain's lymph nodes, and that all melanoma was removed during the surgery, said McCain's internist, Dr. John Eckstein. It would take several days to fully evaluate test results from the removed tissue, but McCain's doctors were optimistic about his future, he said.

McCain was eating normally Sunday and was experiencing little discomfort. McCain also was visiting with his staff both in person and by phone and was receiving news updates and discussing usual Senate business.

A small amount of blood was removed Saturday night from the corner of the incision in McCain's left temple, the doctors' statement said. There has been no further accumulation of blood in the wound since.

Varney's expansion into neighboring theater nearing completion

By BRYAN SCRIBNER
Kansas State Collegian

Among the more than 11 businesses that once existed at the corner of North Manhattan and Anderson avenues, Varney's Book Store is the sole survivor.

Varney's has been in Aggieville since 1908. It is expanding into the space that once housed the Campus Theatre.

"It's a fairly extensive renovation," Jon Levin, general manager, said. "I hope we'll have more display to increase our sales, and our customers will find it more efficient to shop with us."

The theater closed in summer of 1998, and Varney's purchased the space that December. Construction began in April 1999.

"What we really wanted to expand was our square footage for display merchandise," Levin said.

The expansion will enhance the store's interior and will have no resemblance to the theater, Levin said. Its exterior, though, still will feature a movie theater theme.

Mel Shultz, who has worked at Varney's for seven years, said she misses the theater, but is excited about the move.

"It's a very invigorating color scheme. It livens up Aggieville," she said. "The overwhelming feeling is we're a family building onto our house."

"We've been so cramped for so long. It's a large expansion, which K-State fans can look forward to."

Mel Shultz, employee

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said this expansion will add to Aggieville's appearance.

"Anytime you have an expansion of that magnitude, it's going to look 40 times better than an empty building," Sieben said. "It's going to be a great addition."

The existing store will be revamped with a new color scheme and layout. Levin said fine stationery and accessories will be the first new products available in the new location.

Additional merchandise will become available based on the needs of the public, Levin said. The current focus is on increasing the store's space.

"We hope we can make a better presentation," he said. "There could be additions of products we didn't have before.

"I just hope our customers enjoy what we're doing."

Construction is set to be completed in early October.

Shultz said they hope the expansion will attract younger customers, not only K-State students. This will be accomplished by the relocation and addition of the university's merchandise.

She also said that because of overcrowding during home football games, patrons will appreciate the change.

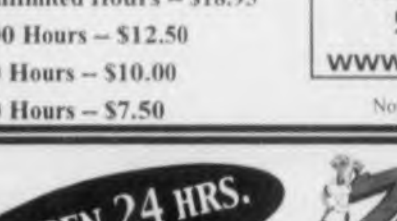
"We've been so cramped for so long," she said. "It's a large expansion, which K-State fans can look forward to."

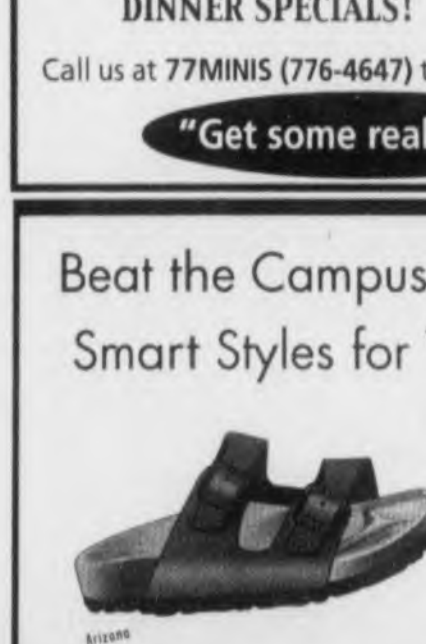
Since it moved into its current location in 1916, the building has undergone about seven remodeling or expansion efforts. Levin said the store has remained successful due to its employees.

"We're fortunate to have people working with us that think that customer service is important," he said. "Hopefully, we do take care of our customers the way we think it should be done and the way they think it should."

Varney's has three primary locations in Manhattan, and it also has children's bookstores in Topeka and Lawrence. Levin said no additional expansion plans exist, but the business will continue to change with the market.

"We'll take advantage of opportunities as they come around," he said. "I think we work hard to try and do the right things."





BHS Construction workers Wayne Davies, Leonardville, Kan., and Homer Smith, Manhattan, place glue on slat wall Thursday at Varney's Book Store. The store's expansion is expected to be done in early October.

Worcester balances costs of education with college experience

JAKE WORCESTER

Do you ever wonder where it all goes?

The money, I mean.

I just wrote my ninth tuition check to K-State — the beginning of my fifth year. At the time of the release of those hard-earned summer funds, the pain is evident.

We write checks. We apply for loans. We make sacrifices.

But mixed with the impoverished feelings that hamper us in mid-August are other emotions: excitement, expectation and maybe a little apprehension.

It's true that our tuition and fees pay for the cost of our education, finance technology and provide the other services we use every day.

But in addition to reference materials and the chance to receive a college degree, our tuition checks provide us with an even greater return: a chance to be part of the K-State experience.

Long Saturday afternoons of tailgating at KSU Stadium. The chance to learn from faculty who give students personal attention. Hometown atmosphere. A sense of belonging.

These are the experiences that Dana Pracht and I, as student body president and vice president, are dedicated to maintaining. We are willing to work closely with university administrators to maintain the quality education that K-State students receive.

Sometimes, maintaining this experience requires questioning decisions or proposing changes. We are prepared to provide strong leadership for students, find proactive solutions and make tough decisions when necessary.

Those tough decisions often involve your pocketbook. As the cost of our education continues to increase, we should expect more for our money.

Our challenge in the next year is to find the delicate balance of quality and affordability.

That challenge is presented in several ways. We will fight unreasonable tuition increases, work to increase state support for higher education and continue to search for ways to make better use of our campus resources.

But we, as students, also will be asked to make tougher decisions. Should we increase the cost of our education to provide new services or improve existing ones?

That question will arise, and there is no right answer. Our task as student leaders is to present the options, seek your input and listen. We promise to do just that.

Our campaign priorities were to improve academic quality, technological advancement and student life.

Those are broad goals, but they share a common purpose. We love our university, but we can do better.

Improving academic advising universitywide and exploring ways to evaluate instructors' effectiveness immediately will effect the academic experience of each K-State student.

Providing access to better technology and finding more ways to serve students through KATS will provide students with convenience.

Finding new ways to bring together students with different backgrounds and viewpoints will produce innovative results and expand the horizons of the entire university.

Dana and I are students, too — sitting next to you in class, sharing campus sidewalks and living down the street. We'll work to improve our classrooms, campus and community, and to make the K-State experience an incredible one for students today and in the years to come.

Jake is student body president and a senior in agricultural economics. You can e-mail him at jdw3018@ksu.edu.

walked around, exploring Manhattan's night scene. Everyone they met, he said, was friendly.

"It seemed like people were laid back, having a good time. It seems like it's going to be fun," Yaege said.

Yaege said there was one disadvantage to being an out-of-state student: missing the summer session of freshman orientation.

"If you're from a long way away and don't want to pay the extra airfare, you end up with the short end of the stick," Yaege said.

Because he didn't come to the summer session, he wasn't able to enroll until he arrived in Manhattan. He was able, though, to enroll in all the classes he needed.

"The only inconvenience I've had is timing, and it looks like that should work itself out," he said.

His roommate, Bradley Carpenter, freshman in computer science, said when he first met Yaege, he thought it was strange since he wasn't from Kansas. Now, after getting to know him a little better, he thinks it will add to the fun.

"It will probably be more exciting because we can talk about our different states," he said.

While he won't miss the weather, there is one thing Yaege said he would miss the most.

"I miss the waterbed, but this will do," he said, patting his new bed.

Yaege said on the whole, being from out-of-state, especially from Alaska, is an advantage.

"I think it makes it more of an adventure," he said. "I'm glad to be something different."

to get that degree," Boyd said.

Her goal is to attain her bachelor's degree and go on to become a certified public accountant.

"I want to get through my schooling and continue working with a CPA firm and move up as fast as I can," Boyd said.

She said it might be a long process, as she is starting as a part-time student this semester.

Because it's a new experience for her, Boyd said she has worries about her first semester. Her excitement, however, outweighs the worries.

"It's so hard now that I'm getting started, not to want to just take all the classes and get it done faster," Boyd said.

With her schedule, it isn't possible.

Nancy Bolsen, director of Adult Student Services, said non-traditional students such as Boyd have tight schedules, and finding a balance is one of their greatest obstacles.

"There are so many things that make the college experience different for the older students," Bolsen said. "I think the biggest is the job of balancing family, work and education."

BOYD

Bolsen said another obstacle for older students is gaining the confidence to do the schoolwork. It's an obstacle Boyd understands.

"I am worried, mostly about studying," Boyd said. "I know it will be harder than when I was in school before. It's just been such a long time."

Her husband has helped to encourage her, she said. When she worries about school and the schedule, Boyd's husband is the first to tell her she will do great and that everything will work out fine.

Boyd said her three children think the idea of their mother going to school is cool. However, Boyd said having her children watch her as she restarts her education is an added pressure.

"I have to be a good influence on them," Boyd said. "I tell them that if I can do everything I do and keep my grades up, then I expect their grades to be good, too."

Although Boyd said she realizes the journey might be long and not quite so painless, the deeper realization is she is moving in the right direction — up.

Horton's "big sister," Sarah Dohrmann, sophomore in industrial engineering, said Horton fits right in with the sorority.

"We pride ourselves in looking for girls who are intelligent, participate in community service, are active in school and who also are fun to be around," Dohrmann said. "Horton is a perfect example. She fit in right away."

Now that Horton is accepted, she is required to attend a six-week orientation class that will introduce her to the sorority, and she is expected to participate in chapter meetings and activities.

She said recruitment was a great way for her to begin the K-State experience.

"I am really excited about the year," Horton said. "I am definitely glad I decided to participate in rush week. It gave me a chance to get involved right away and it gave me an instant support group. I have found a place on campus that I feel comfortable."

TICKETS

"The congestion can be a problem with the reserved tickets, but that's why we're making them available a day early," Adolph said. "Students with general admission tickets do not need to be concerned with getting their tickets early because their seats are not reserved and the tickets will be held until Sept. 1 anyway."

Kevin Knox, sophomore in human ecology, said he agrees with Adolph.

"If they're going to be available for pick-up for a while, I can get the tickets whenever my schedule permits," Knox said.

Although many people pick up tickets in the first couple of days of distribution, it doesn't bother some students.

"Although it may be rough because we can only get them starting the first day of classes, I really wouldn't mind standing in line. It's not that big of a deal," Rob Reynolds, senior in business management, said.

PROPERTY

out of it," he said.

Trustee Don Thompson said another reason for the slow approach is because there's no need to hurry.

"We don't need a revenue-producing source. We don't need extra space," he said. "Nothing is requiring us to act quickly."

The July 25 fire displaced 21 residents from the low-income housing complex.

The fire began after fumes from a gas stove ignited in a window air conditioner, causing an explosion. There were no fatalities or serious injuries.

Manhattan Mayor Karen McCulloh said the Manhattan City Commission has sent a letter to the church members, urging them to develop more low-income housing.

"We hope the city will replace the housing that was lost," she said. "We need some low-income housing down there."

McCulloh said the commission has not discussed making an offer for the land, and she doesn't know if the city could afford to buy the land if the church decided to sell.

Despite some speculation of a parking facility, McCulloh said she doesn't think it's the best solution. The need for housing is more important than the need for extra parking spaces, she said.

ONE WAY

she used Mid Campus Drive on her way to work at the Union.

"I live on Manhattan Avenue, but I can't get here that way anymore," Mann said.

Some said the road, which consisted of two-way traffic, a bike lane and three crosswalks, was too crowded.

"It is easier to detour vehicular traffic than pedestrians and bikes," Mark Taussig, university landscape architect, said.

John Moberg, senior in architectural engineering, said making the street one-way is a positive decision. "I didn't think originally that it was wide enough for two lanes, especially with the bike lane," he said.

Because the street now is one lane, drivers can't pass on the road, and the traffic will be lined in a single-file manner.

To make the change known to drivers, one-way street signs were put up, the yellow tape was removed from the road, and a barricade with a 'Do Not Enter' sign was set up south of Anderson Hall.

"There are flashing lights there, so it should make it easier at nighttime," Taussig said. "Extraordinary measures have been taken to make it visible."

There are many of reasons why the road was changed. Mid Campus Drive was a one-way street prior to 1994. The construction of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art caused the road between the Union and Anderson Hall to become a two-way street, which is how it remained until now.

"We're really just changing it back," Taussig said.

Last November , Megan Richeson, junior in public relations, was struck by a vehicle in that location as she crossed the two-way street on foot.

"The accident instigated re-evaluating the situation," Taussig said.

Richeson said the driver might not have been paying attention after he dropped off or picked up a passenger.

"Anything they do to reduce the traffic is a step in the right direction," Richeson said.

GEARING UP

K-State football team prepares for 2000 season

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

If national rankings and success coincide, the Wildcat football team should have an extraordinary season.

Following an 11-1 record capped by a 24-20 victory over Washington in the 1999 Culligan Holiday Bowl, K-State expected to fare well in the 2000 preseason polls.

It did just that.

The Cats placed eighth in the Associated Press Top 25, released Aug. 5, and claimed ninth in the USA Today/ESPN/Coaches poll, released Aug. 10.

K-State is one of five schools in the Big 12 Conference receiving Top 25 recognition. Nebraska topped the chart in both polls, while Texas narrowly edged the Cats, picked seventh by the AP and eighth by the coaches.

Oklahoma sits at 19th and 20th in the polls, and Colorado rounds out the list at No. 24 in the AP tally.

Texas A&M just missed a Top 25 appearance, falling six points short of Michigan State for the 25th slot in the AP poll. Texas Tech also received votes.

K-State's national ranking to start the 2000 season continues several streaks for the squad.

The Cats have been ranked among the nation's Top 25 in the AP or the USA Today/ESPN/Coaches poll for 85 consecutive poll weeks, dating back to Sept. 3, 1995, the second-longest active streak in the Big 12, trailing only Nebraska at 309 weeks.

K-State also has been ranked in the Top 10 of both polls for 10 consecutive poll weeks. The Cats' complete poll history is available on the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics' official Web site, www.k-statesports.com.

Aside from K-State's success in the polls, Cat fans are looking ahead to the team's Aug. 26 matchup with Iowa at Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City, Mo.

"If I were a fan and were going to go to Kansas City and spend a full weekend instead of coming to Manhattan for a day, I'd be tempted to go in Thursday and treat it like you do when they have the Big 12 Basketball Tournament down there. I even enjoy that," head coach Bill Snyder said at the K-State Football Media Day on Aug. 4.

"I would think that our fans deserve to enjoy that and stay through Sunday. I can see viewing it that way."

However, Snyder said the team's season opener with the Hawkeyes is going to be business as usual for the Cats, one his team shouldn't see as an additional bowl game.

"I don't think, as a coach or as players, we don't view it in any other form other than it is the first game of the season for us," Snyder said. "It's going to be treated that way and is a stepping stone to whatever would follow in terms of our season.

"What happens after a bowl game? Everybody goes their separate ways for three or four weeks, and if we do that, we have some real issues to deal with."

USC added to K-State football schedule

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

K-State football will meet the University of Southern California for the first time ever in a home-and-home series beginning in 2001, the schools announced Friday.

The Wildcats will travel to The Coliseum in Los Angeles to face the Trojans on Sept. 8, 2001, followed by a rematch between the two schools in Manhattan in either 2002 or 2003. A final date for K-State's home game will be set next spring.

In the past decade, the Cats have been one of the most successful college football teams in the nation, achieving three straight 11-1 seasons and seven consecutive bowl appearances.

Meanwhile, USC posts a history of football success, winning eight national championships and making 25 bowl appearances to date.

Volleyball preseason ranking highest in K-State history

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

If the rest of the Big 12 Conference expects a weakened K-State volleyball team with the loss of All-American Dawn Cady, it could be surprised.

The post-Cady era has begun at K-State, and expectations for the team are higher than ever.

The Cats are ranked 17th in the AVCA/USA Today Preseason Top 25 Poll and 20th by Volleyball Magazine, the team's highest preseason ranking ever, and have their sights set on a Big 12 Championship — all without the presence of Cady.

"I don't know if we can replace Dawn," head coach Jim McLaughlin said. "But I also like the percentages and the balance of the attack. We're playing 30 feet now instead of playing 15."

As often is the case when one player graduates, another elevates her game to fill the void. In this event, that player is junior outside hitter Liz Wegner.

A Big 12 all-conference selection last year, Wegner has improved her game further during the preseason, McLaughlin said.

"Liz has developed her eyes a little bit more," McLaughlin said. "She sees the game better and she's responding better — she's a more efficient hitter. Last year she hit about 13 percent. We're hoping to get her above 20 percent this year."

If Wegner should increase her hitting percentage to more than 20 percent, she would make a strong bid toward being named an All-American. However, the Cats must win before individuals will get recognized.

"Winning the national championship motivates me a lot more," Wegner said. "Every time I step on the floor, I think how we want to get that national championship before I leave."

Should K-State live up to the expectations, it's inevitable that the All-American halo will descend onto at least one K-State player. And the player who's received the most attention to date is junior Disney Bronnenberg.

However, the highest expectations for the Cats' setter and the whole team are her own.

"I am expecting to be an All-American," Bronnenberg said. "I'm expecting to lead this team. Whether I turn out to be All-American is for other people to decide. I've just got to do my job."

All-American titles and national championships might seem like lofty goals, but they're not unrealistic for this team. Even during preseason workouts, there's a feeling that this team will be better than last year, a team that advanced to the second round of the NCAA Tournament, senior middle blocker Kellie Branting said.

"I think that we're further along at this point in the season than we were last year," Branting said. "I think we have great chemistry. I think we have great athleticism and talent. If those things keep coming along like they will, I think we'll have a very successful season."

Bronnenberg said she agreed that this year's team is better in areas than last year.

"We're far more aggressive than we were last year. We have hitters going after it every single day," Bronnenberg said. "I think there's just more of a culture in the gym where we're working hard every single day. We don't really have the off minutes that you would see more likely last year."

However, the team is not yet where it needs to be, McLaughlin said. Furthermore, the Cats will face tests early in the season.

Action will begin Sept. 1 at the Washington State Cougar Challenge Tournament, which features a competitive bracket, and will continue four days later at Brigham Young.

To be ready in time, the team will have to work hard and keep improving, McLaughlin said. And to do so, several leaders, especially Bronnenberg, Branting and Wegner, will have to step up.

"We have a leadership meeting scheduled for next Tuesday," McLaughlin said. "I see people wanting to take charge. You've got to do the right thing, and people will follow. It's a combination of court presence and the ability to play the game at a high level."

While there is room for improvement, McLaughlin said he doesn't doubt the team will gel and reach its goals.

"This team, at some point, is going to develop an identity," McLaughlin said. "We'll see how much they want it. So far, we show like we have a lot of heart."

Baseball team recruits 13 to round out Cats' needs

By SAM STIERS
Kansas State Collegian

It's been a busy and productive summer for K-State's baseball program.

The Cats were able to add major league prospects and depth to a team that finished last in the Big 12 Conference. Head coach Mike Clark has signed six community-college players and seven high school graduates to national letters of intent. Clark said he expects all 13 players to compete for playing time this spring.

K-State finished 19-32 last season, and Clark said the team's biggest need was pitching. The Cats got several heavily recruited prospects to bolster a pitching staff that posted a conference-worst 6.89 team ERA in 2000.

"Any of the pitchers we got could help us right away," Clark said. "They all have good arms — they just lack Division I experience."

The most touted recruit of the class is pitcher Garrett Patterson from McAlester, Okla. Patterson was drafted in the 11th round of this year's Major League Baseball amateur draft by the Anaheim Angels.

"Everyone in the country wants Garrett Patterson," Clark said. "We're very excited about signing him."

Patterson is a left-handed pitcher who helped his high school win its state tournament last year.

Other notable recruits for the Cats include shortstop Ty Soto (Bakersfield, Calif.), drafted in the 42nd round by St. Louis, and Eric Rollins (Ada, Okla.), drafted 37th by Boston. K-State also signed middle infielder Osmar Castillo from Valencia, Venezuela. Clark said Castillo, who signed out of Dodge City Community College, could have a big role in the upcoming season.

"(Castillo) is an excellent defensive infielder and has the opportunity to help us immediately," Clark said.

Clark said the improvements to Frank Myers Field and a challenging schedule helped persuade players to sign with K-State.

"The new stadium put us on a level playing field with other Division I schools," Clark said. "We've had the same caliber of talent come to visit us in the past, but they took a look at our facilities and went somewhere else.

"We're going to have the toughest schedule in the country this year. These kids want to play against the best."

"Any of the pitchers we got could help us right away," Clark said. "They all have good arms – they just lack Division I experience."

Another big addition to the team is pitcher Jared Brite. Brite also will play football for K-State and is not counted as one of the 13 players signed by the Cats, as he will not receive a baseball scholarship. Brite was drafted in the 41st round by the Florida Marlins.

"This has the potential to be a great class," Clark said. "It's awfully nice to have this kind of talent. This year is going to be a lot of fun to watch. We're going to have some good battles for most of our positions."

The other nine players signed by the Cats are Zane Weaver (Ardmore, Okla.), Brad Anzman (Englewood, Colo.), James Brazeal (Shawnee, Kan.), Justin Dehmer (Phoenix, Ariz.), Tyson Helsel (St. Joseph, Mo.), Curtis Murdock (Spring Hill, Kan.), Ricky Rooks (Augusta, Ga.), Nick Sorensen (Salt Lake City) and Wes Vrska (Claremore, Okla.).

SPORTS BRIEFS

Women's basketball

Two Wildcats were named Arthur Ashe Jr. Sports Scholars on Wednesday.

Senior guard Marshela Webb and junior guard Dee DeShay were among 57 women's basketball student athletes selected nationwide, and were the only representatives from the Big 12 Conference.

The Arthur Ashe Jr. Sports Scholars Award, established in 1993, recognizes minority male and female student athletes who maintain at least a 3.2 cumulative grade point average.

Women's rowing

Head coach Jenny Hale was seeing double June 23 when she signed her seventh and eighth recruits to the Wildcat rowing squad. However, it wasn't her vision causing the apparent abnormality.

Hale inked Jennifer and Jane Smedley, twin sisters from Mathews, Va., to join K-State crew this fall.

"We are tremendously excited to have these two young women on our team this fall," Hale said. "We had to work hard to get them here, but I think it will be worth it in the long run.

"They have never had a losing season in all of their time as junior rowers, and we are looking for them to translate their intimate knowledge of the stroke and what it takes to be a great rower into coxswaining our team."

The Smedley twins join Samantha Allen, Kathryn Baxter, Rachel Daily, Ingrid Shwaiko, Lara Schroch and Lori Holcomb in the Wildcats' 2000-01 recruiting class.

Big 12 Honor Roll

Thirty K-State track athletes and six women's tennis players were named to the Big 12 Commissioner's Honor Roll released by the conference June 22. The Big 12 set a new record, with 2,262 student athletes recognized.

Wildcat tennis players acknowledged include Kathy Chuda, Natalia Farmer, Alena Jecminkova, Vesselina Jeliazkova, Eva Novotna' and Petra Sedlmajerova.

Women's track notched 16 members, including Erin Anderson, Amanda Crouse, Terresha DeRossett, Rebekah Green, Nicole Grose, Laura Hyde, Megan Loger, Leslie Mikos, Aubree Moore, Amy Mortimer, Mandi Peterson, Anna Sandbacka, Jamie Thurman, Sarah Tilling, Annie Wetterhus and Carmen Wright.

Men's track members honored were Michael Beachler, Martin Boos, Orion Carrington, Jim Gruenbacher, Josef Karas, Josh Mohr, Dieter Myers, Istvan Nagy, Todd Petersen, Jason Reid, Dustin Schmidt, Tamel Sisney, Adam Walker and Thomas Weiler.

Women's tennis

Head coach Steve Bietau, last season's Big 12 Coach of the Year, continued his pattern of signing international athletes in the off-season as he inked Natalia Boyko on Aug. 11.

Boyko, of Kyiv, Ukraine, signed a national letter of intent to play tennis this fall for K-State, a team that finished last spring ranked No. 4 in the Central Region by the Intercollegiate Tennis Association after posting its best season since 1990.

"We are excited to have Natalia join our program," Bietau said. "She has been one of the top junior players in the Ukraine for the past several years and has been able to play against a lot of top players. Natalia will add depth to our lineup, and I think she will contribute right away."

Boyko joins Paulina Castellejos, of Pueblo, Mexico, in the Cats' 2000-01 recruiting class.

Ford recommends lower air pressure in Firestone tires for Explorers, trucks

Associated Press

DETROIT — Ford Motor Co. recommended inflating Firestone tires on Explorers to less than maximum levels to reduce the risk of rollovers during sudden turns, newspapers reported Sunday.

The 15-inch tires used on the sport utility vehicles have been the focus of a recall of 6.5 million tires by Bridgestone/Firestone Inc.

The recall has focused scrutiny primarily on the sometimes catastrophic failure of tires that were under-inflated. When a tire's pressure is low, more of its sidewall is in contact with the road, which can lead to the tire cracking or peeling.

An October 1989 internal Ford document cited by The New York Times and the Washington Post showed the Explorer failed safety tests when equipped with tires inflated to 35 pounds per square inch. But subsequent tests found it did not have that stability problem when the tires were inflated to 26 psi. Ford has recommended since the Explorer went on sale in 1990 that the tires be filled to the 26 psi level.

Since the recall began, however, Bridgestone/Firestone has urged consumers to fill 15-inch tires on Explorers to 30 pounds psi, and Ford recently said that a range of 26 to 30 psi was acceptable.

Ford representatives did not immediately return calls for comment Sunday. Ford executives have indicated they are investigating whether the company's tire pressure recommendation could have been a contributing factor to problems with the tires.

Tom Baughman, Ford's engineering director for North American trucks, told the Times that tire damage is rare unless a tire is operated at less than 20 psi.

"My understanding is that Bridgestone/Firestone and Ford have agreed that 30 is the most agreeable level to inflate the tires," said Ken Fields, a spokesman for the tire manufacturer.

Fields said the recommended tire pressure is set by the automaker, not the tire company.

"When you increase the tire pressure, you increase the chance for a rollover. When you decrease the tire pressure, you increase the temperature and cause other problems for the tire. It's really a no-win situation," said Sean Kane, of Arlington, Va.-based research firm Strategic Safety, a research firm looking into product liability claims across the country dealing with Ford Explorers.

Bridgestone/Firestone's recall involves 6.5 million P235/75R15 size radial ATX and ATX II brands, as well as Wilderness AT tires of the same size made in Decatur, Ill.

The tires, mostly on Ford trucks and SUVs, are under government scrutiny in 62 deaths and at least 100 injuries. In many cases, the tread separated from the tire, causing blowouts and rollovers.

Rae Tyson, a spokesman for the National Highway Transportation Safety Administration, said inflation is one factor investigators are looking at as they try to determine the cause of the tire failures.

"We are looking at everything that, number one, would explain what's going on, and number two, define the extent of the safety problem if there is one," Tyson said. "Obviously, inflation is one of the things we're going to look at."

Storm gains strength

By ADRIAN SAINZ
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI — Tropical Storm Debby formed Sunday in the western Atlantic, gathering strength gradually as it moved toward the U.S. Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico.

The storm could become a hurricane by Tuesday afternoon, said Krissy Williams, a meteorologist at the National Hurricane Center in Miami.

"It's not intensifying as rapidly as expected," Williams said. "But once it starts getting into warmer waters, it should start to intensify more."

A hurricane watch was issued Sunday for St. Maarten, Saba and St. Eustatius. A tropical storm watch was issued for Antigua, Barbuda and Anguilla and could be upgraded to a hurricane watch by Monday morning, forecasters said.

Debby likely will move over Antigua, Guadeloupe and the rest of the Leeward Islands early Tuesday if the storm remains on its current west-northwest track, Williams said.

Elsewhere, long-lived Hurricane Alberto still was spiraling in the open Atlantic, and former Tropical Storm Chris had all but fizzled.

At 5 p.m. EDT, Debby's top sustained winds were near 45 mph, above the 39 mph threshold for tropical storms.

The storm was about 645 miles east of the Leeward Islands and moving west-northwest at 18 mph, a track that would take it toward Puerto Rico and the northern U.S. Virgin Islands after it passes the Leeward Islands.

"If they haven't already, people in the lesser Antilles and Puerto Rico need to go out now and get all the essentials they need," said Stacy Stewart, a hurricane specialist. "This system needs to be taken seriously."

Explosion kills 10, injures 2 at New Mexico campsite

By CHRIS ROBERTS
The Associated Press

CARLSBAD, N.M. — A natural gas pipeline explosion showered flames on a campsite and melted sleeping bags and tents, killing 10 people, including five children. Two other campers were in critical condition Sunday.

The underground pipeline shot flames toward the campsite of the victims much like a flame thrower when it exploded, the pipeline company said.

"The flames did shoot down to where the campsite was," said John Somerhalder, president of the pipeline group of El Paso Energy.

The victims were members of two southeastern New Mexico families who were camping along the Pecos River about 200 to 300 yards from where the explosion occurred Saturday, said state police Capt. John Balderston.

Balderston said a woman who survived recalled being awakened by shouts about a fire.

"She stands up and discovers she's on fire and jumps in the river," Balderston said, "then returns to get her children — and can't, because it's so intense."

Near the river, investigators found sleeping bags and tents melted by the heat, Balderston said. "The only reason we could tell it was a tent was the geometric design of the poles," he said.

The pipeline was 5 to 6 feet underground at the rupture point, said Norma Dunn, spokeswoman for El Paso Natural Gas Co., which is owned by El Paso Energy. The rupture occurred about 500 feet east of the river, about 20 to 30 miles south of Carlsbad in southeastern New Mexico.

"It is an absolute mystery right now as to why that blew," Balderston said. Dunn said investigators might never be able to say what sparked it.

The explosion left a large crater, which Balderston said was 85 feet long, 45 feet wide and 20 feet deep. The fire was visible from Carlsbad, 20 miles to the north.

"We saw a large ball of flames," Balderston said. "The fire department was able to find six people in the river, walking west of the incident."

"She stands up and discovers she's on fire and jumps in the river then returns to get her children – and can't, because it's so intense."

Capt. John Balderson, New Mexico state police

Balderston said the area is not a developed camping area, but is a popular site for area residents because it provides easy access to the Pecos River.

The two remaining survivors were in critical condition Sunday at University Medical Center in Lubbock, about 160 miles from Carlsbad, hospital spokeswoman Gwen Stafford said.

The National Transportation Safety Board had a crew of investigators on the scene.

1st-degree murder charges filed in Wichitan's death

The Associated Press

WICHITA — Shocked by the killing of Dana Anderson and the mysterious discovery of her ailing boyfriend on a Seattle beach, the couple's families now are baffled by the murder charge against the man.

"It is a very confusing, very puzzling mystery," said Dave Anderson, whose daughter, Dana Anderson, was found dead in her own car in Colorado last week. "It truly doesn't make sense."

Sedgwick County District Attorney Nola Foulston announced Saturday that a charge of first-degree murder was filed against Steven Papen on Friday — Papen's 37th birthday. Papen, who is on life support at a Seattle hospital, will not return to Wichita to make a first appearance in court until his health improves, she said.

Foulston declined to describe the evidence that led to the charge of premeditated murder. Neither police nor prosecutors announced the charge when it was filed Friday.

Detectives notified James Papen, Papen's father, about the charges Saturday morning. He said he wasn't entirely surprised.

"It's standard procedure," he said. "I think it might be a little premature because Steven isn't able to talk. But they've got an investigation, and they have to do what they have to do."

The couple was last seen Aug. 10 in Wichita, where they had shared a home for two years. Papen's pickup truck later was found at Mid-Continent Airport.

"It is a very confusing, very puzzling mystery. It truly doesn't make sense."

Dave Anderson, victim's father

Papen remained in critical condition Sunday at Harborview Medical Center in Seattle, after a passerby discovered him in poor shape Aug. 15 at the seaside Discovery Park. He is suffering from a lung disorder and remained on life support.

Anderson, 29, was found Thursday in the trunk of her red Ford Taurus in a parking lot at Colorado Springs Airport. Police in that city said Saturday that an autopsy showed she died of suffocation with strangulation and a blunt-force trauma to the head as contributing factors.

James Papen said his family was unaware of any problems between Steven Papen and Anderson.

"Do I think he could have killed Dana? I don't think so, but that's what any father would say," Papen said.

He described his son as "probably the most caring person you could ever find. He took in this girl and her son, and we thought things were pretty good."

The couple's disappearances were discovered after Papen failed to show up at work and after Anderson's 12-year-old son, Cody, arrived home from an out-of-state visit.

Anderson's mother, Linda Thorpe, said Papen had been like a father to the boy, who now will live with his aunt in Missouri.

"Cody is devastated to think he (Papen) would do anything like this to his mom," Thorpe said.

She declined to comment on the charges, but said of the couple, "We feel he loved her, too. That's the impression he gave all of us."

Dave Anderson, a licensed marriage and family therapist, found it hard to believe that his daughter's boyfriend could be a cold-blooded killer.

"My own idea has always been if he was the person responsible, it would have been a spontaneous act of intense anger and rage at something going on at the moment," Anderson told The Gazette of Colorado Springs.

"The concept of premeditation is something hard for me to believe with the person I know, but at the same time I don't have the same information the authorities have."

He described Papen as a caring person, "a very wonderful, powerful father figure for my grandson."

James Papen said his son was not suffering from any psychological disorders. Dave Anderson said he wasn't aware of any problems between his daughter and Steve Papen.

"They've had their problems in the past, but they've always worked through them and had them resolved," Anderson said.

Mideast peace talks face obstructions

By LAURIE COPANS
The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — The Palestinian cabinet insisted there will be no compromise with Israel on the key issue of Jerusalem, in a tough statement Sunday coinciding with U.S. envoy Dennis Ross's efforts to revive Mideast peace talks.

The tone of the debate became more acrimonious as Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak said it now was up to the Palestinians to make the next move in peace efforts, while a Palestinian official warned that Jewish settlers in the West Bank and Gaza could become hostages if a crisis erupted.

The Palestinian cabinet said Israel must withdraw from east Jerusalem, which would become the Palestinian capital. "The Jerusalem issue is not negotiable and cannot be so today, tomorrow or in the future," the cabinet said in a communique distributed by WAFA, the Palestinian news agency.

Earlier, Ahmed Abdel Rahman, the Palestinian Authority's secretary-general warned that if Israel were to annex parts of the West Bank in retaliation for a unilateral Palestinian declaration of independence, the Jewish settlers would become hostages.

"Israel has a presence in the Palestinian lands which would be on the level of hostages in the hands of Palestinians," he told the Voice of Palestine radio. "These ... settlements that are in the Palestinian lands will become isolated and will face a real danger if Israel closed off all territories from all sides."

Barak has hinted that if Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat declares a state unilaterally, he might annex areas of the West Bank or seal off the Palestinian areas.

On Sunday, Barak told his Cabinet that the ball was in the Palestinians' court. "We are in a waiting period, since we have yet to hear from them about an openness and willingness to discuss the ideas that were raised at Camp David," Barak said, according to a Cabinet statement.

U.S. envoy Ross was in the region in an effort to prod the sides along, following the collapse of the Camp David summit last month over competing claims to Jerusalem. Sunday evening he met Palestinian negotiators Saeb Erekat and Mohammed Dahlan at an undisclosed location in Jerusalem, said a Palestinian official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The two sides have set a Sept. 13 deadline for a final peace accord. Arafat has said in the past that he has the right to declare an independent state unilaterally, if no accord is reached by then. However, he and other Palestinian leaders have strongly indicated that date will be postponed.

Meanwhile, amid a flurry of diplomatic activity in the region following Camp David's collapse, Syria's Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa visited Saudi Arabia and Egypt to discuss the status of Jerusalem.

Gore rises in polls after convention; Bush campaign battles decline

By WILL LESTER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C.— Al Gore and George W. Bush were tied in a poll of likely voters Sunday as aides for both candidates heated up the dialogue on the air waves over presidential debates.

"We are going to participate in a record number of five presidential and vice presidential debates," Bush communications director Karen Hughes said on "Fox News Sunday." She was referring to a recent campaign proposal that the presidential candidates debate three times and the vice presidential candidates debate twice.

"We're game. We'll start this week. In fact, we'll do five times five if they'll give us the opportunity," said Donna Brazile, Gore's campaign manager. "We'll start negotiations tomorrow."

The Commission on Presidential Debates has proposed three between the presidential candidates, on Oct. 3 in Boston, Oct. 11 in Winston-Salem, N.C., and Oct. 17 in St. Louis. The commission plan is for a vice presidential debate in Danville, Ky., on Oct. 5. The commission proposals are always subject to negotiations by the candidates.

Bush aides cautioned the surge Gore has gotten in the polls after his party's national convention could be short-lived. Bush got a bounce after his convention that quickly evaporated.

"We said all along that it's going to be a close election," Hughes said on CNN's "Late Edition." "We expect it to be a close, hard-fought election all the way to November."

The CNN-USA Today-Gallup poll had Democrat Gore at 47 percent, Republican Bush at 46 percent, Green Party candidate Ralph Nader at 3 percent and Reform Party candidate Pat Buchanan at 2 percent.

The poll of 697 likely voters taken Friday and Saturday had an error margin of 4 percentage points. That same poll right before the convention showed Bush 16 points ahead of Gore, 55 percent to 39 percent.

"I don't think you can put too much stock in the instant polls taken in the immediate aftermath of a convention," Hughes said, noting that Walter Mondale surged ahead of Ronald Reagan in 1984 in some polls but eventually lost the race.

Gore's campaign press secretary Chris Lehane said the campaign was determined to appear nonchalant about the progress, but added: "Clearly, there's some movement going on in this race."

Gore's campaign manager William Daley said on NBC's "Meet The Press: "We are encouraged that people obviously listened to the vice president on Thursday evening. ... There are issues that we've got to address, and he was specific about them. And I think that's what people reacted to."

Bomb blast kills 2

By ADAM BROWN
The Associated Press

MADRID, Spain — Two Civil Guard agents were killed Sunday in a bomb attack that police blamed on a Basque separatist group — the latest in a string of deadly attacks since ETA ended a truce last year.

A bomb that had been attached to the agents' patrol car virtually demolished the vehicle, police said. A female agent died instantly; the other agent, a man, died later in the hospital.

The attack, in the eastern town of Sallent de Gallego, on the border of France, came just after 6 a.m. There was no immediate claim of responsibility or comment from ETA, whose name is a Basque-language acronym for Basque Homeland and Freedom.

Since ETA ended its cease-fire last December, it has been blamed for killing 11 people — four of them since July. Victims have included politicians, businessmen, police and a soldier.

One of the victims Sunday, Irene Fernandez Pereda, 32, was the first female Civil Guard agent killed in separatist violence, according to the state news agency Efe. The 22-year-old man, Jose Angel de Jesus Encinas, had been on the force for three months.

"The car was absolutely pulverized," said Jose Luis Sanchez, the mayor of Sallent de Gallego.

Sanchez said residents near the bomb blast heard a vehicle driving fast in the area an hour before the explosion.

He said the bomb exploded as the pair started the vehicle to begin the day's patrol.

The Basque separatist group blamed in Sunday's killing is believed to have killed some 800 people in its 32-year-old war for independence on Spain's northern Basque region on the border with France.

Santiago Lopez Valdivieso, director general of the Civil Guard, pledged an intensified crackdown on ETA.

"It's a day of pain, but you can be convinced that, starting tomorrow, these deaths will be a stimulus in the fight against ETA. We will end up winning," he said.

Sallent de Gallego is in Spain's Huesca province, which is not in the Basque region. Police have said ETA frequently uses Huesca to transport explosives and members from France to Spain.

After the attack, police found a car with false license plates nearby. Police bomb experts blew up the car, fearing it might contain explosives.

In the MIND of a KILLER

Jennifer Lopez, Vincent D'Onofrio star in bizarre thriller movie review

"The Cell"

Showing: Seth Childs Cinema at 7:14,9:45 p.m.
Starring: Jennifer Lopez, Vince Vaughn, Vincent D'Onofrio

Review by CORBIN H. CRABLE
Kansas State Collegian

This summer, moviegoers have the rare chance to get into the head of a psychopath.

In "The Cell," Jennifer Lopez plays Catherine Deane, a psychotherapist who enters the mind of comatose killer Carl Stargher (Vincent D'Onofrio) to obtain the location of his next victim. Alongside Lopez are her partners, FBI agent Peter Novak (Vince Vaughn) and Dr. Miriam Kent (Marianne Jean-Baptiste).

What ensues is a trip into a twisted psyche, a place where women literally are toys, evil and bizarre violence are the norm and an abusive past is locked tightly away.

Due to the disturbing images and sequences, moviegoers will have strong feelings about this movie, whether they be positive or negative. If one can look beyond the shocking gruesomeness of Stargher's world, one can see a childhood where he suffered intense abuse by his father, and see how these events warped young Stargher's mind. We can get a rare glimpse of the events that molded Stargher into a madman.

Although Lopez portrays the main character, it is D'Onofrio's character who dominates the film. His is the only character with depth, although director Tarsem Singh makes a failed attempt at getting us to connect with Deane. As the entire movie is a glimpse into Stargher's mind, the other characters could be completely two-dimensional and the movie wouldn't be affected.

Singh goes to great lengths to make sure that the sequences in Stargher's mind are both intensely disturbing and intriguing, from the lighting contrasts to the cinematography and camera angles. The costumes are beautiful, even though they are so elaborate and extreme that they distract the viewer from the events in each scene.

Singh directed the dreamlike music video for R.E.M.'s "Losing My Religion" in 1991, and the same effects are present in "The Cell." In any other movie, these shocking and mesmerizing effects wouldn't work, but because of the movie's subject matter, they fit in perfectly.

Of important note is the fact that there is more to "The Cell" than dazzling effects and shock value. There is inescapable symbolism everywhere in this film. Every strange character and scene in Stargher's mind has a deeper meaning. As badly as you want to sit there and enjoy the movie for its amazing visuals, it triggers thoughts in you anyway. The combination of these elements makes "The Cell" a suspenseful trek into the heart of an evil mind.

Short-story anthology both strange, charming

book review

"The Year's Best Fantasy and Horror"
Pages: 497

Review by BECKY WILSON
Kansas State Collegian

Fantasy and horror writers seem singularly fond of the 1,000-page tome.

And if the story grows into at least a trilogy, so much the better.

But the short story continues to thrive, if somewhat out of the mainstream.

Editors Ellen Datlow and Terri Windling, best known for their series of modern fairy-tale anthologies, search with impressive depth and breadth each year to compile "The Year's Best Fantasy and Horror." This year's edition includes stories and poetry first published by everything from "The New Yorker" to an online magazine to an anthology from the University of Nebraska Press.

As Windling describes it, "This anthology series was created to be an annual celebration of the best in non-realist literature — ranging from magic realism (à la Márquez) to imaginary world fiction (à la Tolkien), as well as from dark stories of supernatural magic to those of psychological horror."

Delia Sherman, Charles de Lint, Steve Rasnic Tem, Ursula K. Le Guin and others deliver overt fantasy, skewed fairy tales, romances that end in casual murder and strange tales of grief and failed memory.

Neil Gaiman has two entries, both unconventional love stories — "Harlequin Valentine" and "Keepsakes and Treasures: A Love Story." While neither is representative of his best work, they contain images — a girl sitting at a cafe counter, consuming a ketchup-covered heart and hash browns — that remain with the reader.

"The Grammarian's Five Daughters," by Eleanor Arnason, and "The Paper Thin Garden" by Thomas Wharton, simply delight. The first involves a woman whose only gifts to her daughters are words — the first girl receives nouns and sets out to make her fortune, soon to be followed by her sisters with different parts of speech. Wharton's story involves the discovery of a book by a gardener who tends a garden untouched by anything organic.

"The Chop Girl," a World War II story about luck, love and death, and "The Dinner Party," which concerns temptation and an apocalypse, are favorites, and Douglas E. Winter offers an intriguing essay on the demise of horror as a publishing label.

A useful quirk of "The Year's Best Fantasy and Horror" are the extensive genre summations listing notable works from a variety of media — novels, magazines, nonfiction, music and movies, amid others.

The section on comics is particularly well done — reviewer Seth Johnson covers a range of titles, from Vertigo/DC imprints ("Transmetropolitan") to independent publishers (AIT/plaNET Lar's "Astronauts in Trouble").

The overviews alone make this book worth the purchase price, solely as a reference work. The alternately disturbing and charming contents ensure its value.

Scroll purchased at auction may be from ancient Egypt

The Associated Press

LAWRENCE — There was a good reason that the torn scroll bought by John and Cindy Ballard at a charity auction looked so old. It really was old — about 3,000 years old.

Now, thrilled scholars at the University of Kansas are trying to learn more about the scroll, which they say came from ancient Egypt.

Imagine the Ballards' surprise. When they bought it three years ago, they thought the document might make a good conversation piece, and they kept it framed in their home.

"There was no certificate of authenticity with it," John Ballard said. "It could have been made by somebody in a garage in Raytown, Mo."

Ballard, a 1973 KU graduate, and his wife donated the scroll to the school at a presentation Friday.

The couple learned the document's real nature after their son, Jake, took a religions studies class at the university. There, he heard about ancient scrolls that sometimes were buried in tombs with the dead.

Jake asked his professor — whom he described to the elder Ballard as a "real-life Indiana Jones" — if he could bring in the scroll.

Associate professor Paul Mirecki couldn't believe what he saw.

The scroll contained drawings and hieroglyphics in black and red ink on paper made from papyrus. The document measured 3 1/2 feet by 10 inches and was used as a religious guidebook for resurrection and afterlife.

Little is known about the scroll's history before 1950, Mirekci said. But he thinks the scroll might date back as far as 1050 B.C., and probably came from a Theban nobleman's tomb in Upper Egypt.

"Many objects like this are in collections throughout Europe," Mirecki said. "We're still studying this scroll to date it more precisely."

Richard Clement, director of special collections at the Spencer Research Library, said the scroll would be in good hands among the library's collections of historic books.

"What a wonderful gift this is," Clement said. "It is a first for KU, but it fits with our collections. We're very, very pleased to receive this."

Strike against nation's largest phone company looking to end

By KALPANA SRINIVASAN
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON D.C. — A two-week strike against the nation's largest local phone company appeared to be nearing an end Sunday, as union officials and Verizon Communications moved toward final agreements to replace contracts for 87,000 phone workers in 12 Eastern states.

Tentative accords had been reached with the two of three bargaining units, according to sources familiar with the talks. Final agreements could come as early as Sunday evening.

After weeks of nearly round-the-clock discussions, some union bargainers packed up their bags and left the hotel negotiation site late Sunday afternoon satisfied the talks here basically were finished. Officials from the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers were among those.

The talks involved three negotiating groups, one representing the IBEW and two from the Communications Workers of America.

Company officials declined to characterize the status of the talks, saying only that they were continuing and making progress.

"This will be over when we have a signed agreement," said Verizon spokesman Eric Rabe. "It won't be over until then."

Union representatives said earlier in the day they were reviewing language in the company's proposals Sunday, but believed that both sides largely had addressed major points of contention such as working conditions and job security.

"We have really narrowed the issues. We are working out the last couple of things," said Jeff Miller of the CWA, the larger of the two unions on strike. "We've made really substantial progress on all the major issues important to our members."

Myles Calvey, negotiator for the IBEW, which represents about 14,700 workers in the talks, said he believed Sunday was definitely the day for a deal.

Rabe offered a more tempered view, noting that the parties have been reviewing language for a long time. He said the company resumed some formal bargaining sessions with the unions Sunday morning.

City to reconsider retail development

By KELLEE MILLER
Kansas State Collegian

The Manhattan City Commission will be considering a redevelopment proposal this fall that could bring more retail businesses, including a SuperTarget, to Manhattan.

The commission recently voted to look at proposal from Plaza Manhattan LLC, and Chicago-based First National Development. This is the second proposal from the company this year.

"I hope this new configuration will be successful," Manhattan Mayor Karen McCulloh said.

The original proposal was turned down by the Riley County Commission on June 1.

The former proposal would have created a tax increment financing district on North Third Street, south of Bluemont Street and north of Leavenworth Street.

The new proposal suggests creating a smaller TIF district on North Third, between Leavenworth and Laramie streets, plus one in the East Side Business Park in Pottawatomie County.

A TIF district essentially is a financial incentive for the developer. It freezes the tax-base in the redevelopment area and then allows the extra tax revenue to be used only in that specific area.

The extra revenue will pay for infrastructure costs such as street and sewer improvements and some relocation costs.

McCulloh said this financial incentive is not tax abatement — these companies will pay taxes. It just allows those extra taxes to be used only in that specific area rather than throughout the city.

She said developers need this type of financial assistance for this type of development.

"It's more expensive to build on an already developed area," she said.

City Manager Ron Fehr said that while the proposed Third Street development area generally is smaller in this proposal, overall this development will encompass more area in Manhattan due to the business park development.

"The two together is much larger than the original proposal," he said.

Under the new proposal, Steel and Pipe Co., the largest land owner in the Third Street area, would be relocated to the East Side Business Park. Other retail locations also could be created there to relocate the current businesses on Third Street.

The proposal also includes a housing area on Third Street to accommodate residents who want to remain in the area.

Less than 30 residential and business properties will be relocated under the new proposal, compared to the previous 50.

The commission will have a public hearing about the proposed TIF district in

Weird Al to perform at McCain

Today is a once-in-a-lifetime chance for Jim Stoutenborough.

"I've been trying to get a hold of these tickets for the past 10 years. I would easily pay up to $75 to go see him," said Stoutenborough, senior in business and political science.

In one month, Stoutenborough will finally get a chance to see the man he admires. Weird Al Yankovic will perform his "Touring with Scissors" show Sept. 21 in McCain Auditorium.

Luckily for Stoutenborough, he won't have to go bankrupt to make his dream come true. The tickets for the show, which go on sale today at noon, are $20 for students.

While fans like Stoutenborough are excited about the chance to see Yankovic live on campus,

K-State ranked trendiest school

By NANCY FOSTER
Kansas State Collegian

Being ranked as one of the top 10 "hottest and trendiest" schools in the nation in a survey among high school guidance counselors reflects one thing, said Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement.

"It reflects what K-Staters have known all along," he said. "That our faculty takes a great deal of pride in their research and instruction, and K-State students about their instruction."

The Kaplan/Newsweek 2001 Guidance Counselor Survey polled opinions from guidance counselors around the country, asking them questions regarding various aspects of colleges. Assistance with financial aid, advising to students, how inquiries from students and parents are handled, community, living atmosphere for students, entertainment and what graduates said they got out of their school's education were the main areas of consideration.

Westloop 6 Theatres closed Aug. 17 as part of a Chapter 11 restructuring of Carmike Cinemas, which also owns Seth Childs Cinema.

Westloop theater closes due to Carmike's bankruptcy

By BRYAN SCRIBNER
Kansas State Collegian

Westloop 6 Theatres has closed its business only two weeks after Carmike Cinemas filed petitions in U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the District of Delaware.

Westloop closed Aug. 17. Corporate spokesperson Suzanne Brown said the theater had not met the company's expectations for profitability.

Carmike, which owns Seth Childs Cinema and Westloop 6 Theatres in Manhattan, is restructuring under Chapter 11.

Brown said Carmike is in the primary stages of constructing a business plan.

"At this time, it's business as usual," she said. "We really can't speculate on what or what not we might do."

Craig Erpelding, who graduated in August, said the bankruptcy was surprising. He said he expected Westloop to pull the company out of financial troubles.

"The Seth Childs one didn't give student discounts," he said. "In a town where 20,000 people are students, I think one of the more important things is to cater to students."

Seth Childs charges an adult rate of $6.75. Westloop's admission fee was $1.50.

Larry Westerman, junior in architectural engineering, said he was a patron of Seth Childs before the elimination of the student discount. He said the theater should be oriented toward the university.

"College students are too poor to afford the price hike," he said.

Although Erpelding said he will continue to go to Seth Childs, he said movies can be viewed in larger cities at more competitive rates.

"It's different because they've kind of got a monopoly on the movie scene," he said. "There are plenty of opportunities to catch movies in other areas for better prices."

Carmike Cinemas is headquartered in Columbus, Ga. It operates in 36 states.

Death toll rises to 11 with death of survivor

CARLSBAD, N.M. — The death toll from the natural gas pipeline explosion rose to 11 Monday after one of the two severely burned survivors died.

Bobby Smith, 43, died at a hospital in Lubbock, Texas. His daughter-in-law, Amanda Smith, 25, of Carlsbad, remained in critical condition.

Amanda Smith's husband, 5-year-old daughter, 3-year-old son and parents were among the five children and five adults who were killed early Saturday when a fireball roared from the ruptured pipeline near a Pecos River fishing hole.

The blast left a crater 86 feet long and 20 feet deep and generated heat so intense that sand melted into glass and part of a bridge's concrete structure turned to powder. A dozen people from two local families had been camped under that bridge, 500 feet from the pipeline.

John Somerhalder, president of El Paso Energy's pipeline group, said the pipeline had been installed in 1950.

National Transportation Safety Board investigator John Hammerschmidt said it will take several months to complete a report on the cause of the disaster.

Attorneys seek to move trial out of Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Defense attorneys for a man accused of kidnapping a 10-year-old girl and causing her death during a sexual assault sought to move the trial out of the area Monday.

Defense Attorney Daniel Franco said during a hearing in U.S. District Court that Keith D. Nelson could not receive a fair trial anywhere in the Midwest because of the heavy publicity that accompanied a kidnapping and death that gripped the area for a week last fall.

Federal prosecutors are seeking the death penalty.

The mother of slain Pamela Butler, who was snatched from in front of her Kansas City, Kan., home while she was skating back from a convenience store, said the trial should take place close to home so she could attend.

"I don't think it's right," Cherri West said. "I should be able to be there. He's still breathing. She's doing nothing but seeing dirt. She was my daughter. She should be out playing."

Trial was scheduled for October, but now likely will be delayed until the spring while U.S. Magistrate Judge Sarah Hays studies the change of venue request.

Nelson has been kept in a private jail in Leavenworth, Kan., since his arrest in October in the slaying of Pamela.

He since has been charged with assaulting a guard and attempting to escape.

Nelson is not specifically charged with murder in Pamela's death. The indictment against him reads that he abducted the girl and she died as a result of sexual abuse. Federal prosecutors have received the necessary approval from U.S. Attorney Janet Reno to seek the death penalty.

Expo to help students locate part-time jobs

By JAMIE BARRETT
Kansas State Collegian

Working and going to school at the same time is a reality for many students. Finding a part-time job that accommodates a busy class schedule can be a problem as well.

Career and Employment Services is working to help students make a few extra dollars with its Part-Time Job Expo from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Wednesday in the Union Courtyard.

The expo will feature employers from around the community as well as on-campus employers.

Mary Marston, assistant director of Career and Employment Services, said the expo will feature many different employment opportunities for students.

"We have some employers that participated in our expo last year and some new ones as well," Marston said.

There will be a total of 30 different employers at the expo, including Complete Music, Dara's Fast Lane, Ramada Plaza Hotel/Gold Fork, Mercy Health Center, Manpower, It's Greek to Me, K-State Student Union, the Department of Housing and Dining Services and others.

"We are now in our third year for the expo, and we hope that students realize that it is a great opportunity to see more than just one employer at a time," Marston said.

Marston said the Part-Time Job Expo does more than just feature employers; it gives students a sense of what Manhattan has to offer to them job-wise.

"Nearly 80 percent of K-State students work at some time during the year," she said. "The expo lets them know what they have to choose from when they are looking for a part-time job."

Carla Jones, associate dean of student life, said part-time jobs show a sense of responsibility in students and helps build maturity by doing school and work at the same time.

"It is healthy to do both school and work at the same time," Jones said. "It shows that students are planning for the future."

Michelle Lippert, sophomore in public relations, said she works a part-time job at the K-State Union Bookstore because her parents expect her to pay for her own schooling and the financial aid she receives does not cover all of her expenses.

"By working at the Union I am able to pay for my housing," Lippert said. "I would not be able to go to school if I did not have a part-time job."

Jones said students sometimes might get overstressed due to a heavy load, but for the most part the work load is necessary.

"The ideal option for most students is to never work while they are in school, but working out of necessity achieves many goals for students."

Marston said the expo has attracted nearly 500 people in the past because it proves to be beneficial to students looking to achieve their goals of working while going to school.

"It has been quite successful in the past, and we hope that we can continue to please the companies that have booths and the students who come," Marston said.

Focus of Union renovation project shifts to outside

By JENN DAVOREN
Kansas State Collegian

Construction workers, usually a common sight around the K-State Student Union, have become scarce inside the "host to the campus."

No one is more excited by the end of the dust and noise in the Union than its executive director, Bernard Pitts. However, positive response to the renovations have spread to patrons.

"By listening to students as I walk through the hallways, I constantly hear the word 'Wow,'" Pitts said.

Pitts is especially eager to show off features such as the Cats' Pause Lounge, a room he calls a living room of sorts for the entire campus. The room itself is nothing new, but updated furniture and the installation of a fireplace will be a draw for students looking for a place to rest in between classes, Pitts said.

The Cats' Pause, which reopened to students Monday, will observe special hours this semester to cut down on problems with vandalism, Pitts said. Tentative hours are set from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.

The construction project has allowed for the introduction of several features around the Union as the Coffee/Sweet Shop, Computer Store and Hair Care Center opened for business this summer.

On the lower level of the Union, the Hair Care Center serves customers from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. Tuesday-Friday and 9 a.m.-noon on Saturdays. Appointments can be made by calling 532-5972 or e-mailing at haircare@union.ksu.edu.

Pitts said an exciting feature of the Computer Store will be its affiliation with Gateway, which will allow the store, on the Union's first floor, to do more than sell computer software.

"We're getting ready to go into a contract to be a service center," Pitts said.

The Coffee/Sweet Shop, to be named at another date, is open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. each day for the early breakfast crowd, Pitts said. The food stop not only introduced freshly made cakes to the Union, it also continues to serve items, such as smoothies, that were once items picked up in the Union Food Court.

Conveniences such as five new ATMs, open to customers of Capitol Federal Savings Bank, Commerce Bank, First Savings Bank, Intrust Bank and Kansas State Bank, and a new postal center also are available to students on the lower level of the Union.

Renovations have brought more to Union, but have caused a few losses, as well. The fate of the free-speech zone hangs in the balance as Union renovations near completion.

The zone has been tiled and cemented as construction workers ready the area north of the building for the Union Plaza. Original renovation plans called for a space east of the Union to be reserved for the free-speech zone, but limited funds caused plans to change.

Devin Klish, senior in management information systems and human resources, and Murl Riedel, senior in history and secondary education, watch as construction crews work on the new Union Plaza. The north entrance of the K-State Student Union reopened Saturday.

MATT STAMEY/Collegian

Pitts said the steps of Seaton Hall will serve as the free-speech zone until funds can be found for a more permanent main stage area. "It will probably be moved to the main stairs of Seaton," Pitts said.

Construction workers are now focused on the exterior of the Union. Plaza construction began in May, and contractors promise the area will be completed by Nov. 1.

Budgeting the $11.5 million renovation project was no easy task, but Union officials are confidant in their money management, said Abe Fattaey, associate director of campus planning and executive manager of the Union project. The overhaul, courtesy of student fees, has seen few money problems over the past few months, Fattaey said.

"It's almost the end of the project, and it is on schedule and on budget," he said. "The enhancement is basically complete. We're doing really minor corrections here and there, and in two weeks we'll be issued a certificate of completion."

All in all, Pitts said the final outcome of the renovation project has left Union officials optimistic about student response.

"We couldn't ask for a project that went as well as it did," he said.

Lack of theaters leaves students in search of fun

With the recent bankruptcy of Carmike Cinemas, Manhattan has been hit hard.

Previously, it was patrons' pocketbooks that were taking the strain. This was evident when the theaters discontinued giving students discounts. Last spring, adult ticket prices rose to $6.75 each.

Customers had the option of being able to attend the second-run $1.50 Westloop 6 Theatres. But that theater's doors already are closed.

This puts the lack of entertainment issue in Manhattan as an even more obvious problem.

This dilemma has the ability to affect Manhattan's economy as a whole. People who want to watch a movie will have to drive to other towns, such as Junction City or Topeka. This will help boost visitation to their towns and movie theaters, but only will hurt Manhattan in the long run.

Something needs to be done in order for the movie-theater monopoly to come to a halt. In the past, this purple city has had five movie theaters operating; now, that number has been knocked down to two. This is an excellent opportunity for the Union Program Council to step up and give students the entertainment they want when they show their weekend movies in the Union Forum Hall.

This also is an opportunity for Seth Childs Cinema to start offering student and military discounts again, as the $1.50 theater no longer is an option.

FOCUS on lighter issues

Religion takes backseat to bar scene, political correctness, parking

CLINT MUDRICK

As a first-semester Collegian writer, I am thrilled to have the opportunity to bring students a grossly neglected and infinitely pressing issue in the minds and hearts of all K-State students — religion on campus.

Those of you who shared the communal sigh will be relieved to know the previous paragraph was about as nonsensical as a Bill Clinton speech on morals. While I am not taking issue with religion or its zealots, I find a more appropriate time for such deep discussion is in church (or possibly a bad date when all other material is exhausted). If this bothers any aspiring theologians, accept my apology.

From this point on, I plan to abandon discussions of God for more immediate and pressing issues. Issue one: lighten up.

The simple fact is that some who read those past few paragraphs (if indeed anyone read past the first paragraph without getting up for a Coke — or, as is now contractually required, a Pepsi — and an arsenic pill) were offended with the dismissive way I put aside religion. Some would ask how questions of eternity, of heaven and hell, could so quickly be thrown aside for less important subject matter.

The response is easy: I don't see why an issue so personal as religion should be placed into a venue so public as this. We as college students have more immediate concerns, concerns such as which of the World Regional Geography instructors are the easiest, how quickly one can memorize vital statistics on a roommate's driver's license and which "Seinfeld" is the best ever (My vote is for "The Contest.").

Consequently, it will be my goal through the remainder of my time on the Collegian to tackle the issues that not only are important — note that I never said religion was not important — but also more immediate and less subjective. Hence, I come to bury religious discussion, not to mourn it.

To those who still wish to debate, please realize that trying to convince a person of a certain religious belief is like trying to convince a Pizza Shuttle fan to switch to Gumby's. It's not going to happen, it will cause a large amount of fighting and in the end, nobody will leave happy and the pizza will get cold.

We have enough to worry about without considering whether the next Jack and Coke will send us on a one-way trip to hell. We upperclassmen need to worry about how we can pass all our classes and still avoid the horrific real world that awaits us as soon as the umbilical cord known as college is cut at graduation. Freshmen need to worry about enrolling in at least one of their required classes, deciding which 12 hours to drop at mid-semester and trying to get into Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon in hopes of meeting those mythical senior girls who have given up on relationships and just want to "have fun with a young guy." I myself have to worry about not turning this column into pure Forum fodder, and, at the same time, finding those Collegian groupies who love nothing more than a man with a Macintosh.

That's why, in the future, I plan on writing about our friends in Lawrence, the local bar scene, political correctness, campus parking (nothing better than giving a dead horse one last kick to the groin) and, just maybe, an analysis of whether evolution is more believable than creationism. Wait, scratch that last one.

If I'm sounding depressingly anti-intellectual, that is part of the idea. For my personal background, I once had a girl tell me, "I can't see myself being with a guy whose life is ruled by 'Simpsons' and 'Seinfeld'." She meant it as a shot at my immaturity. I saw it as the closest anyone has come to describing me. She meant it as a hint that I was wasting my time worrying about unimportant issues while the vital ones were passing me by. I took it as a compliment.

I am in the College of Engineering, surrounded by computers and Y-chromosomes. I am a frat boy who has never purchased Doc Martens or Gap clothing, has no game and hates giving high-fives.

I live in a society where, in my few short years on this planet, the moral fiber has degraded from "Mr. Gorbachev, tear down that wall!" to "Oral sex is not, technically, sex." If this is reality, please, give me "Seinfeld."

Commercials parallel real-life situations

ZAC COOK

Ask me what I pay attention to on television.

Nope, it's not a democratic bunch of half-naked people running around on an island asking each other who wants to be a millionaire.

And it's not a voyeuristic show with a sibling title in which none of the participants are actually related. My bread and butter entertainment is commercials.

They are the greatest thing to hit the world since smart streetlights, and they are so versatile. Good ones bring laughs so hard you could audition for a purple-faced mascot. Everyone remembers funny commercials — really, that is the only reason we watch the Super Bowl anymore.

Cute ones make you want to run out and buy this darling little product someone is hawking. Remember, if you were a child of the '80s, when you wanted so badly to consume Life cereal if for no other reason but that cute little Mikey liked it?

Annoying ones send you flipping for something better or actually getting up and doing something productive. These include psychics who tell endless lies, nutritional supplements that promise to make you larger than Refrigerator Perry and almost anything else you can buy for either $9.99, $19.99 or $29.99.

Channels without commercials are deadly — at least to college grade point averages. When Manhattan cable gave everyone Cinemax for free last year, Hale Library attendance paralleled football attendance of the late 1980s. I guess there is a certain romance about being able to stare blankly at a screen and catch all your favorite movies while supposedly studying. The monotony without ads captures and imprisons you until the wee hours of the morning.

That stated, K-State could learn a lot from a life-insurance commercial. Actually, just one spoken line from an otherwise run-of-the-mill, children-in-swingsets with lots of sunshine, very-happy-times commercial. "Life insurance: It's not for the people who die, it's for the people who live."

No, I'm not trying to sell you life insurance (but after the Humboldt explosion, life and renters' insurance would be nice). In fact, insurance has nothing to do with it. The real lesson in this statement is that many people don't realize until they are nearly six feet under that in this dog-eat-dog capitalist world, there are people we need to think about besides ourselves. I'd like to call it voluntary socialism. I'm not talking about Lenin-Stalin-I'll-throw-you-in-a-labor-camp-in-Siberia-if-I-don't-like-your type of socialism. It's a call to stop thinking about yourself before you even consider what others are going through.

At K-State, voluntary socialism would be a good stance on both the Safe Ride program and the parking shuttle issue. Safe Ride failed here because people were so selfish in their thinking. They questioned why they would have to pay fees to fund something only for drunk people. They cried to mommy because student fees might be hiked. These people wouldn't recognize the beneficial trickle-down effects from a program like Safe Ride if it fell nine floors off Moore Hall and hit them on the head. They need to think a little bit more long term and look at a big picture.

"Safe Ride: It's not for serving the drunk people, it's for protecting the sober ones."

The program will lower the number of drunk drivers on the road, thereby reducing traffic flow and dangerous drivers. Police would be relieved of chasing drunk people and giving DUIs and could be off protecting more people. Also, the service would provide for people who otherwise are forced to walk home in the dark.

The same scenario seems to be happening with the parking shuttle's proposed routes. Students not fortunate enough to live at a proposed stop don't want to help the program get started by paying more for parking permits. Again, these people need to use a little voluntary socialism thinking: Yes, your permit prices are going to go up, but things are going to get better on the whole.

Here's an example: if everyone uses voluntary socialism, your grass might not be any greener, but your fellow students who can use the shuttle will be living le vida loca in lush fields, and maybe if they follow voluntary socialism, they'll throw a party for you in their big pimpin' new yard. See how this works? Anyone who does ride the shuttle will not end up driving, and this will make spots easier to find and reduces traffic snarls on the way to campus. Also, pollution is reduced, global warming is averted, and we can all rejoice merrily (refer back to partying in lush fields).

Think about everyone else who can't park that close either, then drive to the West Stadium lot on Denison, get out of your car and whistle a happy tune on your way to class.

One more note on parking: if you can't find a spot right in front of your destination on campus, don't say there is a big parking problem.

Think about everyone else who can't park that close either, then drive to the West Stadium lot on Denison, get out of your car and whistle a happy tune on your way to class. And maybe someday you can tell your grandkids how you had to walk uphill both ways in a blinding August snowstorm just to get to class.

Or maybe it's not really as bad as you think.

Next week, I'll examine our personal privacy and how the government is depriving us of it. So, if you are a critic or supporter of Echelon, drop me some thoughts.

SUMMER IN THE CITY

Mason Farnsworth, 2, Manhattan, watches his neighbor Allison Devlin, 5, Manhattan, as she plays on a piece of playground equipment that he wanted to play on Monday afternoon at Cico Park. With temperatures hovering around the century mark, Farnsworth and Devlin were trying to beat the afternoon heat by playing in the shadier areas of the park.

New business to give students chance at big-time internships in local areas

By BRYAN SCRIBNER
Kansas State Collegian

Industrial internships in the city soon will be available for students wishing to avoid the larger of the two apples.

Heatron, Inc., a manufacturer of heating elements, chose to expand operations beyond its headquarters in Leavenworth, Kan., and will move its design and manufacturing efforts to Manhattan.

Jeff Tucker, associate director of K-State's Advanced Manufacturing Institute, said Heatron is working with the institute's students.

"Heatron has been working with AMI pretty extensively for about a year now on multiple projects," he said. "We have two students helping to lay out the facility.

"Heatron, in time, will make a great community partner."

Many K-State students have been limited to seek positions in larger cities, but Tucker said work with the institute and localization of the industry will spur more internships in the field.

"We have probably a dozen or more projects that we've agreed are somewhere within our future," Tucker said. "I think that as long as K-State and AMI continue to provide a valued service, there will be a continuous value in us."

Retaining the education of K-State graduates is also important, said Ann Harts, vice president and director of economic development for the Chamber of Commerce. She said a 1992 graduate has earned a position with the company.

The manufacturer's decision to move west is a $3 million capital investment for the city, said April Hamilton, research and information manager for economic development for the chamber. Hamilton said it initially will create 20 new jobs.

Abbott Aluminum Inc. will house the new facility. Hamilton said Heatron also would be considering a location in Manhattan's corporate technology park in the future.

Hamilton said AMI, skilled labor and public and private government entities were selling points for Heatron. Negotiations between economic developers and the company lasted eight months.

Heatron president Mike Keenan said he enjoys working in smaller areas.

"We hope we're bringing good-paying jobs to the community," he said.

Heatron's research and development was an attractive target for economic developers, Harts said. She said the business also is employee-owned, which played a role in the recruitment decision.

"We got in at midstream and showed them why this would be a better area for them," she said. "We showed them that our labor supply, with its work ethic and ties to K-State, would be advantageous to their bottom line."

Because many areas of Manhattan cannot be taxed, Harts said a diversified tax base will be an advantage of the company's presence in Manhattan.

The company will begin production the second week of September, Harts said.

"We're very pleased to see a company come to Manhattan with 30 to 50 employees," she said.

About 90 positions will be available once the facility is completely operational.

Tucker said Heatron's products are provided as heating components for other manufacturers. Heating elements in toasters, medical equipment, dishwashers and in some fast-food restaurant warming plates are some of the goods produced.

"Most people come in to contact with heating elements every day, and they just don't know it," he said.

Actress Heche hospitalized after breakup with girlfriend

By KILEY RUSSELL
The Associated Press

FRESNO, Calif. — Actress Anne Heche was hospitalized after wandering up to a rural home appearing shaken and confused, hours after her breakup with Ellen DeGeneres became public, a deputy confirmed Monday.

Heche apparently parked her car along a highway Saturday and then walked about a mile to the house in Cantua Creek, where she knocked on the front door and made strange statements to the occupants, said Fresno County sheriff's Lt. Merrill Wright.

Sheriff's deputies took her to University Medical Center, Wright said. He said there was no criminal investigation.

Neither Wright nor the hospital would comment on what may have caused her condition. A spokeswoman for University Medical Center, Mary Lisa Russell, said no one named Heche was checked in and wouldn't say if Heche had been admitted under a different name.

Hospital records show Heche was released early Sunday after being seen by doctors for two hours, reported KFSN-TV in Fresno. Russell wouldn't confirm the report.

There was no immediate response to calls placed to Heche's agent, Steve Dontanville, or DeGeneres' manager, Erik Gold.

The incident came hours after the separation of Heche, 31, and DeGeneres, 43, was made public.

Patterson helps team to championship

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

The color of choice for women's basketball coach Deb Patterson this summer was not purple, but red, white, blue and gold.

Patterson served as an assistant coach for the USA Basketball Women's team that competed in the COPABA Junior World Championship Qualifying Tournament in Mar del Plata, Argentina.

The 18-and-younger squad went 5-0 to capture the gold medal and secure a berth in FIBA Junior World Championship for Women in July 2001.

While winning the gold medal was a significant accomplishment, it was just one of many positives Patterson said she brought back from the tournament.

"It's a very healthy experience to be in the gym with many of the best coaches in the game," Patterson said. "And it's a privilege to work with the elite players in the women's game."

PATTERSON

The players truly were the elite of the next generation of women's basketball. One player, Laurie Koehn, who recently signed with K-State, can list as an achievement nearly every significant award available in Kansas and the country. While at Moundridge High School, Koehn was a two-time USA Today Kansas Player of the Year and a Nike All-American.

Coaching young players was a privilege, but also a challenge, Patterson said. A team of graduates and one high school senior acts and plays differently than one consisting of older players, she said.

"It's extremely different coaching players not yet in college," Patterson said. "They're not yet used to the pressure both mentally and physically, and they're not used to the rigorous schedule."

However, the players' inexperience contributes to the coaches' greatest rewards, Patterson said.

"It's a lot of fun. Every day for these young players is a new experience. It's fun — they don't know what to expect," Patterson said.

What the players should expect, if the team's undefeated run-through the tournament is any indication, is to perform very well at the World Championships next year. If they are to do so, it will be against much tougher competition, though, Patterson said.

"The competition level in Argentina was not remotely as high as will be next year," Patterson said. "It was a great precursor, an opportunity for the players to get international experience, but it's like dipping your finger in a cup of water compared to stepping in the ocean."

If the team brings back another gold, it will not be unexpected. The USA is the defending Junior World Champion and has compiled an 18-9 record in the four previous tournaments.

Former K-State basketball star seeing playing time on court

After her first-round WNBA draft selection in the first round of the WNBA draft, former K-State player Olga Firsova is seeing playing time for the New York Liberty. In the nine games in which she has played, Firsova has averaged 1.3 points per game and has one block.

FIRSOVA

Her best performance came against Washington in the first round of the WNBA Playoffs. Firsova went two-for-three from the floor to finish with four points and grabbed one rebound.

Wildcat fans can monitor Firsova's progress in the WNBA by logging onto K-State's official sports Web site, www.k-statesports.com, under the women's basketball icon.

Athletics hires new women's manager

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

Gender equity in the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics has its new promoter.

Laura Tietjen was hired Monday as the Wildcats' senior women's administrator by athletics director Max Urick.

"I'm excited to have this opportunity at Kansas State, in part to Max and his staff. It's a move back home for me."
Laura Tietjen, senior women's administrator

Tietjen replaces Cindy Fox, who vacated her position earlier this summer.

"We're happy to have Laura as part of our staff," Urick said. "She has been an outstanding student-athlete, coach and administrator. With that background, she identifies with many issues of student-athletes."

Urick said Tietjen is qualified, with experience at many different levels

Tietjen (pronounced "TEE-jen") is serving as the athletics director at the University of Evansville, a Missouri Valley Conference school that sponsors 15 men's and women's intercollegiate sports.

She was the first full-time female athletics director in the 90-year history of the MVC.

Tietjen has been with the Evansville program since 1995, working as an assistant and associate athletics director until 1998, when she took over as the department head.

"I'm excited to have this opportunity at Kansas State, in part to Max and his staff," Tietjen said. "It's a move back home for me.

OLYMPIC BOUND

Former K-Stater makes Olympic high-jump team on 1st try

By JASON ARY
Kansas State Collegian

K-State's Olympic high-jump legacy continues.

Following in the footsteps of former Wildcat greats such as Ed Broxterman, Nathan Leeper has leaped into the national spotlight in qualifying for the 2000 Summer Olympic games in Sydney, Australia.

The US Track and Field team is looking to bring home its second consecutive gold medal in the high jump, and many say the man to do it is Kansas native and one-time K-State student Nathan Leeper.

While most track and field athletes make several attempts before qualifying for the Olympic games, Leeper secured his spot on the team at his first Olympic Trials — something that impressed K-State track and field coach Cliff Rovelto.

Leeper, who qualified for the Olympics last July in Sacramento, was a member of the K-State track team in 1998, when he quickly proved himself as one of the best high-jumpers in the nation.

After qualifying for the 1998 Outdoor Track & Field Championship and then finishing second in the USA Outdoor Championships that same year, Leeper went on to take home the Big 12 title in the high jump the following spring. It was no easy task, Rovelto said.

"When Leeper won the (Big 12) title, he was jumping against the best group of male high jumpers in conference history," Rovelto said. "That has to say something."

Leeper is following a long line of K-State high jumpers who have gained national attention in recent years.

Broxterman qualified and competed in the Olympics in 1996, while Itai Margalit, a K-State track member and Israel's top high jumper, was named an All-American that same year. Former teammate Charles Burney achieved All-American status two years later, and Percell Gaskins won the NCAA Indoor high-jump title in 1993.

Rovelto said he thinks the K-State high jump legacy has influenced who Leeper is today.

"This is really a continuation of what came before him, " Rovelto said. "Talent and work alone doesn't get it ... you have to work hard and be in a program where there is a plan. He accepted it, and he has become such a good competitor."

Former K-Stater Nathan Leeper competes in the men's high jump at the Kansas Relays last spring in Lawrence. Leeper will compete in this year's Olympic Games.

In order for the Protection, Kan., native to bring home the gold, he'll first have to defeat the competition, including top-contender and teammate Charles Austin.

Austin, who brought home the gold medal for the USA in Atlanta in 1996, did so in record fashion, setting the Olympic record with a jump of 7 feet, 10 inches. Austin also qualified at the top of the pack last month in the Olympic trials, jumping 7 feet, 7 1/4 inches, while Kenny Evans and Leeper finished second and third, respectively.

Even though Leeper's personal best is a only jump of 7 feet, 8 1/2 inches set late last year, Austin's top career jump of 7 feet, 10 1/2 inches was set nearly a decade ago.

Leeper now is working out in San Diego in preparation for next month's games and was unavailable for comment.

The Summer Games will begin with the torch-lighting ceremony Sept. 21, with track and field events starting the following morning. The high jump competition will take place Sept. 24, with coverage available on NBC.

"Talent and work alone doesn't get it ... you have to work hard and be in a program where there is a plan. He accepted it, and he has become such a good competitor." — Clif Rovelto, K-State head track coach

K-State/Nebraska game only matchup that matters this season

Lets stop lying to ourselves. Stop the madness. Stop the insanity. No more lies. No more falsehoods. No more hiding the truth amidst nonsense.

Now that I got that off of my chest, let me explain.

In case anybody didn't realize yet, a new semester has begun. That means new classes, new faces, more big orange construction markers, new ways to plunge into oncoming traffic on a one-way street that we call the Manhattan road system and new plans on how to spend mommy and daddy's tuition money on mass quantities of malt liquor.

And, of course, a new football team.

Naturally, I will attempt to bring this lemony-fresh attitude to the crusty world of sports journalism. I will bring a new beginning. A new ideal. A new school of thought. An epiphany, if you will.

I will be a prophet of truth and justice: the Moses of 50-yard passes and jarring tackles. This epiphany (good word — use it in every sentence. Name your kid, "Epiphany") all goes back to a simple way of life. Let's stop lying to ourselves.

FRANK FLATON

For whatever reason, Bill Snyder and the entity we call the K-State football team either don't agree with me or would rather hide the truth among less controversy and more politically correct statements.

Every year, it's the same old story when it comes to the Wildcats' schedule. Don't worry, I'm not going to go off on a tangent about how K-State fans would rather see the Cats play Notre Dame, Michigan or any other school that doesn't have five directions in its title or play like a bunch of anemic school girls. Frankly, I just don't have enough space.

Nonetheless, every fall the team tells you that it's taking each game one step at a time. Oh, and it's definitely not looking toward any opponent down the road, right?

I understand that Snyder is a man of planning and wouldn't want to misjudge an opponent and get upset by a team like Southeastern Northwest Hawaii Valley Tech State A&M.

But you, the fan, don't have to have to listen to it. Don't believe it. Only one game matters. Not Oklahoma. Not Texas A&M. Not Colorado. Iowa? Yeah, right. And certainly not KU or Iowa State. The only opponent that every Purple People Follower should get ready for is a certain northern school that starts with N, ends with A and rhymes with "Mibaska."

Avoid all the preseason magazines that tell you that games against Oklahoma and Colorado are key in the Wildcats' schedule. I need just one sentence to sum up the season for you.

Mark your calendars for Nov. 11 and wait. Don't get me wrong, there will be a few entertaining matchups in the Cats' fall lineup. But if seeing a game that really matters is your new philosophy, you might be better off programming your VCR and heading out to Colbert Hills to work on your golf game on Saturdays.

Take my word for it, both K-State and Nebraska will be undefeated in November (perhaps ranked No. 2 and No. 1), and will bang heads to decide who is once and for all the new powerhouse in the Big 12.

This season's Wildcats are mere replicas of the 1998 squad that won the Big 12 North Division title and were one win away from the National Championship game. During that season, it was no secret that Nebraska was the only thing in K-State's way.

The same applies in 2000. The Wildcats return its starting quarterback. Ditto in 1998. Return more than 15 starters. Ditto. And Bill Snyder is hungry for the prize and has an experienced and equally respect-starved unit ready for action. All the ingredients were there then and are there now.

Once again, talks of national title hopes are surfacing.

Don't fall in a trap. Don't think that games against Iowa or KU will be anything more than a chance for the Wildcats to whip up on the weaklings of college football.

So start buying your K-State vs. Nebraska showdown t-shirts and lobby to change K-State's fight song to an altered version of Metallica's hit song, "Nothing Else Matters" ... but the game in November against a college team in Kansas and a team in Nebraska who will play for the Big 12 prize and a national championship berth.

Center strives to educate others

By NANCY FOSTER
Kansas State Collegian

Furthering its research and cancer education are among the K-State Center for Basic Cancer Research's top priorities.

The center, which has been a part of K-State for 20 years, has eight administrative employees and 40 scientists working together to educate others and learn more about the cancer cell.

The center recently created two positions to help with research and education, said Susan Religa, marketing coordinator and special assistant of biology.

Marcia Hancock, outreach information coordinator, was hired by the Center to help define Hispanic organizations to distribute the new Spanish edition of the "A Day With Dr. Waddle" coloring book.

The coloring book was created in 1988 to educate children about different aspects of cancer. It informs them about cancer cells, science and good health through the use of a cartoon duck named Dr. Waddle.

It is distributed nationally, and for the first year, a Spanish edition is being created to address Hispanic cultures.

"There's over 10,000 families in Kansas alone for whom the center of language in the home is Spanish," said Jan Galitzer, administrative assistant for the center.

She said the new addition will help educate a tremendous number of people not only in Kansas, but around the nation.

Galitzer said Hancock has been receiving much feedback regarding the new edition, which she said might be finished in November.

"She's been getting a positive response," Galitzer said. "Dr. Waddle gets a positive response wherever he goes."

Another person the center has added to their staff is Sophia Fourie, a medical research adviser. She will work with BioServe and many business-related projects. Also, she will be a presenter for the center, which will help put on the Kansas Experience workshop in October and help develop training centers.

Galitzer said K-State's Cancer Center is important to the university, and that it is distinctive compared to other centers.

"Most cancer centers are associated with a medical school, and we aren't," Galitzer said. "We are very unusual in that regard."

Galitzer said K-State is the only non-medical school that receives certain funding, which is used to help them research the different mechanisms that contribute to cancer.

Engineering group earns honors

By NANCY HULL
Kansas State Collegian

After 66 years, K-State's American Society of Agricultural Engineers finally has the bragging rights as the most outstanding ASAE student branch of the organization.

The honor was based upon their initiative and accomplishments over the past year and was presented at ASAE's international meeting in Milwaukee on July 9-12.

"This is the first time we've won in 66 years, and we weren't even in the top 3 last year. It's quite an accomplishment for the students' efforts," said James Koelliker, biological and agricultural engineering department head.

Koelliker said there are 45 departments similar to the one housed at K-State.

Judging was based on student chapters' special branch activities, quality of meetings, organization, members' activities and a report covering chapters' progress over the past year.

Koelliker said the K-State chapter finished strong in all categories.

"This really reflects how well the students work together. I'm pleased with the good organization they showed, and their activities were recognized," Koelliker said.

During the three-day meeting, Audrey Alexander, senior in biological and agricultural engineering, and Andy Peterson, senior in biological and agricultural engineering, two of the 19 members of the Powercat Pullers team, drove tractors to top place finishes. Alexander drove the 2000 tractor to a first place victory, and Peterson drove the 1999 tractor to a third place finish.

"This is the first time we've won in 66 years, and we weren't even in the top 3 last year."
— James Koelliker, biological and agricultural engineering department head

Stefanie Shoup, senior in biological and agricultural engineering, and Dawn Dechand, senior in biological and agricultural engineering, served as scribes for the student branch and prepared the report which was judged in the competition.

"I knew we were in the top three going in, but I didn't know exactly where we were. So, winning was very exciting," Shoup said. "Dawn and I put in lots of work for the report. I think ours stood out because it was easy to read and looked more professional than others."

At the meeting, Shoup was elected secretary of the National Pre-professional Student Council of ASAE for the next year.

Aside from students, others with K-State ties gathered honors at the meeting.

Pat Murphy, professor of biological and agricultural engineering who served as engineering and agricultural engineering extension state leader, was presented the Gunlogson Countryside Engineering Award. He earned the award based on his accomplishments in the design and implementation of livestock production systems for improving the environment and animal performance. Murphy graduated from K-State with both a bachelor's and a master's degree in agricultural engineering.

In a special 1/4-scale tractor competition for past ASAE presidents, Bill Johnson, former biological and agricultural engineering department head and ASAE president, won by driving the K-State team's 2000 tractor.

Koelliker said he hopes the team's success will lead to increased enthusiasm for the chapter.

"This raises the club's expectations of themselves. Now they know they have effective programs," Koelliker said. "It's always nice to be recognized, and this was really the icing on the cake."

Asbury contract settlement reached during summer

By DEREK BOSS

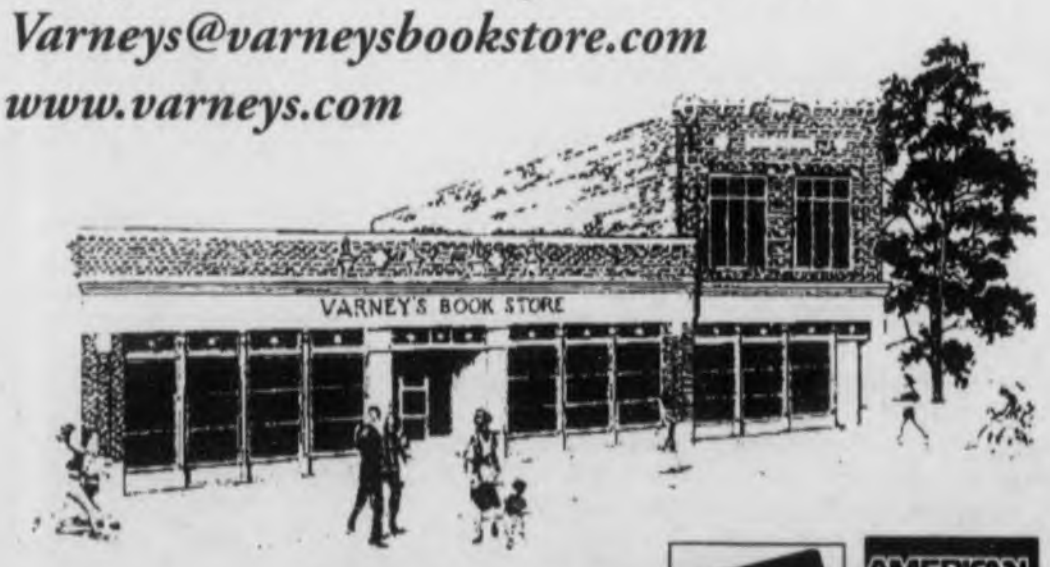
ASBURY

Former K-State head basketball coach Tom Asbury reached a settlement concerning his contract, according to a June 8 press release.

The terms of the settlement were confidential, so neither party was available for comment.

However, K-State Sports Information released a statement that the agreement was accomplished in an amicable way, and that both parties are pleased to have the matter resolved.

Asbury resigned as head coach March 10 after a six-year stint with the Wildcats. He ended with an 85-88 record, including a 9-19 overall record and 2-14 mark in Big 12 Conference play last season.



He ranks fifth on the K-State career victories list, but left the program as the first coach with a losing record since Fritz Knorr (14-33) in 1946.

Director says honor code has been successful, expects number of violations to continue rise

By SARAH BAHARI
Kansas State Collegian

Thirty-three students were accused of violating K-State's undergraduate honors code policy in the 1999-2000 school year, according to the board's annual report.

Director Phil Anderson said the policy's first year was a success.

"This was the first full year it was in place," he said. "I think given the fact it was the first year, it worked very well."

The numbers of reported incidents rose from the fall semester to spring. This increase could be because students and faculty are becoming more aware of the policy, Anderson said. He said he expects that as awareness of the policy increases, the number of reported incidents also will rise.

K-State released its annual report on the system Aug. 4. The numbers were reported to Provost James Coffman first and are awaiting presentation to the faculty and student senates.

According to the report, 33 students were accused of cheating, while there were 25 alleged violations of the honor code policy. Eight cases were fully investigated and adjudicated by members of the Honor Council. A ninth case is under investigation.

According to the report, five students were found guilty and received an XF grade for the course.

Honor code violations

Here is a breakdown of some of the demographic information about the 33 students who have faced allegations of violating K-State's honor-code policy since it was instituted at the beginning of the Fall 1999 semester.

- 7 seniors
- 7 juniors
- 10 sophomores
- 8 freshmen
- 11 residence hall students
- 12 independents
- 9 greek
- 5 athletes
- 19 male
- 13 female

JOSEPH HURLA/ Collegian

Three other students were found guilty but assigned lesser sanctions than an XF. The hearing panel found four students not guilty due to insufficient or inconclusive evidence. Eleven other students were given the grade of XF by request of instructor. One student appealed and was found not guilty.

A grade of XF indicates the course was failed due to a violation of the Honor Pledge. The F will remain permanently on the students' transcripts. The X can be removed only if the students pass an Academic Integrity Seminar, which requires them to fill out a course survey and express strong satisfaction with the value of the course and the method in which it was taught. The seminar is quite extensive and involves much outside work, Anderson said.

Board Adviser Scott Jones said the policy's strong point is its objectivity.

"In some cases, the students were found responsible, and in some cases, they were not found responsible," he said. "This tells me that it's a system that looks fairly and objectively at the evidence presented."

The honor code still needs to be publicized more, Jones said. Often, people do not know where to turn when they catch someone cheating.

This policy helps maintain the strength of K-State's academics.

"There is an inherent value in a degree at Kansas State," he said. "Students that graduate here have integrity."

Russians abandon effort to rescue submarine; 118 dead still on board

By ANGELA CHARLTON
The Associated Press

MOSCOW — A desperate effort to reach a sunken Russian nuclear submarine ended Monday, when divers said none of the 118 sailors were alive more than a week after a catastrophic explosion left them inside a crumpled wreck on the bottom of the sea.

Norwegian divers who finally opened the escape hatch and forced their way into the hull of the Kursk after working in the Arctic depths for more than 24 hours said the submarine was completely flooded.

There was no sign that the crew survived for long inside the mangled warship 350 feet below the surface.

Dejected and emotional, Defense Minister Igor Sergeyev expressed condolences to the sailors' families and admitted the rescue attempt had been flawed in a Monday night interview.

"We are all mourning together with the relatives and loved ones," he said, then paused and sighed deeply. "We will never forget what the sailors did, that they did all that was possible and impossible."

Relatives and friends of the crew collapsed with grief after rescuers found no survivors.

Other Russians, who were transfixed by television and radio reports of the drama, assailed their government for its slow, bumbling response to the Aug. 12 disaster and wondered when their crisis-wracked nation will see stability.

"Forgive me for not saving your sailors," the commander of the Northern Fleet, Adm. Vyacheslav Popov, said to victims' wives and mothers in a televised statement.

The Russian government resisted international help for days, even as its rescue capsules failed to reach the Kursk's damaged escape hatch.

A British mini-submarine brought to the site was never used.

"They have killed the boys, that's all," said Yekaterina Dyachkova, a retiree in Murmansk, headquarters of the Northern Fleet, struggling to hold back tears. "The (navy) should have called for help immediately, but they waited for so many days."

Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said he sees it as a chance to show students a part of K-State they might have never seen before.

"There are some students who have gone four or five years without ever stepping foot into McCain," Martin said. "We would like to let them in once and have them realize that McCain is a place that they can go where things that interest all people happen."

Martin was able to secure a show with Yankovic through the performer's manager, but because the agreement was made later than usual, he said it is not part of the regular performance series.

"There are a number of shows that we can't put on due to money and our technical capabilities, so we are always on the lookout for attractions that would bring students in and give them a good experience," he said. "I know that he has been consistently popular and has had no bad reviews. Various people had told me that they thought that Weird Al would appeal to the students around campus."

McCain marketing director Thom Jackson said he believes Yankovic will bring people of all ages to the performance.

"Weird Al has been around for a long time, and just about everyone knows who he is," he said. "This is a special event, and I know that this is meant for the students, but I'm 31 years old and I remember hearing him in the '80s."

Yankovic's show is expected to be a blend of old and new routines, Jackson said.

"It might incorporate some of his VH1 videos in with his classics as well as some new stuff. It looks like it should be a great performance," Jackson said.

While Jackson said he expects to have a large crowd, he's unsure if it will sell out.

"Whatever happens, we just hope the students who come will have a good time," he said. "I'm very optimistic, though."

Insurance company creates new public health foundation

By CARL MANNING
The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A public health foundation was created with $75 million from Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Kansas because of a settlement between the attorney general's office and the company.

The agreement, announced Monday by Attorney General Carla Stovall, ends a 1997 lawsuit filed by the company.

At issue was whether Blue Cross was a charitable organization when formed in 1941, as the state maintained. In January, a judge said it was a charity at least from 1941 to 1969.

Both sides were set to appeal, and that would have meant more litigation. Instead, the two sides started talking settlement.

"This is a great day for public health in Kansas," Stovall said. "I think it's appropriate to use the money from this agreement to incorporate a new public health foundation."

The Sunflower Foundation: Health Care for Kansas eventually will take charge of the $75 million. It will be governed by a nine-member board of trustees —eight named by the attorney general and one by Blue Cross.

Sunflower will find ways to serve the state's health needs, including providing health care information, promoting preventative health care and other health-related services, Stovall said.

The attorney general said it would be within Sunflower's discretion to provide health insurance for those without it or who are underinsured.

"There will be no shortages of causes that can fit," Stovall said during a news conference.

She said Sunflower will start operating after it receives tax-exempt status by the federal government. The company will make full payment within 30 days, and the money will be held by the Wichita Community Foundation until Sunflower starts operating.

Sunflower's board will decide how to invest the $75 million. At least 5 percent of its assets will be used each year for grants to support health-care-related activities.

"I believe this is a fair and reasonable amount for Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Kansas to pay," said Insurance Commissioner Kathleen Sebelius. "It's a win-win situation."

John Knack, the president and CEO of the state's largest health insurer, said a settlement was better than prolonged litigation. The company serves all of Kansas except for Johnson and Wyandotte counties.

"Our board of directors felt it was best not to gamble on the results of an appeal court decision that would keep the suit in litigation for at least another year and potentially jeopardize all our policyholders' assets," Knack said.

In the lawsuit, the company maintained it never has been a charitable organization, though it did enjoy tax-exempt status from its inception until 1969.

It was chartered under a Depression-era law to help poor people purchase health coverage. Such organizations received federal and state tax breaks, donated services and advertising, interest-free loans and other benefits in exchange for holding insurance rates down.

The state maintained in the lawsuit that if Blue Cross was a charitable organization from 1941 to 1969, then some or all of its assets from that period belong to Kansans.

AROUND CAMPUS

WHO: Jon Wefald, K-State president

WEFALD

Jon Wefald is starting his 14th year at K-State as the university president.

During his term as president, K-State has seen several changes including the addition to the former Farrell Library, the building of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, a nationally ranked football team and the fact that the university now is one of the trendiest universities in the nation.

Wefald said his love for K-State is strong.

"Kansas State has a special kind of community that's unmatched," he said. "I like the spirit, the sense of community and team effort that's here."

Wefald's family has ties to K-State. His wife, Ruth Ann, is active in several university functions, and his sons, Skipp and Andy, both graduated from K-State.

Wefald enjoys playing tennis and reading history and political biographies, but he said he is happiest when he is at work.

"K-State is a very special place," he said. "It's exciting to work here."

K-State Marching Band teams up for practice, prepares to march toward January bowl game

By CHELSEA SCHMIDT
Kansas State Collegian

Marching into Memorial Stadium, hundreds of legs rushed to their spot on the field. A team stretch began, followed by a series of jumping jacks. A voice in the crowd blurted out a command, and all legs moved in unison.

The drum major yelled, "Band, horns up."

The band responded in unison, "And up."

After participating in band camp last week, working more than 10 hours a day, The Pride of Wildcat Land has begun preparing for the season-opening Wildcat football game against Iowa at Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City, Mo., on Saturday.

"We (have) good, blue-collared, working class people who want to roll up their sleeves and get the job done," said Frank Tracz, director of bands at K-State.

And getting the job done is just what they plan to do.

Preparation

Preparing for the first pregame and half-time performances of the year didn't just happen during one week of band camp. It is a process that began early this summer, Tracz said.

"In the summers, we do everything from copying music to preparing folders, rosters, recruiting, (making) handbooks, instrument repair, et cetera," he said. "Our main event is organizing for the fall."

With those preparations complete, the first day of band camp brings back the students one week prior to the first day of class to begin marching, rehearsing and memorizing for more than 10 hours a day.

STEVEN DEARINGER/Collegian

One foot after another. K-State Marching Band members work on making each step 26 1/2 inches as they march Aug. 16 during a week of band practice at Memorial Stadium.

"It takes a lot of time," said Jill Smith, senior in elementary education. "There are so (many) things to worry about, and we have to make sure everyone knows what they are doing. If you make it through band camp, you are going to make it through the whole year."

Ben Deaver, sophomore in music education, said the hours spent rehearsing were not wasted.

"It's a big time commitment, and we have to work hard," he said. "But we get the stuff done, and then we leave. There isn't a lot of redundancy."

Smith said the time put in during band camp warrants rewards in the end.

"We put in a lot of hard work, but it's all worth it in the end," she said. "I can't explain how exciting it is walking out on the field and having 50,000 people cheering for us."

Recruiting

Each member of the marching band must go through an audition process prior to performing at the games and other events.

"We have a tryout process for both playing and marching," Tracz said. "The staff evaluates them, and the ones that do not make it are put on a reserve list until they are ready. It is up to them to decide how hard they want to work."

Drum majors, who serve as conductors of the marching band, are put through a more strenuous audition, said Mary Kathryn Dandy, senior in music education. Dandy has been a drum major for four years.

"The audition process is based on leadership skills, presence, conducting skills and score-reading," she said. "A lot comes back to leadership. You have to have strength in leadership."

Dandy said drum majors serve as a link between staff and students.

"We are the mental leaders of the band," she said. "Our mindset sets the whole band, and we serve as both staff and students. We have to be on top of our game all the time."

Pride

A common sense of pride seems to hover over the band members, whether they play an instrument, twirl a flag in the color guard, dance with the Classy Cats or conduct the band as a drum major.

"There's a mindset behind it," Dandy said. "We take pride in what we do, and we get a lot of support. A lot of times people hear you are in the band, and that's a nerdy thing to do, but it's not. We have a lot of integrity in what we do."

Smith said she agreed.

"So many people support us," she said. "We represent the university, and we have a pride in our school. We have pride in everything we do. We do the best we can, and everywhere we go, everyone loves us."

Tracz said that without pride, the job would not get done efficiently.

"You've got to have a lot of confidence and pride to do this," he said. "It's not for everybody. It takes a strong person to do this."

Support

With the work and effort put into the marching band, members said the support of students and faculty is a great reward.

"This university really supports marching band," Deaver said. "President (Jon) Wefald and Coach (Bill) Snyder are behind us totally. We also get the best seats in the stadium because Coach Snyder wants us there."

There also is support within the band that is much like that of a family, Dandy said.

"As a freshman, it is a good way to meet people," she said. "Your section is an instant family, and the band as a whole is an instant family."

Bowl games

The marching band works to improve formations and perfect sound from the first day of band camp up until the last football game of the season.

STEVEN DEARINGER/Collegian

Jill Smith, senior in elementary education, works on a flag routine Aug. 16 in Memorial Stadium. Smith was taking part in an intense week of the K-State Marching Band practice before its first big performance Saturday at the Eddie Robinson Classic.

"We work from August 12 until the last game, which is a bowl game, and could be as late as January 4," Tracz said.

With the excitement and hype of bowl games, band members find themselves choosing those performances as their fondest memories.

"It's so exciting because the fact that the university pays everything makes it a free trip for us," Smith said. "The stadiums are bigger at bowl games, and we have performed in a dome before. It's a lot different than our regular stadium."

Tracz said he agreed, marking his fondest memory the 1997 Tostitos Fiesta Bowl.

"It was a lot of fun, and the band did really well," he said. "And we won the game."

Tradition

With a mix of Classy Cats, twirlers and traditional band members, Tracz said this combination of talent is what sets K-State's marching band apart from other schools.

"There are not many bands that do that," he said. "Our overall organization is unique."

A new member of the band team will add to this tradition, as Dan Duffy works as this year's assistant director of bands.

"My goal was to teach at the college level," said Duffy, who was a high school band director at Rice Lake, Wis., for eight years. "I'm looking forward to getting to know the students and staff and being a die-hard Wildcat."

Goals

As the first football game approaches, Tracz said he has many goals for the upcoming season.

"We just want to get better," he said. "Every year, we want to play better, march better, memorize music better and, of course, we want to have fun.

"We serve a purpose here, and we try to do the best that we can," he said. "We try to add to the overall experience that students get here at K-State."

FAA examines jets for cracks, flaws

The Associated Press

U.S. officials have received at least five reports over the years of cracks that created potentially serious problems.

EVENDALE, Ohio — The Federal Aviation Administration has ordered maintenance examinations of 1,400 jet engines built by General Electric Co. for potentially hazardous cracks that have led to at least one airline accident.

The FAA's concern is with GE's CF6 engines, which use a series of pressurized discs, known as compressor spools, to the hold engine blades together. These spools are prone to developing cracks, a manufacturing defect the company says it fixed after 1995.

GE spokesman Rick Kennedy said on Monday that about 300 CF6 engines will be examined earlier than their scheduled maintenance dates. The engines are common on widebody jets, and some airlines will have to use spare engines or alternate aircraft to operate regular flight schedules, he said.

The other 1,100 engines already were scheduled for maintenance this year, Kennedy said.

The CF6 engines are used on Boeing's 747, 767, DC-10 and MD-11 jets, and on Airbus Industries' A300, A310 and A330 planes.

U.S. officials have received at least five reports over the years of cracks that created potentially serious problems. That includes an accident in June in which the engine failed on a Varig Brasil Airlines 767 during takeoff from Sao Paulo, Brazil. The plane caught fire after the takeoff, and four people were injured during evacuation of the plane.

The National Transportation Safety Board said the compressor spool in one of the Brazilian plane's engines ruptured. The board recommended additional inspections of GE engines beyond an FAA directive that had been issued last year.

9-year-old girl sets fire in foster home; 2 children die

The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A 9-year-old girl has admitted setting fire to her toys in a foster home, causing a blaze that killed two sisters, fire officials said Monday.

Eleven other children were rescued with the help of man who spotted the fire as he was leaving his church next door where he had been praying on the steps after his safe return from a trip.

The 9-year-old said she put lighter fluid on her toys and set them on fire, said Brad Humston, spokesman for the Fire Department.

Alexis Brown, 2, died at the scene. Aliyah Brown, 6, died at Children's Mercy Hospital following the fire before dawn Sunday.

Sean Jones, 27, saw flames in the foster home as he was driving out of the church parking lot.

Jones, who has three relatives who are firefighters, kicked in the door and found several children huddled on the stairway. He helped a worker at the center lead them to safety.

Then a girl told him her sister still was inside the building.

Jones went back in and found a baby in a crib.

The worker at the center, Beverly Parks, counted heads and discovered the two girls were missing. But Jones could not get back in because of the intensity of the fire.

Arson was suspected in the fire that started at the rear of the house.

Though K-State was in the top 10 overall, when it came to the trendiest school, K-State took Stanford University's place as No. 1.

"It makes us feel really good to replace Stanford as the hottest, trendiest school in the nation," John Fairman, assistant vice-president of university relations, said. "That's no small achievement."

Bosco said the results mean a lot because they came from around the nation, not just Kansas.

"What's special about this, is that it's not only from regional guidance counselors, but national ones as well," Bosco said. "That's a very different market for an institution to influence, and you don't do that by accident or by whim. It takes years of instruction, advising and student life for high school counselors to collectively have this response."

While K-State was voted the trendiest university, Notre Dame was the college counselors' choice as the place where they would redo their higher education. The University of the Pacific was voted the No.1 hidden treasure.

"We came through very good in their eyes," Fairman said.

Becoming a top-10 football program helped contribute to K-State's ranking, but Fairman said he felt it wasn't the main factor. Instead, it was K-State's record of producing Marshall, Truman, Rhodes and Goldwater scholars.

"It kind of speaks to value, and the media has nationally begun to recognize that," Fairman said. "They've been impressed with what our students have been achieving here."

Bosco said he feels faculty accessibility is a prime example of why K-State received this ranking.

"The accessibility of our faculty and the opportunity they afford undergraduates to work beside them in lab, giving out home phone numbers and e-mail addresses. That just doesn't happen at universities this size," he said.

Fairman said he thinks it will help open doors to national recruitment.

Jenny Miller, sophomore in business, said she agreed.

"I think it helps show just how really great K-State is and how much the students enjoy being here," Miller said. "It could help people look at K-State that normally wouldn't like incoming freshman," she said.

Fairman said the survey is an indication of a transition from purely regional identification to some positive national attention being directed this way.

"It's a very, very strong statement about K-State," Bosco said.

Tietjen will leave her position at Evansville in mid-September to join the Wildcat administrative staff, where she also will serve as an associate athletics director.

A native of Byron, Neb., Tietjen earned her bachelor's degree from the University of Nebraska in 1981, a master's in physical education from the University of Nebraska-Kearney and earned a doctorate from the University of New Mexico in athletic and educational administration.

Tietjen also recently was named as the newest member of the NCAA Division I soccer committee, but it is unknown whether she will keep her position on that board.

early October and then vote on the ordinance sometime that month.

McCulloh said if the commission votes to create the district, it only means it is agreeing to listen to the final predevelopment proposal, which the company has six months to develop.

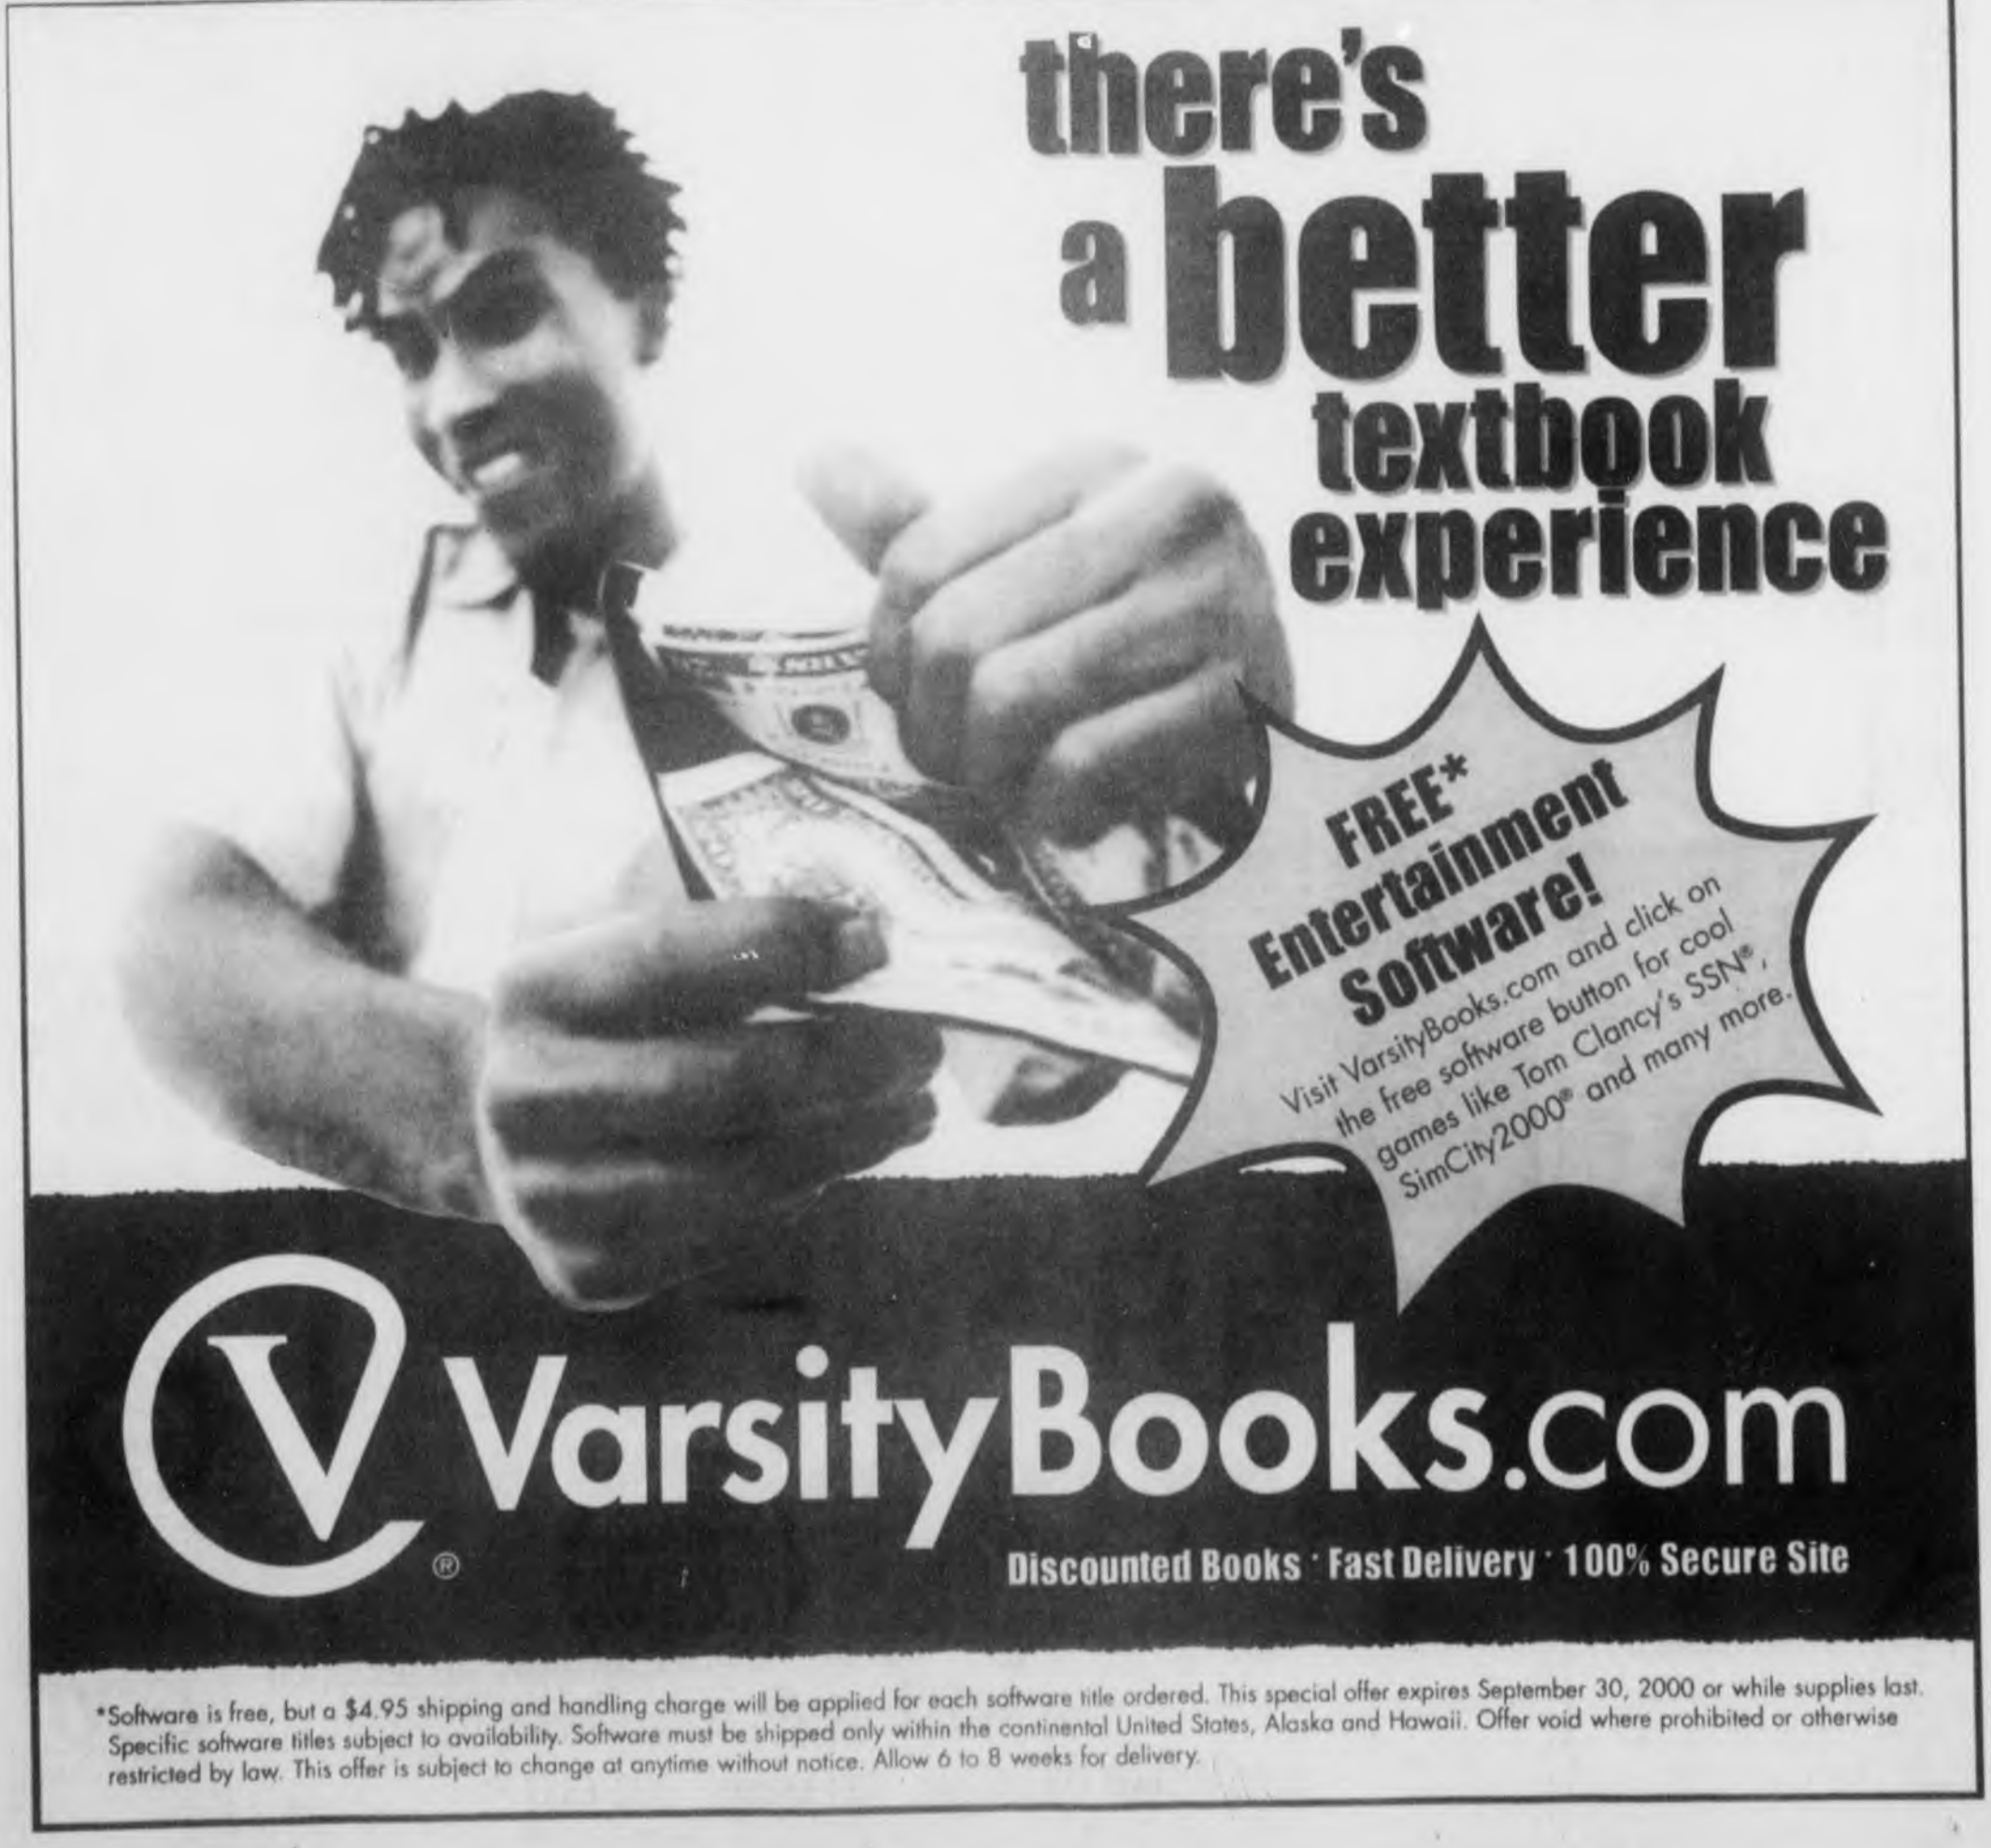
"We have not signed off on anything yet," she said. "If we can't successfully solve most of the problems, we will not support it."

The proposal, though, could face opposition again from the Riley County Commission as well as the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 and Pottawatomie County.

After the first reading, Riley and Pottawatomie counties and the school district have 30 days to stop the creation of the TIF district.

However, Pottawatomie County already has sent a letter of support for the development.

McCulloh said most likely the commission would be visiting with Riley County officials soon to gain their opinion on the new proposal.



"I don't want to put everyone through this agony again," she said.

McCulloh said this development would be positive for downtown and keep more consumers in Manhattan.

"People are going out of town for this shopping experience," she said.

Brown recluse population increasing locally

By JASON BECK
Kansas State Collegian

Jim Cashatt was met with a potentially dangerous surprise when he was shaving in the bathroom in his residence at Jardine Terrace Apartments

He immediately killed the surprise — a brown recluse spider — with his cane.

Cashatt, graduate student in entomology, found and killed the distinctive spiders on two other occasions: one he found in the corner of his bathroom, and the other he found in his laundry room.

"I'm sure they have some place in the greater scheme of things, but my apartment is not one of them," he said.

Cashatt isn't alone in seeing these spiders. He said he heard several other Jardine tenants talk about problems with spiders. After living in Jardine for almost a year, Cashatt said he figured it was time to move out at the end of July.

Don Mock, professor of entomology and extension specialist, said there might or might not be a problem with the number of brown recluse spiders this year.

"I saw news coverage in Topeka about them and also heard of several clinics in Kansas City treating more bites that was usual," he said.

Mock said that sometimes these stories get blown out of proportion.

"I can't verify that there are more than usual," he said, "but they are certainly abundant."

Mock said he noticed a lot of brown recluses when he was cleaning out a barn six weeks ago, but that he has not been receiving more calls than normal.

Brown recluse spiders are easily identified, according to the article, "Home and Horticultural Pests: Brown Recluse Spiders," which states that brown recluses can be identified by a "dark, violin-shaped pattern on the front part of the back."

The article also said most bites occur when a spider has sought refuge in shoes or clothing and someone puts them on, but that they also could happen when someone rolls onto a hunting spider while they're asleep.

Mock said many people might not know they have a problem because these spiders rarely are seen during daylight hours.

Mock said the bite of the brown recluse is not deadly.

"Victims may have no initial reaction, but they usually feel an immediate, painful stinging sensation at the bite site," he said. "The bite heals slowly, often requiring five to eight weeks to heal."

Cashatt said, however, this is a significant period of time in Traveling scientific sculpture visits K-State

By APRIL MIDDLETON
Kansas State Collegian

K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine parking lot was transported to prehistoric times and back again as members of the community and college viewed an interactive sculpture Tuesday evening.

"Continuum," a sculpture by Larry Anderson, was on display for two hours in front of the Veterinary Medicine building as part of a national tour. The brief stop on campus was sponsored by the College of Veterinary Medicine, the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art and Purdue University School of Veterinary Medicine.

The 45-foot, cast-bronze sculpture was scheduled to make stops in Denver, St. Louis and Chicago before arriving at Purdue, where it will be set in concrete.

Ralph Richardson, dean of the college of veterinary medicine, said they were approached by Purdue in hopes that K-State would be one of the key sites for the traveling display.

"Because it is such a nice piece, both artistically and professionally, we thought the two units (Veterinary Medicine and the Beach Museum) could share in the value of the display," Richardson said.

The piece represents the human-animal bond from prehistoric times to today. It begins with prehistoric cave drawings and moves to modern life-size animals, which seem to step out of the cave drawings, to illustrate how the veterinary practice nurtures the human-animal bond.

Melody Dickson, junior in veterinary science, said the life-size animal sculptures perfectly illustrate perfectly the circulatory, skeletal and nervous systems on one side.

"The detail of the vessels and bone structures in the metal is amazing. It looks realistic and accurate," Dickson said.

Richardson said the realistic detail is what transformed the piece from art to a veterinary medicine art masterpiece.

"I think the piece is a great tie-in to what we do," Richardson said. "It's a beautiful piece of work."

The sculpture arrived in Manhattan on a flatbed truck. Kopf Trucking of Indiana donated its

Professor makes emergency landing

By SHELLY LAUBHAN
Kansas State Collegian

Tense moments passed at the Manhattan Regional Airport last night as a plane without landing gear landed safely after circling the runway.

Hugh Irvin, K-State-Salina aviation professor and K-State Flying Club instructor, was attempting to land his Piper Twin Comanche plane when his nose landing gear would not operate.

He circled the landing strip for 30-45 minutes while airport authorities and the Manhattan Fire Department stood by in case of complications.

Irvin was alone in the plane and suffered no injuries.

According to Rick Berry, Manhattan Fire Department battalion chief, his crew reported to the scene with two fire engines and a rescue truck in case of serious injury during the emergency landing.

See additional photos of the crash at www.kstatecollegian.com

After meeting with airport director Ken Black, Berry's crew dressed in flame-resistant suits due to the strong possibility for fire upon landing the plane.

Irvin's plane landed safely at 6:58 p.m. with superficial damage.Black said the plane's antennas and propellers were slightly damaged and the bottom fuselage was scraped.

The fire department reported quick flashes of flames, but no fuel leakage.

"The pilot did a great job," Berry said.

Fires destroy buildings; officers point to arson

PARSONS, Kan. — Authorities in southeast Kansas are investigating a series of fires in Parsons that set off storm sirens and destroyed a home and two garages within a couple of hours.

Arson is suspected in all four fires, which occurred late Saturday and early Sunday.

"We don't know if they were related yet," Parsons Fire Chief Tim Hay said. "All four were definitely arson."

Police Chief Gary Baldwin said Tuesday that the fires were still under investigation and that several people had been interviewed. He declined to say whether any suspects had been identified.

The first fire, just before midnight Saturday, destroyed a detached garage and damaged the adjacent home and overhead electric, telephone and cable lines. Damage was estimated at $12,000.

The electric line damage caused the storm sirens to sound, and in the wake of the April 19 tornado, the sirens prompted dozens of calls to law enforcement officials.

Parsons police said the sirens were eventually turned off by Southwestern Bell after sounding for more than an hour.

The second fire, reported at 1:29 a.m. Sunday, destroyed a house whose occupants were in the process of moving and damaged an adjacent house, with damage estimated at $15,000.

Fire departments from Erie, Labette County, Osage Township, Altamont, Independence and Oswego helped respond to that fire.

The third call, a few minutes later, was to a fire at a detached garage. That fire destroyed a car, along with the building and its contents. Damage was estimated at $7,000.

The fourth fire was reported at Parsons Middle School at 1:50 a.m., where flames were visible through the window of a second-story room. Damage was estimated at $300.

No fire accelerants had been found, Baldwin said.

"They used existing materials," he said.

The Kansas Fire Marshal's Office is helping with the investigation, Baldwin said.

16-hour standoff ends when man falls asleep

NEWTON, Kan. —A 16-hour standoff between Newton police and a resident ended when the man went to sleep and officers burst into his home.

Wilhelm Smokorowski, 50, was charged Tuesday in Harvey County District Court with aggravated assault and felony interference.

The standoff ended 3 a.m. Tuesday when a SWAT team from McPherson broke down the door after Smokorowski went to sleep. His 86-year-old mother also was in the home. No one was injured.

Police Chief Ron Jackson said the incident began when Smokorowski went to Newton High School on Monday morning and was on his way to the library to do some research. He was confronted by staff because he failed to check in at Principal Kathy Wilson's office.

Smokorowski left after a confrontation, and school officials called 911.

Two Newton police officers were dispatched to his home. He came to the door, which was locked. The two officers asked the suspect to come to the porch and discuss why he had gone to the high school. Smokorowski refused, retreated into the house, and came back with a shotgun.

"One of our men said the suspect pointed the shotgun at him, so our men immediately retreated to cover and called for backup" at approximately 11 a.m., Jackson said.

Police shut off electricity to the neighborhood's streetlights, shrouding the area in darkness.

"It's been a very tense day," said neighbor Dave Wallace, who was unable to return home because of the incident and was waiting at the National Guard Armory. "Not knowing or not being able to find out what's going on has been tough.

"This is no big surprise. Anything that he doesn't like involving the city, the county or any kind of government is a big communist plot to him."

Bob Skillin, recycling program coordinator, will be able to do more now that K-State has funding for recycling all plastic, paper, newspaper, magazines, phone books, cardboard and aluminum.

University gains funds to increase recycling

By NANCY FOSTER
Kansas State Collegian

K-State now will have the funds to recycle all plastic, paper, newspaper, magazines, phone books, cardboard and aluminum collected on campus.

Prior to this year, all of these items were not able to be recycled due to a lack of funds, but after signing an $11,000 agreement with Pepsi-Cola and the National Association for PET Container Resources, the ability to recycle them will become a reality.

Bob Skillin, recycling program coordinator, was the first one to tackle the project when he was at the National Recycling Convention and heard NAPCOR had $35,000 to allocate in grant money.

Skillin, along with other K-State faculty members, worked in an attempt to receive part of the grant money. They contacted NAPCOR, requesting grant money and a baler. K-State was awarded $6,000, enough money to help start the program and purchase a large baler.

Pepsi also decided to contribute money to the recycling program, allocating $5,000 to K-State.

"The $5,000 from Pepsi is not part of the Pepsi contract. It's something they're doing in addition to the contract," said John Woods, director of facility services for the Division of Facilities. "They've been really generous."

As part of the agreement, K-State must provide more recycling bins around campus and educate students about recycling and the use of plastic. All of the money received through the program will go back to the program, Woods said.

K-State also is supporting the program by giving it $3,500 to pay for salaries, gas and oil used by the vehicles and for support services.

Woods said he predicted that K-State might make up to $15,000 this year due to recycling, compared to the $350 a year the program made three years ago. In the past two years, K-State has pursued recycling more aggressively, but due to a lack of funds and help, could only do so much, Woods said.

K-States signs $11,000 agreement with Pepsi-Cola and National Association for PET Container Resources to help with recycling costs.

Now, not only has K-State received two grants, but Howie's Recycling Inc. will pay K-State for all recycled items — not just aluminum — and for the first year, cardboard will be recycled.

"We've been quite fortunate," Woods said.

Howie's also provided the program with one large and one small baler, and Wal-Mart said it would help provide the bins.

Woods said the funds were coming at a good time, because the amount of waste collected from the fiscal year 1999 was more than doubled compared to the previous year due to the collection of cardboard.

Both Woods and Skillin said they are excited about the program, but that one thing remains the most important.

"The material is being recycled at this point and not going to the landfill," Woods said.

"For every ton that we keep from going to the landfill, we could save $33, because that's how much it costs to take it to the landfill."

Instead of paying landfill costs, Woods said university administration will pay $33 per ton to the recycling program.

Skillin said the recycling will help cut down on waste in the future, and their ultimate goal is to cut down on at least one-third of the cost previously spent.

"We owe Howie's a great deal of thanks. He's been real instrumental in giving us an outlet to take the material. Without Howie's, we wouldn't be near this far. Other universities don't have a Howie," he said. "And they can't afford for big companies to come in and take their materials."

Students can register on campus to vote

By NICK BRATKOVIC
Kansas State Collegian

K-State students looking to register to vote in the November election have a few options, but so far students said they are having difficulty identifying with a candidate.

"I think one of the main reasons more students aren't interested in the election is because the issues they talk about don't necessarily affect our age group," said Heather Burch, junior in secondary education, art and theater. "Like Social Security, they talk a lot about it, but none of us will likely reap the benefits of it."

Still, while the elections issues might not strike a chord with college-aged voters, Jolene Campbell, deputy county clerk, said there a lot of options for students looking to vote. Students can register at outposts on campus, Campbell said, either at the office of Student Activities and Services or online.

Students can register online by logging onto the KATS and clicking on the "register to vote" icon. They then will be directed to another Web site. Once filled out, the form can be printed and mailed in.

Carla Jones, associate dean of student life, said the online program is part of an effort by the federal government to get students to vote.

"Last fall we received information from the federal government, asking us to give students access to voter registration forms," Jones said.

Register to Vote

Here are some locations where students can register or pick up a form:

- Office of Student Activities and Services
- Dillons in Westloop Shopping Center
- Manhattan Public Library
- City Hall
- County Clerks office, 110 Courthouse Plaza

Off-campus students also can register to vote at Dillons stores or at her office, Campbell said. However, she said voter registration appears to be somewhat down, and at the primary election Aug. 1, turnout was poor.

"We had two — one was a provisional ballot, but there were actually two that showed up at the poll," Campbell said.

The low turnout could be attributed to the lack of heated races in the primary, she said.

Dustin Dibble, junior in construction science, said he hasn't given the upcoming election much thought, as he has been focusing more of his attention on getting his semester started.

"I haven't really paid much attention to it," he said. "I have been more concerned about getting ready for school. Really, it is not a big issue right now."

Campbell said about 29,900 Manhattan residents are registered. She also said it would be difficult to gauge a percentage of residents, because the current census has not been tallied.

Some students also said it is early to get interested in the election.

"I don't really have time to follow it right now," said Aimee Trietken, freshman in nutrition and exercise science. "I'll vote, but I just haven't had time to watch any of that stuff."

Students who haven't registered to vote have until Oct. 5 to do so, and those students looking to file an absentee ballot can do so between Oct. 18 and the Monday before the election.

Development would improve city's revenue

Members of the Manhattan community should not be afraid to further develop Third Street.

The new First National Development proposal that could bring retail businesses such as SuperTarget to Manhattan shows improvement from the company's original proposal.

In the first proposal, 50 business and residential properties were to be involved in relocation. The current proposal would require movement of less than 30 properties. The company's willingness to rework the contract shows city officials their willingness and true interest in this project and Manhattan.

We hope community members will open their minds to the new proposal before the scheduled public hearing in October. Even though revenue gathered from the taxes would be frozen during development, payoff would come with completion of the project. Initiative also is shown through the proposal's ideas for relocation of current businesses and development of a housing area on Third Street.

Increasing the number of retail businesses in Manhattan only would decrease the money cities lose providing the services offered through this development. It is time for Manhattan to grow at the rate of the university.

Learning from

MISTAKES

Failure can lead to greater understanding, introspection.

KEN WELLS

It was spoken and true long before Chef on "South Park" announced it: "There's a time and place for everything, and it's called 'college.'"

The environment we exist in now is oddly suited to producing and tolerating mistakes. It houses diversity and resources in fantastic proportions, giving us plenty of opportunities to succeed in thousands of endeavors we'd never dream ourselves into. And, of course, for every opportunity for success is an equal and opposite potential for failure.

You're not going to bat a thousand. You will fail. And that's great.

Why? Well, (a) it makes me feel better about *my*self and (b) you stand a chance at learning when you fail. You learn nothing through success other than the happy mantra of "I rule!" Failure leads to introspection, to looking at yourself, to finding your own flaws. Sometimes this leads to change, to growth — and that's a success all its own.

So make mistakes. Make lots of them. It's OK. As long as you're learning something from them and not constantly making the same mistake with boneheaded determination, this environment is generally pretty forgiving. In fact, make a mistake smorgasbord — one of each flavor, to cover all the bases.

Take your books the first day of class.

Mistake experience for wisdom. Tenure means never having to say you're sorry for ignoring teaching evaluations or any form of critical input, because, hell — you've got tenure!

Even if your graduate teaching assistant is young, articulate and quickly comprehensible doesn't mean the department sees her or him as anything more than a number. They evoke no more authority or respect than the UPS driver.

Stop and talk on the sidewalk between classes, not bothering to make way for the students on a dead run from McCain Auditorium to Ackert Hall.

Promise your high school friends — the ones not just a thousand miles away in body but drifting farther away from you in your mind — that you'll write them.

Assume that since classes aren't in session, you won't get a ticket.

Go out with someone you work with.

Go out with someone who hates you.

Go out with someone who hates themselves. (All three might be overkill and/or fatal to all involved. Let's not go overboard, here. One at a time, grasshopper, one at a time.)

Keep thinking that this campus is all teachers and students. Forget that the secretaries, custodians, security personnel, cooks, cashiers, librarians, clerks and countless others keep this place running. Don't think that they might be worth knowing.

Get wrapped up in the quest for the perfect grade point average to the exclusion of all else. Ignore the hard classes. Thinking is for other people.

Mistake an opportunity to speak for actually having something to say. (This paper is often a good place to watch this misperception reappear on a regular basis.)

Don't make copies of your apartment or your car keys, because you'll never forget yours.

You've got your financial aid money. Don't get any ramen noodles. You'll be able to ration this money to the end of the semester. Emergencies don't happen. In a related error, completely overlook all information on medical insurance and the Office of Student Life, because your instructor will believe that your parents are dying.

(True story — one of my instructors didn't believe me when I told her I had a parent dying. Guess my instructor just thought I wanted out of class before spring break. Yes, here's a related mistake — assume that just because your instructors look human that they really care about you. True, most do, but some just don't — because they have tenure!)

Skip breakfast. Ignore the healing power of coffee.

Don't challenge a single belief you have. Just steel-reinforce your brain pan to keep out all those demonic external thoughts. Keep your sacred cows carefully arrayed, plodding inside your skull, and they should have plenty of room to graze.

Fear your parents and never challenge their perceptions of you, because they'll never understand you changing.

Don't rent black-and-white movies, because anything made before color just isn't worth watching.

Shell out $11 (or whatever our bankrupt movie monopoly is charging for a movie anymore) for a ticket, popcorn and drink for a movie you can't wait to get out of. Share and amplify the pain — take a date.

Think "The Blair Witch Project" is true.

Think "Office Space" is fiction.

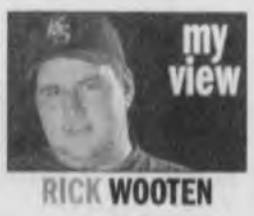
Don't listen to Wildcat 91.9. They're just students, so they can't be worth listening to, right?

When you drive by a friend on campus, stop in the middle of the road and begin a conversation. Or just park at the end of a parking lot row and wait for a space to open up. Courtesy takes a back seat to your own personal satisfaction, after all.

Remember that all groups on campus are homogenous. All dorm rats are the same, all frat boys and sorority girls are interchangable, and old people like me just don't got no skills. Meet one and you've met 'em all.

And the big one: don't ask them out, because they'll never go out with you. And you'll forget about that opportunity.

... Yeah, like hell you will.



So go ahead. Make 'em all now, get 'em out of your system and evolve as quick as you can. Your sanity might very well depend on it.

Oh. And don't taunt the squirrels. I mean it.

Parking, construction, wardrobe concerns await students at launch of new semester

RICK WOOTEN

Cheers to the beginning of another semester in Manhattan. Everyone should be having a good time here, including myself, but there are a few problems that I would like to address that concern most, if not all, of you. Together, we can work to solve these problems.

Why is it you can't leave your car parked overnight in Aggieville? General wisdom says it is because the street sweepers need to go through and cleanse our streets. But I would feel much more comfortable dodging puke piles than knowing there are drunks needlessly driving home to avoid a parking ticket. City Hall, are you hearing this?

While still on the subject of Aggieville, is it possible that we might be able to get some kind of "cruising" law on the books to discourage these high school students from driving in circles around 12th and Moro streets? If it isn't bad enough that we have to dodge puke piles, we also must deal with some 16-year-old guy who drives his 1993 Civic by the bars 28 times so that he might get a passing glance at our good-looking college women. Make these kids stay at home and watch the WB.

Many of you who make your permanent home east of Manhattan can sympathize with me on my next annoyance. With road construction between Topeka and Exit 313 totaling more than 20 miles, it becomes quite a problem when one of the vehicles in a single lane of traffic decides to go 52 in a 60 mph zone. I realize that this area is in the extreme eastern Rocky Mountains, but one would think that somehow these people might be able to push their right feet down a little harder and make their 2 1/2 cylinder Geos possibly redline while going up a 4-degree incline. I am already in the process of figuring out how I can mount a cattle guard on the front of my minivan.

Finally, something else has drawn my attention that I cannot find an acceptable explanation. Why do people buy brand-new hats that are "pre-worn-in"? Who are these people wearing upside-down and backwards sun visors? What possible purpose does this serve? After some deliberation, I have decided that it must be as a water-collection device to nourish seeds from a Chia Pet they have planted on their heads. Regardless of whether this theory is correct, we should not be cutting the tops off our caps, and we should leave the sun visors to the LPGA tour.

Mitsubishi recalls vehicles; company admits cover-up

By YURI KAGEYAMA
The Associated Press

TOKYO — For years, employees at Mitsubishi Motors Corporation tucked consumer complaints about auto defects in a special place, a file known to workers as "H," an abbreviation for a Japanese word for hiding something.

The complaints by Japanese consumers never were reported to authorities — they stayed filed, awaiting clarification, explanation or documentation that usually never came.

The defects, including failing brakes, fuel leaks, malfunctioning clutches and fuel tanks prone to falling off, were fixed on a case-by-case basis to avoid any humiliating recalls.

As it announced another recall Tuesday affecting 88,000 cars and trucks, half of them in the United States, Mitsubishi acknowledged the longtime coverups.

In documents submitted to the government, the automaker said the practice dated back to 1977 and was carried out with the full knowledge of workers, managers, and even one current board member.

The revelation is a blow to the struggling Japanese automaker, which is likely to face an uphill battle regaining consumers' shattered faith in its ethics and the quality of its vehicles. Last month, the heavily indebted Mitsubishi signed a deal to sell German-American Daimler-Chrysler a 34- percent stake.

"It's definitely another problem for Mitsubishi Motors," said Noriyuki Matsushima, auto analyst with Nikko Salomon Smith Barney in Tokyo. "It can hope to win back social credibility once it takes proper steps to rectify its mistakes."

The recalls announced Tuesday by Mitsubishi are based on eight defects and cover about 45,000 vehicles exported to the United States. Those were in addition to worldwide recalls announced last month on 532,000 vehicles.

Brakes might fail in the Montero sport-utility vehicle because of leaking brake fluid, a chassis joint might come loose in the Galant sedan and the Mirage might stall out because of a defective engine shaft.

Mitsubishi Motors America spokesman Kim Custer said the U.S. complaint system is separate from the one used in Japan. U.S. makers already recalled vehicles for some of the same problems its Japanese parent now is authorizing domestically, he said.

At a time when Mitsubishi is struggling to turn around lagging sales, the recalls will cost $69 million.

For the fiscal year ending in March, Mitsubishi posted $213 million in losses. The company had gone into the black in the previous fiscal year but posted a loss of $940 million in fiscal 1997, when auto demand slumped at home and the rest of Asia.

Online textbook sales increase

■ Internet provides ease, convenience to students.

By BRIAN OLBERDING
Kansas State Collegian

Students can buy almost anything with a simple point and click of the mouse — including textbooks.

Most bookstores now are online or have plan s to be in the near future, and a number of online booksellers, such as VarsityBooks.com and Amazon.com, have emerged.

At Varney's Book Store the option for students to purchase textbooks online has been available for four years, while the K-State Union Bookstore does not have the option.

Carrie Mitchell, assistant manager of the book division at the Union Bookstore, said the store hopes to have online capabilities in about a month, as soon as legal issues of its contract with the Nebraska Book Company are worked out.

"We're being very cautious this time, because last year the company we were going to have set up the system went bankrupt," Mitchell said.

Steve Levin, assistant manager of Varney's, said the number of people using its Internet site to buy textbooks has grown steadily since the store went online.

"The Internet is especially convenient for students who have their schedules set but live away from Manhattan during the summer," Levine said.

However, most of Varney's business still is through customers in the store, and even those who order online usually pick their orders up at the store instead of having them delivered.

Levin said many of the online bookstores are doing poorly because they can't give the customer service that a store can provide, and because many of them lure students in with deals for books that the site cannot provide.

Sam Heitner, spokesman for VarsityBooks.com, said his company has been doing well, with revenues steadily rising since the site opened in 1998.

"Last year we grossed $12 million in revenue, and it has steadily grown since we have started," Heitner said.

Student Monitor, a nationally syndicated market research study of college students, has polls from both 1999 and 2000 showing VarsityBooks.com as the most visited textbook web site and having the highest brand awareness in the college market for both years.

Freshman awarded scholarship for asthmatic athletes

By DAN GILLENWATER
Kansas State Collegian

Janelle Wright has the "Will to Win."

Wright is one of five athletes nationwide to receive the "Will to Win" scholarship, sponsored by the Schering/KEY pharmaceutical company. The award is presented to asthmatic athletes who excel in their sport.

Upon learning she had received the "Will to Win" award, Wright was stunned.

"I was completely shocked," she said. "They had contacted me and I knew that I was a candidate, but then I did not hear from them in a while."

When Wright did hear back from the founders of the scholarship, she was invited to New York City from July 26 to 30 for the awards weekend and press conference.

Wright's mother, Lynette, and her sister Carmen, who also is a member of the Wildcat track and field team, accompanied her to the Big Apple. There, Wright was awarded the one-time grant to a school of her choice — K-State.

Now a freshman, Wright has battled asthma since her diagnosis at the age of 14 months. With treatment and medicine, she was able to put together a career at Topeka High School that consisted of winning seven gold Kansas State medals and rewriting the record books in both the hurdles and high jump.

Wright is a Junior Olympic champion and, according to head track coach Cliff Rovelto, her future looks bright.

"Janelle has tremendous potential and is certainly going to contribute to our team in a number of events," he said.

This season, Wright will begin another chapter in her track and field career. On top of the hurdles and the high jump, Rovelto said Wright might be used on the relay teams as well.

Although her asthma requires her to use an inhaler on a daily basis, she hasn't let her condition slow her down.

"If anything, asthma pushes me to work harder," Wright said. "It gives me one more thing to overcome. I don't think of asthma as a disadvantage. I think of it as motivation."

In fact, asthma is a common obstacle for many track stars. A study in the Journal of Allergy and Clinical Immunology stated that nearly 17-percent of U.S. athletes who competed in the 1996 Olympic Games in Atlanta reported a history of asthma or used asthma medications.

Despite this being more than twice the rate in the general population, these asthmatics earned medals at an equal rate with those non-asthmatic competitors.

Wright said her work ethic and determination have proved to be useful assets in chasing her dreams and conquering her goals.

130 teen-age golfers join to try to become the next TIGER WOODS

By JASON ARY
Kansas State Collegian

"I want to be the next Tiger Woods."

The phrase echoed throughout the rolling fairways of the Colbert Hills Golf Course last month as it was the host to the first-ever First Tee Academy.

The academy, which was a conglomerate of the Earl Woods National Youth Golf Academy, various First Tee chapters and Colbert Hills, brought nearly 130 teen-agers from across the nation together for a week of seminars, clinics, and, of course, lots of golf.

From July 22 to 29, LPGA and PGA professionals, including K-State alumnus Jim Colbert, were host to clinics that taught academy students about leadership and life skills they need to compete.

These lessons were not geared just for life on the course, however.

"We didn't want it to be a classroom setting where they feel like they come to the First Tee Academy and then have to see the guy in the white jacket for two hours."

Dedric Holmes, director of programs

The clinics also were set up to educate teen-agers on valuable life skills, including devotion, discipline, and a hard work ethic.

Throughout the week, academy students learned techniques on chipping, putting and etiquette, while valuable life lessons were added.

Great care was taken to avoid a school-like setting.

"We didn't want it to be a classroom setting where they feel like they come to the First Tee Academy and then have to see the guy in the white jacket for two hours," Dedric Holmes, director of programs, said. "They want to learn how to set goals on the golf course, then as we do that, we also teach them how to set goals with their studies and at home."

Holmes began his career in golf through football. In 1991, Holmes was the starting running back for the University of Nevada-Reno. While attending the university, he landed a job working at a local golf course.

Holmes had little experience in the sport, however. The closest he had come to playing the game was when he used to hit balls of electrical tape as a kid with old, beat-up golf clubs.

"I never thought about watching Jack Nicklaus or anyone else on TV, because there was no one on the PGA tour I could identify with," Holmes said. "There were no icons I could see and say, 'Oh, I want to play that game.'"

Yet it didn't take long for Holmes to discover the game once he began working on the golf course. Within a few months of working on the course, Holmes had already bought a used set of clubs and was spending every free moment away from work, and practice, on the course.

Not everyone welcomed Holmes' presence on the golf course, however.

While golf was a popular sport in Nevada, minorities were not often seen, or welcomed, on some courses. Recent studies by the National Golf Foundation show that while 33.7 million Americans picked up a golf club last year, only about 5 percent were minorities.

Lack of access, economic backgrounds and even prejudicial behaviors on behalf of some golf clubs have been noted as the reason why there is such a lack of interest in the minority community.

Nonetheless, Holmes continued to battle the sandtraps, and glares, and within a few years he climbed to the position of manager of junior golf and minority affairs with the U. S.Golf Association.

In 1997, Holmes relocated to San Diego, where his experiences with First Tee began.

The initial stages of the First Tee program began in 1997. Holmes, along with Virginia Commonwealth psychology professor Steve Danish, the Stanford Research Institute, and countless others, laid out a program that was designed to provide children of all ages, races and economic backgrounds with the opportunity to learn and play the sport of golf. Men's golf team prepares to tee off

By NICK BRATKOVIC
Kansas State Collegian

Entering the inaugural season of Colbert Hills for the men's golf team, head coach Tim Norris said he's excited about his team's progress.

The schedule has the Cats competing against teams in their district, which is important to the team's development, Norris said.

"We are playing against teams that we need to be playing against," Norris said. "Everywhere we go, even to Florida and California, we will see teams from our district."

The Cats, who play a split schedule featuring a fall and spring season, have a common goal to get better as the season goes along, Norris said.

"Our goal right now is to get a good win/loss record and move on to a regional," he said. "You could go to an event that is a ways away and play teams outside of the district, but that is just like going on a field trip. We want to go to tournaments where every shot counts."

The Cats open their season Sept. 11, with the Fairway Club Invitational in Lincoln, Neb., K-State's first trip back to the state since 1988.

The team then travels to Dellwood, Minn., to take part in the PSI Net Collegiate Invitational on Sept. 18-19, and then for the Kansas Invitational in Lawrence.

Perhaps the highlight of the team's fall season will be the Jim Colbert Intercollegiate on Oct. 2-3. It will be a 10-team event, featuring Big 12 opponents Iowa State, Missouri and Texas Tech.

Norris said he expects the course to be well-received by teams playing in the tournament.

"I think teams are going to be impressed with Colbert Hills, and we hope to have a home field advantage," he said. "A lot of the problems players have with Colbert Hills is due to the depth perception.

"There is a comfort level you gain by playing a course over and over and we have logged a number of hours on Colbert Hills this summer, so we feel we have an advantage as long as we play well."

The team then ends the fall portion of their season with the Purina Classic, in St. Charles, Mo., before kicking off the spring season in February.

Football offensive line battles troubles off-field, relies on back-ups for support

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

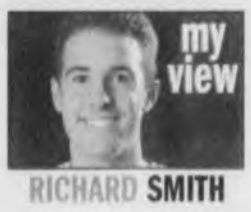
A great man once said that whatever doesn't kill you can only make you stronger. As far as K-State football is concerned, that man could have been a Wildcat offensive lineman.

The K-State offensive line has had its share of troubles prior to the 2000 campaign.

In particular, the off-the-field exploits of junior right tackle Thomas Barnett have been well documented.

Last spring, Barnett was charged with kidnapping former K-State running back Leon Edwards in an attempt to retrieve a stolen shotgun. The charges eventually were dropped, and Barnett rejoined the team. He now occupies a second-string spot.

The subsequent offensive line repositioning caused by the uncertainty of Barnett's return could have greatly weakened the trench squad. Instead, the offensive line solidified by forcing more players into possible gametime roles, John Robertson, listed at right tackle, said.



"Of course people have problems off the field, and what we try to do is to keep that off the field," Robertson said. "One good thing that has happened is that we've been able to work a lot of different guys in on the offensive line. So, if somebody does go down or somebody has a problem, we have guys that can step up.

"I feel strong about our continuity between the five of us (starters), so I think that's still going to be there."

One lineman who hasn't steadily improved during the preseason is Oshin Honarchian. Originally projected to start at left guard, Honarchian has been demoted to second-string because of his play during practice.

Homemade football quiz helps students get back into learning

RICHARD SMITH

In my neverending quest to provide a public service with my columns, I'm going to help whip you back into test-taking shape today by talking about football. Don't question the logic. Just trust me — it all works out somehow.

My second-annual preseason college football quiz is semi-guaranteed to repair your brain from a summer's worth of excess, and might just give you some insight on what to expect from the coming season (I hit on 100 percent of my predictions in last year's quiz).

Top scorers get a sense of fulfillment and accomplishment, as well as a half-full packet of Chiclets I found in my glove compartment. Knock yourselves out, and I'll bill you at the end of the semester for any improvement in your grades.

Q. Who should be K-State's quarterback this year?

Jonathan Beasley, Ell Roberson, Zac Burton, Michael Bishop (still)

A. Beasley

I can understand why everyone is skeptical. Sure, he completed only 44 percent of his passes. Sure, his throws often seemed as if they had to stop for directions on the way to the receiver. But that was last year.

This year, Beasley is healthy and more relaxed. In interviews, he seems much more poised and confident, and at Fan Appreciation Day, Beasley threw the ball with an authority and accuracy that he was missing last year.

Word out of K-State camp is that Beasley could be on the verge of a breakout year similar to Bishop's in 1998, and they know more about football over there than I do, so I'll take it. For the last time, give Beaz a chance. You might be pleasantly surprised.

Q. Who will win the Big 12 title?

Nebraska, Texas, K-State, Oklahoma

A. K-State

Wildcat fans, you now can start showering me with praise. Nebraska fans, you now can start showering me with poorly worded e-mails. Go to it.

Yes, Nebraska is the No. 1 team in every single poll that matters (though inane, the Associated Press and coaches polls do technically matter). Yes, Nebraska's offense will be brutally effective, and Eric Crouch probably is the best quarterback in the league.

But there are two big catches. The Husker defense lost almost every significant player from last year. And this year, it has to come to K-State to do its damage, which is a bit tougher than winning in front of its Great Wall of China-sized press box and deafening sound bounced off it by 80,000 red-clad maniacs.

Not many national experts give the Cats much chance. And on paper they don't have one. But we've all seen how predictions work out. This "expert" says call your bookies now — K-State will come away with its first-ever Big 12 crown. I hope.

Q. KU's football team will be ...

Average, Mediocre, So-so, Not as good as KU fans think

A. Pick your favorite — they all work.

Some KU fans (and delusional, overrated fullbacks) are predicting the Hawks' first victory over K-State since, roughly, the Carter administration. They dream of contending in the Big 12 title chase. No on both counts — it's not gonna happen.

KU has some good players and certainly should be better than last year. But contrary to what the Jayhawks' talent-starved fans think, they don't have any GREAT players, which are a prerequisite to contend in the Big 12 North.

KU will beat up on the other second-tier Big 12 teams and qualify for a bowl but will have to content itself with another drubbing (my guess: 45-14) by the Wildcats and a fourth-place finish in the division. But at least it still has Roy.

Q. Who will be the biggest disappointment in the Big 12?

Oklahoma, Texas A&M, Colorado, Nebraska

A. A&M (with Oklahoma nipping at their heels)

I'm all for defense. Defense wins championships. I'm hip to that. But you have to score at least two points to win in football, and I don't know if the Wrecking Crew has a season's worth of safeties in them.

That whole "forward pass" thing has been little more than rumor in College Station, and A&M's offense lived up to its dismal standard last year.

Now they hope to replace departed quarterback Randy McCown with three guys whose names I can't remember now, and probably still won't at the end of the season. Pair them with a mediocre running game, and you get a team that will be lucky to win six ballgames, regardless of how well the defense plays.

GOLF

began his new job as a director of a golf academy and learning center, decided to use his facility as one of the first to practice the curriculum of the First Tee program.

With assistance from the PGA and the World Golf Foundation, the First Tee program was implemented at several golf courses and learning centers.

It quickly began to show a promising future.

Spreading from course to course, the program flourished, expanding to a network of 93 chapters nationwide in only three years.

Earlier this year, Colbert Hills launched its Earl Woods National Youth Golf Academy, which was a partner of the First Tee program. Named after the father of PGA great Tiger Woods, the academy was dedicated in Woods' honor, for his many lifelong accomplishments.

In 1953, Earl Woods became the first black man to break the color barrier in the Big 7 Conference. Woods then went on to join the army, rise to the rank of lieutenant colonel and volunteer for two tours of duty in Vietnam.

The Woods Youth Academy, along with other First Tee programs and Colbert Hills, combined efforts to make the inaugural year of the First Tee Academy a reality.

First Tee chapters from across the nation chose a member to attend, while many local chapters sent two delegates. Scholarships for each teen chosen were donated by Fred Tattersall, a long-time golf supporter, who dedicated them in honor of Dr. William Powell, the first black man to construct a golf course.

In addition to the lessons the many teen-agers learned, many First Tee directors made the trip to Colbert Hills as well, since the program also was designed as a training center for the instructors of the various First Tee chapters.

At the academy, the instructors learned different ways to teach and incorporate valuable lessons, which they took back to implement at their own local facility.

While First Tee's main mission is still to erect learning centers in non-traditional areas, the success of the first annual First Tee Academy undoubtedly will expand the program's area of focus in the future.

As Holmes put it, "First we're about building facilities ... to introduce the game of golf to kids, and from within, to introduce them to life skills that we believe through golf these kids will learn."

In fact, the junior actually has taken a step back, head coach Bill Snyder said. Basically out of the playing-time rotation in the line, Honarchian has a long road back to regain his starting position.

Snyder remains optimistic about the guard's chances of improving, however.

"That doesn't mean if he attempts to stay competitive and works real hard at that, then he has the opportunity to get himself back in the mix," Snyder said.

In the meantime, Honarchian will be replaced with, depending on the scenario, either Robertson or sophomore Steve Washington. Robertson has the experience, but Washington, who weighs in at 315 pounds, is the biggest man in the two-deep.

However, the left guard position most likely will be filled byRobertson.

"I'll probably be playing a little more guard," Robertson said. "But that doesn't mean I can't step in there at tackle and play the whole game if necessary."

The uncertainty at left guard leaves Robertson as a potential starter at two positions, left guard and right tackle.

If he should take over the guard position, Barnett will assume the right tackle spot, Snyder said.

Whatever the lineup, the depth of the line will allow the Cats to have a talented player in every position, Robertson said.

It is difficult to tell from preseason drills, but this offensive line could have a tremendous year, quarterback Jonathan Beasley said.

"They have really gelled the past couple of weeks," Beasley said. "They could at least be just as good as last year."

The bond between Beasley and center Randall Cummins is particularly strong after starting together last year.

"They have really gelled the past couple of weeks. They could at least be just as good as last year."

Jonathan Beasley, quarterback

"He's just like another teacher out there," Beasley said.

Cummins and the entire line might find itself in another teaching role when K-State plays Iowa on Saturday.

The Hawkeye line starts two sophomores and only one senior. However, K-State is not taking Iowa lightly.

"Iowa looks like a real good defensive line," Robertson said. "Their record last year doesn't reflect the team they are. We're gonna be ready."

Commission considers new uses for former police, jail buildings

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan City Commission discussed the future of the soon-to-be-vacated Riley County Police Department and jail buildings Tuesday night.

The RCPD is expected to leave the 2.9-acre area — bounded by Pierre Street, 6th Street, Colorado Street and Juliette Avenue — by Thanksgiving in favor of the new Law Enforcement Center being built at the junction of Seth Child Road and Kansas Highway 18. Since the County Commission already has stated it has no use for the building, ownership reverts to the city.

City Planner Eric Cattell said previous citizen input strongly supported preserving green space as a community park. The western section, Cattell said, was suggested as an informal play area, and the northeastern section was proposed as a pocket park, appealing to the elderly.

Resident Tanya Bachamp, who lives across the street from the green space, said she has seen it used successfully already for soccer, flag football and day camps. Opening the jail's basketball court to the public would be an even greater improvement, she said.

"[The basketball court] doesn't necessarily need the 6-foot barbed wire fence around it," she said.

Cattell said citizen ideas were not as uniform on uses for buildings on the grounds, such as the limestone jail built in 1940 and an administrative building built in the early 1970s. Ideas included a Parks and Recreation Office, a juvenile detention facility and a community center.

Some options already are unlikely, if not impossible. The area was dedicated as a public square in 1858 on the original plat of the city.

Resident Clinton Hamilton asked why the area couldn't be sold, and profits applied toward the cost of the law enforcement center. City Attorney William Frost said Kansas Attorney General Carla Stovall already has interpreted that the land's dedication status must be used for the enjoyment of the general public. That means the city can't sell the property or give it to a private group.

"What it boils down to," Frost said, "is the person who owned it dedicated it to us with a very specific purpose in mind."

One idea mentioned prominently in the meeting was moving the Municipal Court offices into the area. Cattell said the offices pay $25,000 a year at Colony Square downtown and are short on operating and records space. Another idea examined was to use the area as the RCPD's downtown substation.

If they are reused, the buildings will need work. Initial reports say the buildings are structurally sound, but the jail and administration buildings contain lead paint and asbestos. The jail building also is not ADA accessible.

Commissioner Bruce Snead, however, did mention the city's 2001 budget planned $300,000 for renovations.

Fuel-tank explosion cause of TWA crash

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Despite all the fears and conspiracy theories, the conclusion is inescapable that an explosion of vapors in a fuel tank is what brought down TWA Flight 800 four years ago at a loss of 230 lives, a top federal investigator concluded Tuesday.

Investigators cannot be certain what ignited the blast, but the most likely cause was an electrical short in wiring inside the tank, said Bernard S. Loeb, aviation safety director of the National Transportation Safety Board.

The physical evidence, he said, leads to the inescapable conclusion that the plane was brought down by a fuel-air explosion inside the center wing tank.

As the meeting wore on, Robert Swaim of the aviation engineering section expressed the frustration of investigators seeking the source of ignition. "I would love to walk in here with a molten piece of wire and say, 'Here it is,'" he said.

Loeb said there was no evidence that metal fatigue, corrosion, recent repairs of the plane, a bomb or a missile was involved in the disaster off the coast of New York's Long Island.

John Seaman of Albany, N. Y., who lost his 19-year-old niece, Michelle Becker of St. Petersburg, Fla., was at the hearing, along with more than 75 relatives of victims.

"We waited four years for the truth," Seaman said. "We wanted an open, honest and scientific answer. I think that is what we got.

"The crash of Flight 800 graphically demonstrates that, even in one of the safest transportation systems in the world, things can go horribly wrong," said NTSB Chairman Jim Hall, opening the two-day meeting to study investigators' reports on the crash and its cause.

At the session, teams of investigators set forth their findings in detail, an effort to show that the agency has made every possible effort to determine what happened and how it can be prevented.

Indeed, the center fuel tank came under suspicion early, and the agency has made several recommendations for improvements.

The Federal Aviation Administration, in turn, has issued 37 directives to airlines and aircraft makers for improvements, and is working on other possible changes including introducing nonflammable gas into partly full tanks and eliminating any possible source of sparks.

The NTSB findings, however well-documented, are unlikely to be accepted by dissenters with theories ranging from bombs to a Navy missile to air turbulence.

Some contend the government is trying to cover up the real cause, and one group, calling itself the TWA 800 Eyewitness Alliance, ran a full-page ad in Tuesday's Washington Times insisting missiles brought the plane down.

Local pines being killed by spread of wilt disease

By NANCY FOSTER
Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan's pine trees are rapidly dying, and K-State professors are looking for a way to prevent it.

The pine wilt disease is infesting and killing more scotch pine trees at K-State and in Manhattan than ever before. The disease is caused by a nematode, or a small, unsegmented worm, that infests itself into the abdomen of a beetle. The beetle travels from tree to tree, carrying the worm with it. The worm exits the beetle and buries itself in the sap of the tree, blocking the tree's pathway for water. Not being able to receive the necessary nutrients, the tree then dies.

"Unfortunately, there's no control for them," said Charles Barden, associate professor of horticulture, forestry and recreation. "There's not an opportunity to spray for the beetles, so you can't stop the spread."

The pine wilt disease has been around since 1975 in states as near as Missouri, but it didn't hit Kansas until recently.

"It's a relatively new pest in this part of the country," J. David Mattox, Manhattan forestry supervisor, said. "And, as more trees become infected, the more the disease is out there. I anticipate this being a significant problem."

Mattox said he thinks the problem will continue to build.

"It's gradually been getting worse, but this is the first noticeably bad year in Manhattan," Barden said.

Mattox said less than 5 percent of the scotch pine trees in Manhattan have been affected, but they are beginning to look for alternate trees to replace them.

"We will be looking into various other pines. The scotch pine will leave a big hole in evergreen material, but there are some other possibilities," he said.

Cutting the dead trees down and avoiding scotch pines in the future are the only possible attempts to prevent the disease, he said.

The problem is difficult to prevent, Barden said, because the beetles can be born with the worm already in them. This happens because the beetles feed on the branches of the trees, and then in late summer, lay eggs in them. When the beetles are larvae, they bore into the tree. Here is where the trees become infested with the worm: when the larvae becomes a beetle, it already carries the worm, spreading the disease from tree to tree.

Because of this, Barden and other K-State professors are working on creating a hybrid between a loblong and pitch pine tree as a longterm solution to the problem.

"We are testing to see if they're immune so they can replace the scotch pine," Barden said.

Sister Leo, played by Kelly Grecian, senior in music theater, looks down from a barn window during an Aug. 16 dress rehearsal of "Nunsense Jamboree" at the Columbian Theatre in Wamego. Performances of the musical will take place Friday through Sunday.

Wamego production company performs

'NUNSeNSe'

By JJ DUNCAN
Kansas State Collegian

Shedding all inhibitions in an attempt to entertain people as much as it can, the production company at the Columbian Theatre isn't afraid of a little "Nunsense."

The Columbian Theatre in Wamego performed the musical "Nunsense Jamboree" last weekend and will continue this weekend with shows at 7:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday and 2 p.m. Sunday. The musical, which has been a success for the production company previously, is a lighthearted comedy that is pure fun for the audience, director Scott Kickhaefer said.

"We chose 'Nunsense Jamboree' ostensibly because it's a real crowd-pleaser," he said. "This is the third in about six 'Nunsense' shows. We did one of them last year as our season opener, and it did real well for us, so we thought we'd follow that up."

STEVEN DEARINGER/ Collegian

Sister Amnesia, played by Christi Moore, sings one of her many songs in Nunsense Jamboree during a dress rehearsal at the Columbian Theatre in Wamego.

The comedy begins when Sister Amnesia takes a group of nuns on the road to follow her dream of becoming a country-western star.

The musical is unique because it eliminates the fourth wall between the actors and the audience through the interaction between the two.

In this way, it is fun for the cast as well as the audience, Kelly Grecian, senior in music theater, said. Grecian, who plays Sister Leo, said the musical has been a fun experience for her first attempt at theater.

"Many times the cast is up on stage, they do their thing and they're supposed to entertain the audience, but a lot of times there's this wall there," she said. "We get to get down and go out and shake people's hands and look them in the eye, and it's a lot of fun. I'm sure I'm really going to enjoy that aspect of it."

For the production, Kickhaefer brought in Christi Moore, a guest artist from New York, whose previous productions include a tour of "The Wizard of Oz." Kickhaefer, who works frequently with guest professional actors, said he thought the amateur cast stood to learn a great deal from a guest artist.

Moore said she is enjoying also playing the role of Sister Amnesia.

"Acting is a time that's just for me, where I don't have to be sister, daughter, mother, lover, friend ... it's for me," Moore said.

"Nunsense Jamboree" is not only a performance but also a dinner theater. Audience members have the option of eating dinner at 6 p.m. Friday and Saturday and 12:30 p.m. Sunday. This is just one more element that adds to the relaxed atmosphere the show promotes, Kickhaefer said.

Despite the light feel of the production, Kickhaefer said he was concerned some people might take offense to the show.

"Lots of times you get the feeling that 'Oh man, the Catholics are going to be so offended.' Well, it's the Catholics who usually love the show the most," he said.

The musical is meant to be pure fun for the audience. It is filled with comic musical numbers and jokes that will keep the audience's attention, Grecian said.

"I think people can definitely come to the show with the expectation of being entertained," she said. "There's something in the show for everybody. As slapstick as it might be, there is going to be something that each person will laugh at."

K-State instructors showcase their work at gallery

By JJ DUNCAN
Kansas State Collegian

If knowing an artist's work is to know the artist's soul, then the current show at the Strecker-Nelson Art Gallery in Manhattan is giving K-State students a chance to know their instructors in and out.

"The exhibit enables students to see the broader picture of this person who is their teacher. It helps them to understand this is how they see the world," said Barbara Nelson, co-owner of the gallery.

"Art of Kansas Architects" began Aug. 11 and will run through Sept. 23. The show features the work of architects across Kansas and much of the art was done by K-State instructors in the College of Architecture, Planning and Design.

The exhibit, which uses many artists who do not normally show their art in a commercial show, has been praised for the professional quality of its works.

"It amazes me to see what they have brought, and to see what they have brought is fine art," said Sam Nelson, framer at Strecker-Nelson.

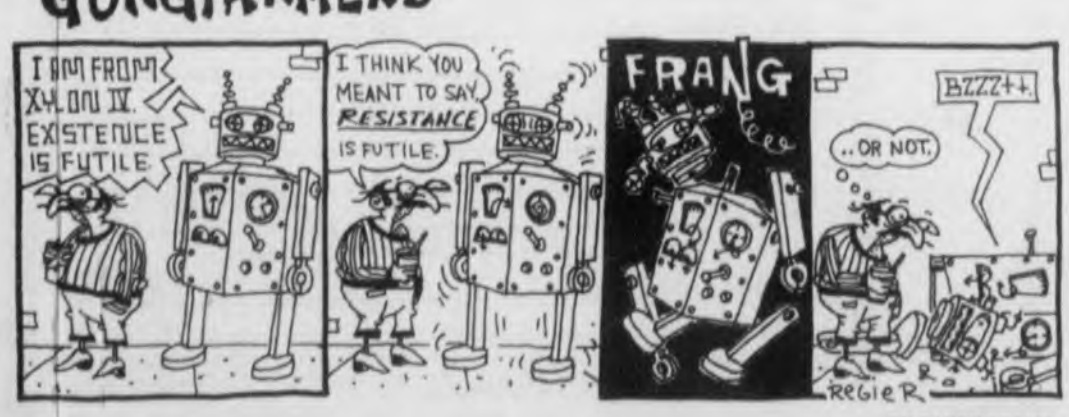
The show, which drew an opening audience of 140 guests, was conceived by the owners of the gallery, Jay and Barbara Nelson, because they began to notice many architects shared a passion for art, Barbara said.

James Jones, head of the Department of Architecture, said he was contacted by the gallery to find architects who would be interested in the project.

Jones, who has had experience with commercial art shows, contacted several people who had an interest in displaying their art. Soon, the project ballooned with more than 20 possible artists, 12 of which are in the show, Barbara said.

"All of it is for sale. This is a commercial gallery, so they are treated as any other professional artist here," she said.

The project gives students the chance to see their instructors as multi-dimensional people, and not just as teachers, Jones said. This helps professors' credibility by having examples when they tell their students to be creative.



"I think students love to see that the faculty can make things, do things, which require sublime skills, and many of our faculty are very talented," he said. "I think that helps faculty credibility. I think it helps faculty also to understand the difficulties of being creative, since this is what we ask our students to do."

Jones, who has sold more than 500 paintings, which have homes in at least half of the states and nine foreign countries, said that the gallery cannot receive too much credit for providing a venue for new artists to sell their work.

Other K-State faculty in the show include Dennis Law, dean of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design; Gene Ernst, emeritus professor; Bob Condia, associate professor of architecture; Richard Forsyth, professor of landscape architecture and Stephanie Rolley, associate professor of landscape architecture.

"These are architects whose professional disciplines are not painting, yet there is a very high level of quality," Jones said. "The show is really worth students going to see."

Fed abstains from raising rates

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Federal Reserve, citing strong productivity growth and a moderating economy, decided Tuesday against boosting interest rates for a seventh time in its campaign to fight inflation.

While still warning about the dangers that tight labor markets might spark inflation, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan and his colleagues included more upbeat language about the economy in explaining their latest decision. It marked the second meeting at which the central bank has left rates alone.

The more positive tone led some analysts to predict that the Fed was close to declaring a cease-fire in its drive to push interest rates higher in order to slow economic growth and keep inflation in check.

But other analysts said they still expected at least one more rate hike, probably after the Nov. 7 election. No economists predicted a rate boost at the Oct. 3 meeting, citing the Fed's longstanding preference to remain on the sidelines if at all possible in the closing weeks of a presidential campaign.

"I think conditions will allow them to wait until after the election before they consider another rate hike," said David Jones, chief economist at Aubrey G. Lanston & Co. in New York. "But I think there is a good chance of one more hike at either the November or December meeting."

Financial markets, which had widely anticipated the Fed's decision to leave rates alone, had little response to the mid-afternoon announcement. The Dow Jones industrial average finished the day up 59.34 at 11,139.14.

Over the past 14 months, the Fed has raised rates six times, pushing its target for the federal funds rate, the interest that banks charge on loans to each other, up to 6.5 percent, including a half-point increase May 16.

Those increases have raised the borrowing costs for millions of Americans with banks' prime lending rate, a benchmark rate for many consumer and business loans, now at a nine-year high of 9.5 percent. The prime rate stood at 7.75 percent before the Fed began pushing rates higher in June 1999.

The decision Tuesday marked the second meeting that the Fed has passed up the chance to raise rates for a seventh time.

Economists said the tone of Tuesday's four-paragraph statement explaining its actions was much more positive than the statement issued June 28.

"Recent data have indicated that the expansion of aggregate demand is moderating toward a pace closer to the rate of growth of the economy's potential to produce," a Fed spokesperson said Tuesday.

In June, the central bank had only said that the expansion might be moderating and signs of a slowdown still were tentative and preliminary.

In the new statement, the Fed also said that rapid advances in productivity have been raising the potential growth rate of the economy, a bullish statement missing from the June statement.

Various economists cited these more positive comments to bolster their positions that the Fed has finished raising rates.

"We believe the Fed is done," said Bruce Steinberg, chief economist at Merrill Lynch in New York. "We expect growth to remain within the Fed's 4-percent speed limit and inflation to be tame."

Steinberg said the economic growth in the April-June quarter was likely to be revised up Friday to a sizzling 6 percent, far above the 4.8 percent growth of the first quarter.

Scottish judges demand CIA evidence of bombing

The Associated Press

CAMP ZEIST, Netherlands — Scottish judges hearing the Lockerbie bombing trial called on the U.S. government Tuesday to fully declassify a batch of CIA cables containing information provided by a Libyan informant around the time of the 1988 airliner explosion.

As the trial resumed following a three-week summer recess, lawyers for two Libyan defendants accused of bombing Pan Am Flight 103 insisted the information was indispensable to their case. The explosion over Lockerbie, Scotland, killed 270 people, including 189 Americans.

Judge Ranald Sutherland said Scotland's chief prosecutor should use his best endeavors to ensure that all the material contained in these cables be disclosed. However, he added, "we appreciate that the documents are in the hands of the CIA, over which the court has no jurisdiction."

Earlier, prosecutors insisted the information censored from the cables was removed for reasons of U.S. national security and was not relevant to the Lockerbie disaster.

"The United States considers all of this material highly confidential," Lord Advocate Colin Boyd said.

Boyd said the deleted text referred to CIA agents real and code names, as well as locations and methods of intelligence gathering.

Abdul Majid Giaka, who has since defected to the United States and is in the U.S. federal witness protection program, reportedly saw one of the defendants place a suitcase containing the bomb on an airport conveyor belt in Malta, where all three worked for Libyan Arab Airlines allegedly as cover for their espionage activities.

Hurricane Debby strikes several Caribbean islands

By DAN PERRY
The Associated Press

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — Compact, quick-moving Debby became the first hurricane to make landfall this season, hitting several small Caribbean islands on a northwesterly route that menaced Puerto Rico and the Bahamas archipelago.

Forecasters said it was too early to gauge the threat to the U.S. mainland.

With winds up to 75 mph, Debby was a Category 1 hurricane, apparently causing little damage on Antigua, Anguilla and other small islands Tuesday morning. It then made a slight — but crucial — turn to the north that meant populous Puerto Rico and the vulnerable Dominican Republic could be spared the worst.

"We've fared well. I'm looking outside at my garden, which was devastated by Hurricane Lenny last year, and it still has flowers," said Glen Holm, director of the tourism bureau on the Dutch island of Saba.

On nearby St. Maarten, battered by hurricanes in recent years, a curfew was lifted and meteorologist Ashford James celebrated the passage of Little Debby.

Still, the threat was sufficient to disrupt life throughout the northern Caribbean as residents, tourists, businesses and authorities sprang into the routine — terrifying to some, exhilarating to others — of bracing for a storm.

A 78-year-old San Juan man died Tuesday, Puerto Rican police reported, when he fell off a roof as he tried to dismantle a television antenna.

In the U.S. Virgin Islands, the storm caused a few power outages but little damage. Airlines canceled flights, schools and banks closed, storekeepers nailed plywood to windows, cruise lines diverted ships and an oil refinery was partially shut down.

"Hitting the U.S. is not certain at all. It's too early to say right now if it will hit Florida or not," said Max Mayfield, director of the National Hurricane Center in Miami. If it did, it likely could approach Florida by Friday morning.

In Puerto Rico, a U.S. territory of 4 million people, there was relief at predictions Debby's eye would pass just north of the island, meaning a probability of lesser, tropical storm-force winds. Still, officials warned of life-threatening flash floods and mudslides.

"We're really concerned about Puerto Rico, always, just because of the high terrain they have down there," Mayfield said. "We're forecasting 4 to 6 inches (of rain), and they could have some locally heavier amounts up to 10 inches."

The U.S. Navy abandoned exercises near the outlying island of Vieques, moving 10 ships and two submarines 300 miles south.

At 3 p.m. EDT, Debby was centered about 35 miles northeast of San Juan, Puerto Rico. It was moving west-northwest near 20 mph carrying maximum winds of 75 mph, with higher gusts. Hurricane-force winds extended 25 miles from the storm's center and tropical storm-force winds another 175 miles.

Hurricane warnings were posted for the British Turks and Caicos islands and the southeastern Bahamas, and a hurricane watch was in effect for the central Bahamas and northern Haiti.

The twin-island nation of St. Kitts and Nevis was spared, enabling the continuation of Carifesta, a 35-nation arts and music festival that began Thursday.

In Cuba, a hurricane alert was declared for three northeastern provinces. Civil defense authorities cleaned lopped weak branches off trees and higher-than-normal waves and tides were reported on the northern coast.

"Hitting the U.S. is not certain at all. It's too early to say right now if it will hit Florida or not."

Max Mayfield, director of the National Hurricane Center

On St. Croix island, Hovensa, one of the largest oil refineries in the Western Hemisphere, shut down some processing units, spokesman Alex Moorhead said. Fears the facility would suspend activity completely had caused the price of oil futures to shoot up Monday.

In Puerto Rico, tourists boarded early morning flights from San Juan for the U.S. mainland.

Lane Goldberg, 16, of Westport, Conn., was with a youth group trying to get home after working on community service projects in Tortola.

"It's been crazy. Some kids were crying, kids were freaking out, parents were freaking out," Goldberg said. He was bumped from four flights at San Juan's airport.

Others were more relaxed.

"I hope it's over soon, because I need a suntan by Sunday," said Diana Chiquito of New York City, sunbathing on San Juan's Condado beach. Offshore, surfers enjoyed the higher waves.

Still churning in the northern Atlantic, hundreds of miles off Newfoundland, was Hurricane Alberto, the longest-lived August tropical storm on record. It formed Aug. 4.

Chance celebrating in 2 locations

STORIES BY SARAH McCAFFREY ■ PHOTOS BY EVAN SEMON

Wildcat fans looking for a chance to show their spirit before the Eddie Robinson Football Classic on Saturday at Arrowhead Stadium have several opportunities in Manhattan and Kansas City, Mo.

Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon in Manhattan is celebrating throughout the week, beginning with pregame festivities tonight.

"Each night is a big pep rally, and we'll be giving away tickets to the game," Chance manager Pete Anderson said.

Rusty Wilson, Chance owner, said the reason for the big promotion is to get everyone excited for the game. Local radio stations are also teaming up with Chance to help promote the game.

"We're doing a big promotion with K-ROCK 101.5 and KMAN 1350," Wilson said.

The pregame festivities continue Thursday night with a Purple Rave. Moro Street will be closed in front of Chance for the street party, and a disc jockey will play throughout the night. The Purple Rave is for all ages and is open to the public.

Anderson said he expects the turnout to be strong for the pregame festivities.

"Everyone is back in town. It's going to get the town rejuvenated," he said.

Besides the spirited festivities in Manhattan, there also will be pregame rallies at the Rusty's Last Chance located at 75th Street and Neiman Road in Shawnee, Kan.

"It's going to be a big deal," said Mark Miller, manager of the Shawnee location.

The party starts at the Shawnee Chance on Thursday with a live broadcast from a Kansas City, Mo., radio station. Kansas City's WHB-AM 810 "Between the Lines" sports radio will be broadcasting at 2 p.m.

The pregame activities continue Friday with an indoor and outdoor pep rally.

"We're hoping it will be a tremendous opportunity," Wilson said. "Chance will be there and [we're] going to be a big part of it."

Those who can't make the trip to the Shawnee Chance will still be able to experience the party in Manhattan. KMAN and K-ROCK will be broadcasting live from the bar Friday. The station will be airing "Powercat Gameday" with hosts Matt Walters, sports director at KMAN, and Tim Fitzgerald, editor of Powercat Illustrated.

The show follows a call-in format that will take questions about K-State football, the Big 12 Conference and related topics, Sonya Coppinger, KMAN marketing consultant, said.

Miller said he expects the turnout for the pregame festivities to be large.

"We have people from ages 21 and up, to families that come," he said. "K-State fans around Kansas City and K-State fans from Manhattan usually come. The bar is packed on game days."

Wilson echoed Miller's sentiments that the crowd at the Shawnee bar would be large and geared up for K-State football.

"We'll have a big hoopla there," he said. "Talk on the street is that people are going up to Last Chance."

Activities planned for largest crowd of fans

Crowds of 55,000 to 60,000 people are expected to descend to Kansas City, Mo., this weekend with the kickoff of the K-State football season in mind.

This following will set the record for the largest-ever number of K-State fans attending a game, said Allen Stetson, president of the Kansas City alumni club and co-chairman of Kansas City host committee for K-State involvement in the Eddie Robinson Classic.

The record-setting number of fans making the pilgrimage to Kansas City has prompted the Kansas City Catbackers and the Kansas City Alumni Club to organize several activities that will allow fans to showcase their purple pride.

"We're trying to make it a day for all types of fans, families and children," said Warren West, co-chairman of the Eddie Robinson Classic.

Friday morning will feature a golf tournament and outing at Iron Horse golf course in Leawood, Kan., beginning at 7:30 a.m. For those wishing to participate but not wanting to play in a tournament-style event, a golf outing will begin at 1 p.m. The deadline for the required pre-registration for the golf tournament is today.

Wildcat fans also can head out to Kauffman Stadium on Friday night for K-State Night at the Royals. The Kansas City Scholarship Fund for K-State students will receive $2 per ticket sold for each ticket purchaser who mentions K-State.

Other events for Wildcat fans to attend in Kansas City include the Wildcats in Westport Street Festival on Friday.

"It's going to be kind of like a road game where," West said. "One of our goals [is to show] Kansas City what it's like to have K-State fans in town. We want to get the love people."

The party starts in Westport at 2 p.m. with a live broadcast from WHB-AM 810 "Between the Lines" sports show.

A Wildcat pep rally will begin at 7 p.m. Lynn Dickey, Travis and Dirk Ochs, Stan Weber, Greg Sharp and Fred White are the featured speakers for the rally. Members of the K-State Marching Band, cheerleaders and the Classy Cats will be present to lead the crowd. Autographs and face painting will be offered during the rally, and characters from the Kansas City Renaissance Festival will be entertaining the crowd throughout the day.

The Kansas City Catbackers will be sponsoring a raffle at the pep rally. Prizes include a 32-inch television, two tickets to the Faith Hill concert, two tickets for Southwest Airlines and two tickets for admission, food and beverages at the Arrowhead Club on Saturday.

After the pep rally, there will be a Westport After Hours Celebration with music from a local Kansas City-area band. Sons Venezuela will play from 8:30 p.m. to midnight.

"Sons of Venezuela is sort of a salsa-type band with really high energy," West said. "We thought the band would be a hit with the crowd, especially the college students."

The Catbackers and the Kansas City alumni club expect a strong showing of K-State fans in Westport.

"We're extremely excited," Stetson said. "We expect Westport to look like it's St. Patrick's Day."

The anticipated turnout for the Wildcats in Westport Street Festival is expected to be around 10,000 people, West said.

"Kansas City is going to be a K-State town for the weekend," he said.

On the day of the game, the K-State Alumni Association will be sponsoring a pregame party in the south parking lot of Arrowhead Stadium. The pre-party will last from 10 a.m. to noon.

Reservations are required to attend the pre-party, with today as the deadline. Tickets to the pregame party are $20 each, which includes a buffet, access to a cash bar and K-State pompons and buttons.

Additional acres closed in Montana due to fires

By SUSAN GALLAGHER
The Associated Press

HELENA, Mont. — A federal agency closed an additional 1.3 million acres of its land in Montana on Tuesday to protect against the danger of western wildifires that have scorched an area the size of New Hampshire this year.

The move by the Bureau of Land Management came as Forest Service spokesman Ed Nesselroad said that agency was preparing to shut more of its land as well.

Closures ordered last week covered 6 million to 8 million acres of state, federal, tribal and private land in western Montana, the area hit hardest by wildfires. The latest shutdown extends to the east.

"With extreme fire conditions and limited firefighting resources, we want to provide for public safety and minimize the possibility of new fires," said Mat Millenbach, the Montana director of the Bureau of Land Management.

The bureau's decision is likely to further rankle outdoor enthusiasts who have seen the amount of land available for hiking, camping and fishing shrink.

"We recognize the hardship this places on recreationists, outfitters and guides and other forest and public-land users," Millenbach said. "However, the situation is extreme, and precautionary measures are needed to prevent further public safety concerns and natural resource impacts."

The land will not be open to the public for activities such as hiking, camping or fishing, mainstays of summer recreation in Montana, but the bureau order allowed exceptions for specified campgrounds and recreation areas. People still can cross the federal land for access to their homes.

The National Interagency Fire Center in Idaho said Tuesday that 79 fires were burning on 1.4 million acres in Arizona, California, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oklahoma, Texas, Utah and Wyoming.

The agency said wildfires have burned 5.7 million acres this year, or about 8,900 square miles, approximately the land size of New Hampshire.

On Tuesday, Montana had 29 large fires on 613,000 acres, the fire center reported. More than a third of the blackened land lay in the Bitterroot Valley of southwestern Montana.

In the month since Montana's fire season began, the burning has disrupted industries such as tourism and agriculture, drawn thousands of firefighters and sent smoke miles from the flames. On Tuesday, haze from Montana fires hung over Reno, Nev.

Thousands displaced from homes after Taiwan typhoon

By MARCOS CALO MEDINA
The Associated Press

TAIPEI, Taiwan — Typhoon Bilis roared across Taiwan today, bowling over power lines and trees, shutting down one of the world's busiest ports and forcing thousands from homes into makeshift rescue centers.

A construction worker was killed when a retaining wall collapsed and fell on him outside the capital, Taipei, and 10 people were missing after they were believed swept away in mudslides in southern Hualien and Kaohsiung counties.

Bilis was an especially powerful storm, but there were differing reports of its strength. The Joint Typhoon Warning Center in Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, said it had sustained winds as high as 161 mph, making it a Category 5 hurricane capable of causing catastrophic damage.

The Taiwan Central Weather Bureau measured the storm at 118 mph. Officials there said the discrepancy in wind speed partially was the result of Taiwan measuring the storm's intensity over a longer period.

By dawn today, the center of the storm was about 90 miles northwest of Taitung City in southern Taiwan, said Chien Kuo-chi, a forecaster at Taiwan's weather bureau.

More than 80,000 households across the island have lost power since the typhoon made landfall Tuesday night, and technicians braved rains to secure power towers to prevent more damage.

ago, the football schedule was out, but Foster said a home game was not scheduled for Oct. 21 at that time.

"We knew there was a home game Oct. 14, but that was it," he said.

Athletic Director Max Urick could not be reached for comment.

Bernie Haney, university Homecoming chairman, said he then made the mistake of scheduling Homecoming week during fall break.

"I had no idea it was fall break," he said.

"We had to choose between Texas Tech and Oklahoma, and we chose Texas Tech.

"It was an oversight on my part. I never even thought about it."

Student Body President Jake Worcester said the scheduling could defeat the purpose of fall break for some students.

"The intention of fall break was to provide students with time off between Labor Day break and Thanksgiving break," he said.

"Students could be more productive as students and faculty could be more productive as faculty if they could get some time away from the school environment.

"If students wanted to get away from school and go home and relax, now there's a home game and lots of activities that people will want to go to."

Scott Kice, homecoming chairman for Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity, said it is unfortunate the break is during homecoming.

"All the people involved in homecoming in any way, shape or form can't leave school that weekend," he said.

"A lot of people would want to get away, but we're tied to the school."

Dan Scheffler, sophomore in business, said he will skip the football game and homecoming festivities.

"I think I'll go home," he said. "I normally would go to the game, though. It was poor scheduling."

Tasha Naegele, sophomore in human ecology and mass communications, said she will also go home during the three-day weekend.

"I would normally go to the game, but I'll probably just go home," she said.

She said she wished K-State had coordinated events more effectively.

"It would have been nice if break had been during an away game," she said.

The idea of using fall break to extend Thanksgiving break by a day did come up, Foster said, but they decided having it so late in the year wouldn't accomplish its goal.

"Thanksgiving is too close to the end of the semester," he said. "Students need a break in the middle of their semester."

Some said there are benefits to the schedule working out this way.

"The day off will help people enjoy Homecoming and the football game," Worcester said. "They won't have to worry about classes and exams. There are definitely positives and negatives."

Haney said he does not think the break will lower the attendance at Homecoming activities.

"It will enhance it," he said. "People who couldn't attend Friday activities can now."

Still, Worcester said he and other students would have probably preferred the dates to be separate.

"Overall, I think students would have preferred to have fall break at a different time than Homecoming," he said. "They could use fall break to their benefit."

Fall Breaks

This is the first year fall break has been implemented. The next three fall breaks for K-State are scheduled for:

2001 – Oct. 13
2002 – Oct 18
2003 – Oct. 17

Nicaraguan workers accuse American company of abuse

By CARRIE ANTLFINGER
The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Rosa Esterlina Ocampo Gonzalez says she used to endure daily indignities simply to make cheap outfits for Americans.

The Nicaraguan woman recently worked for a sweatshop in her homeland that she says mistreated her and her fellow workers. After she tried to help form a union, she alleges she was fired.

Gonzalez was one of two workers invited Monday to recount conditions at two Nicaraguan factories that human rights, religious and labor groups claim supply Kohl's Department Stores with cheap garments.

"They mistreated us physically and verbally," said Gonzalez, 22, who worked at the American-owned Mil Colores plant. The second plant was identified as Tawainese-owned Chentex.

Kohl's spokeswoman Susan Henderson said the company sent independent auditors to Mil Colores this spring, and they did not find sweatshop conditions.

The company, based in Menomonee Falls, will be conducting another third-party audit of the factories, she said.

Kohl's has 298 stores in 25 states.

The Chentex factory produces Sonoma jeans for Kohl's, and Mil Colores produces High Sierra, a label owned by the Target Corp., which owns Target Stores.

Kmart spokeswoman Michele Jasukaitis said that chain also does business with Chentex and sent inspectors to the factory on a very regular basis. The company will look into the new allegations, she said.

Patty Morris, spokeswoman for Target Stores, says the company does business with Mil Colores and has done four audits on the factory in the last year, the most recent in April.

"We found no evidence of abusive working conditions or overtime issues," Morris said.

Charles Kernaghan of the National Labor Committee of New York, a nonprofit group that focuses on workers' rights worldwide, said workers at the sweatshops are been verbally and physically abused, live on "starvation" wages and work more than 90-hour weeks.

Nicaraguan workers sewing jeans for Kohl's are paid $65 a month and live in utter misery, Kernaghan said. He said many work as many as 50 hours overtime.

added to the 47.5 hours week.

Kernaghan said he was not seeking any boycotts and did not want production moved out of Nicaragua, but he wants Kohl's to have respect for human rights.

Gladys del Carmen Manzanarez, 52, said she was one of more than 600 people fired after walking out for an hour to protest Chentex's refusal to raise the wage per garment by 8 cents.

She alleges Chentex is circulating names to other factories so the workers can't get jobs. If workers made a mistake, they would get a knock in the head and be called horses or mules, Manzanarez said.

Catholic Bishop Thomas Gumbleton, from Detroit, and other religious leaders from Milwaukee and New York went to Nicaragua and met the two women fired from Chentex and Mil Colores.

"I saw firsthand the dire situation of those who work in Nicaragua," Gumbleton said. "I deplore and denounce what is happening in these sweatshops."

Kernaghan said his group planned to keep pressure on Kohl's by visiting stores nationwide, carrying banners, chanting in stores and handing out leaflets, among other things.

the life of a student.

"They could easily set a student back a semester," Cashatt said.

While these bites are not deadly, they still pose a danger to students, Mock said.

"They leave a nasty skin lesion, and I've heard of pancreases and other organs not functioning properly," he said.

While there is no vaccine for these spider bites, Mock said the victim should immediately apply a cold pack and see a doctor. Also, he said there is a new drug, Dapsone, which could significantly lower recovery time and possibly make cosmetic surgery unnecessary.

Mock said there are two things to remember in preventing an abundance of brown recluses in one's home.

People should do a nightly "search-and-destroy," because brown recluse spiders come out after dark to search for prey. However, he said that in daylight they might seek shelter in a shoe or pile of clothes.

Secondly, Mock said he suggests leaving glue traps, such as those used for mice and cockroaches, along walls, corners and doorways.

Mock said he recommends chemical treatments last because it would be difficult to treat a home often enough to effectively deal with the problem.

But perhaps most important, Mock said, is a thorough house cleaning.

"I know that sometimes college students can't be very neat," he said, "but leaving clothes on the floor overnight could get you bitten in the morning."

services for the national tour. "Continuum" was displayed on the truck in pieces, rather than a continuous line, as it will once it reaches its home at Purdue.

A small replica also was on display so that the actual design could be viewed.

"This piece shows the breadth and depth of animals' and humans' need for each other," said Kevin Doerr, director of alumni relations at Purdue University.

"It should increase the understanding and appreciation of veterinary medicine. We're excited to have so many people able to view it."

Doerr made a short presentation during the display to discuss the history of the sculpture.

A committee was formed at Purdue in 1992 to discuss the desire to have a design for a piece of art to be displayed at the School of Veterinary Medicine. Anderson was selected from a pool of 20 artists to develop the concept into a design.

"I don't think there could have been a better piece of art made to illustrate the importance of veterinary medicine," Doerr said.

strengths within. We want to develop these strengths in certain areas that can be used by students and faculty for their academic work. These funds will help us do that."

The funds represent first-year income from a transition funding plan developed in 1998.

"It is a complex formula that will provide funds in the interim until a $10 million library campaign is complete," Gary Hellebust, president of the Foundation, said. "The earnings are generated from endowments and each commitment will go towards the goal of $10 million."

Pepsi-Cola committed $5 million to the fund in 1999, which brings the total commitments to the campaign to $6.5 million.

"The $300,000 is basically 'gap' money between where the library was and where we expect to be when the $10 million campaign is complete," Hobrock said.

The program was developed in response to a 1997 faculty, student and administrative study by the Task Force to Plan for Financing the Library of the 21st Century. The group recommended that library expenditures be increased by $3 million by 2003 from state, student and Foundation sources. The increase in funds will help support the purchases of books, periodicals and electronic information resources.

To follow up that recommendation, there will be an implementation of a $1 per credit hour fee, approved by students, for 2001. Also, new operating funds from the state, allocations of research overhead and Foundation funding will increase expenditures for the library by nearly $2 million in 2001, compared to 1998.

"The KSU foundation was an essential partner is the construction of Hale Library," Hobrock said. "We are pleased that they are now providing leadership for a permanent acquisitions endowment for the libraries and have developed an innovative transition funding plan to help with the purchase of books and databases until our endowment goal is achieved."

The Foundation also helped with the $30 million expansion and renovation of K-State's central library in 1997. They committed $5 million to the construction cost, which matched an equivalent contribution from the students. The state provided the balance of the funds for the project.

10 Commandments monolith finds home

By SHAWN HEIN
Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan Christian College soon will have its gift — just not as early as it might have liked.

The Ten Commandments monolith, once a feature of Manhattan's City Hall, was moved Wednesday morning from storage to its new spot in front of the MCC campus on Anderson Avenue. The monolith was covered by a wooden box for its protection until the mid-October completion of its display area.

The completion of the monolith display area was delayed due to delivery problems with City Hall.

Despite the delay, Lorrie Jo Stanfield, vice president of business affairs, said the school is ready to move forward.

"It's been disappointing to have the delay. We would've liked to have had it a couple of months ago, but we're looking forward to having the Ten Commandments on campus," Stanfield said.

Melanie Horton, administrative assistant to the president, said the delay has been frustrating, but that she shares Stanfield's sentiments for the monolith.

"We're really glad it's moving forward, and we think it's going to look really neat," Horton said. "We're very excited about the opportunity to provide a unifying force in the community.

The monolith was removed from City Hall last year at the request of City Commission because it violated separation of church and state.

MCC was able to obtain the Ten Commandments monolith with the help of 360 church, business

RIGHT: At the base of Diptansu Das' entrance staircase, a clearly visible portion of eroded wall can be seen when entering his apartment. The problem of substandard housing around campus has prompted Manhattan Mayor Karen McCulloh to make an attempt at increasing the quality of housing for students. Mayor to organize housing-inspection committee

Diptansu Das chose to leave India to come to school in the United States, a land of opportunity.

However, the apartment he chose was a last resort.

Das, graduate student in physics, signed a yearlong lease to live in a residence's basement converted into an apartment. The crumbling walls and the wires protruding out of an abandoned electrical outlet just outside his front door are testimony to the neglect of maintenance.

The shower leaks, the floor slopes, the walls are cracked, the toilet does not work properly and there is no air conditioning. Das, who stands at 5 feet 7 inches, barely clears the ceiling.

He and his roommate pay $340 per month.

"It's like a dungeon down there," Das said. "I don't think this basement was meant for an apartment."

Manhattan Mayor Karen McCulloh is working to create a task force to help students such as Das who live in substandard housing. The purpose of the committee is to investigate the possibility of implementing mandatory rental housing inspections, with the goal of improving housing for students. The committee will be comprised of volunteers with a broad base of representation — students, residential property owners, renters and the Landlord Association. The task force will propose possibilities on how to implement the plan. McCulloh said she hopes it will become more of a city discussion with representation from all people.

"There are some really bad places out there. We need to get the bad housing out of the housing stock," she said. "This is not about aesthetics. We're looking at public safety and increasing rentals to standards."

According to a housing study of Manhattan done last year, about 65 percent of the housing in the area is rental property, more than other neighboring college towns, such as Lincoln, Neb., and Ames, Iowa. According to the study, there is below-average housing in Manhattan. Some landlords are taking advantage of students and people in the military, McCulloh said.

McCulloh's plan is to propose mandatory housing inspections every 36 months for rental property. The inspections also would be made when the property changes owners. McCulloh said the proposal mostly would affect the landlords who are not providing quality housing.

The proposal also would facilitate responses from tenants and landlords, McCulloh said. Absentee landlords would benefit; they would be informed if the tenants are not caring for the property, she said.

"There are some very good landlords, and sometimes it's the kids who trash the place," McCulloh said. "It's a two-way street."

Eisenhower evacuated Wednesday afternoon due to power outage

By MICHELLE BERTUGLIA
Kansas State Collegian

A power outage in Eisenhower Hall forced many instructors to cancel class Wednesday afternoon, said Stephen White, associate dean for the College of Arts and Sciences.

Fire alarms sounded at 2:40 p.m., forcing students and faculty to evacuate the building.

Although there was no fire, the fire alarms went off as a safety precaution, said Dale Boggs, assistant director of building maintenance.

"We wanted to make sure that there was no one in the building for safety reasons," Boggs said. "It is important to get the students out."

White said he was impressed with the way students evacuated the building.

"People did a good job of getting out of the building, and campus security responded very quickly," he said.

The loss of power resulted from a blown fuse in a transformer outside Eisenhower. Boggs said it can take a few hours to find a high-voltage fuse to replace the blown fuse.

Because of the extensive process of making sure the building is up and running safely, maintenance workers spent Wednesday afternoon working to fix the problem.

Afternoon and evening classes were not officially canceled by the university.

White said the decision to cancel classes was up to each instructor.

Classes will resume as scheduled today.

SGA looks at privilege fee issues

By SARAH BAHARI
Kansas State Collegian

Raising student privilege fees isn't something Student Senate wants to see happen, but if the situation arises, it will be dealt with, Student Body President Jake Worcester said.

"We want to take a good, long look at what we're doing with student money," he said. "We're always looking for ways to keep student fees low."

The most pressing issue the Privilege Fee Committee will look at this year is operation, repair and replacements at the K-State Student Union, Chair Ryan Walker said.

The committee will most likely wait to review the Union's fees until spring 2001, Worcester said.

"The Union will be the last thing we look at," he said. "We want to see how revenues go now that renovations are complete. We'll see what it does to their bottom line."

Increasing fees for the Union always is a possibility, but senate

UPC sponsors activities fair

The K-State Student Union Expo and Activities Carnival is the place to be for students looking for a way to become involved on campus.

The annual event, sponsored by the Union Program Council, will take place from 6 to 8 tonight in the Union Grand Ballroom and will feature more than 100 campus organizations.

"The carnival is a great chance for new students, as well as returning students, to see what is all available to them on campus," said Gina Kimble, for UPC acting program adviser. "We also added the Union Expo to the event to give students the chance to explore the newly renovated Union.

"These groups are basically there to let the students know what they are all about," Kimble said.

Father Keith Weber, of St. Isidore Catholic Student Center, said he agreed with Kimble.

"We participate in this event annually to try and contact students who were out of town or just haven't heard about us," Weber said. "We want them to be

Kansas ballot to include Nader as independent

TOPEKA — Ralph Nader, the Green Party's presidential candidate, will appear on the Nov. 7 ballot in Kansas, but as an independent.

The secretary of state's office confirmed Tuesday that Nader received the 5,000 signatures necessary to put an independent candidate on the ballot.

Nader's supporters had obtained the signatures from registered voters on petitions circulated this summer.

Nader, best known as a consumer advocate, must run in Kansas as an independent because the state doesn't recognize the Green Party.

To gain recognition, a party must collect signatures from 14,854 registered voters. To keep its recognition, a party must nominate a candidate in at least one statewide race and have at least one candidate receive 1 percent of the total general election vote.

Bryan Caskey, administrative assistant in the secretary of state's election division, said Douglas County provided the most signatures for Nader's candidacy, 3,298. Another 2,223 signatures were obtained in Johnson County.

David Scheuer, who led the Lawrence petition drive, said he was pleased but not surprised that Douglas County had the most signatures.

"Lawrence has always had a reputation of being a fairly liberal and open-minded town," he said. "We knew that the big push would have to come here."

Terry Shistar, Nader's regional coordinator for the Lawrence area, said she thinks Nader will have a good showing in Kansas.

Shistar also said she hopes the state will do its part in getting at least 5 percent of the national vote for Nader, which would make the Green Party eligible for federal campaign funds in the 2004 presidential election.

Schools struggle to fill 400 teaching vacancies

BUHLER, Kan. — School districts in Kansas faced with a shortage of teachers are coming up with new and creative ways to fill vacancies.

For example, the Buhler School District hired Hutchinson Community College French professor Kim Wiggans to work as a teacher at Buhler High School.

"I decided to do it because Buhler really wanted someone to continue their French program, and their options would have been very limited if I hadn't," Wiggans said.

The move reflects the troubles schools are having in finding teachers.

A recent survey of districts around the state found nearly 400 teaching vacancies, compared to 103 at the same time last year, said Kansas Department of Education Deputy Commissioner Dale Dennis.

"School districts just cannot compete with the private sector," Dennis area. "An increase in salaries would definitely help some districts, but you can't get that without raising additional revenue."

The Buhler district filled all its vacancies before school began Aug. 16.

"We feel very fortunate to have filled all of our positions with very well-qualified teaching candidates," Superintendent David Brax said. "It can take a tenacious recruiting effort to fill your positions when there's a much smaller pool out there."

Perhaps the biggest difference is the amount of initiative that school districts have had to take in recruiting teachers to apply for positions, said Nickerson-South Hutchinson School District Superintendent Ron Clifton.

In mid-July the district was still searching for a math teacher, two science teachers and a business educator. All positions were filled before school started.

Family of murder victim awarded $328 million

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — The family of a 10-year-old boy who was murdered when he resisted the sexual advances of two men was awarded $328 million Wednesday from his killers.

Jeffrey Curley's family has little hope of collecting any money in the wrongful death lawsuit from Salvatore Sicari and Charles Jaynes, both in prison on murder convictions. But the family has said they wanted to send a message to pedophiles that they could face civil suits, even if they avoid criminal charges.

"I'm not getting any money, they're not getting any money," the family's attorney, Lawrence Frisoli, said. "What we're saying is this is a barometer. If you rape kids, you can be held civilly liable."

Family members were not at the courthouse for the decision. Frisoli said they were too upset to return after testifying Tuesday. But he said they were pleased with the decision.

The Middlesex Superior Court jury deliberated after closing arguments Wednesday morning.

Frisoli introduced gruesome pieces of evidence from the case, including photos of Curley's dead body and the Rubbermaid container that held the boy's body when it was thrown into a Maine river.

Prosecutors say Sicari and Jaynes were sexually obsessed with the boy and lured him from his Cambridge neighborhood in October 1997 with the promise of a new bike. They then smothered him with a gasoline-soaked rag when he resisted their sexual advances.

The Curleys' have also filed a $200 million federal lawsuit against the North American Man/Boy Love Association, claiming Jaynes was incited by the group.

Students benefit from job expo

By NANCY HULL
Kansas State Collegian

STEVEN DEARINGER/Collegian
John Rychlock, with Ramada Plaza Hotel, conducts a job interview with Chris Richard, sophomore in business, Wednesday in Union Station. Richard was checking out possible jobs at the Part-Time Job Expo, and might have found one when Rychlock offered him a job.

Scott Craig has been looking for a job that could give him more experience in his major.

At K-State's Part-Time Job Expo on Wednesday, Craig, senior in marketing and international business, found just what he was searching for.

"The marketing internship application I picked up from K-Rock could really help my major," he said. "I'm primarily looking for a job that deals with my major, and pay is secondary. I came here last year and didn't find much, but this year there are jobs that are more my taste."

Career and Employment Services sponsored the expo from 9 a.m.to 2 p.m. in the Union Courtyard. Thirty-nine employers from around the community and on campus had booths at the expo.

"There are 10 to 12 more employers here than last year. I'm happy with the student turnout, and we've had lots of the Union traffic stop by," said Mary Marston, assistant director of Career and Employment Services. "There's been a lot of students who are actually dedicated to finding a job and have a very serious interest in part-time employment. It seems like there's better enjoyment this year. Lots of students are doing interviews and turning in applications."

Alissa Jensen, freshman in elementary education, filled out an application for a banquet server position at the Ramada Plaza Hotel/Gold Fork, but she wasn't even planning on stopping by the expo.

"I actually was going to the bookstore here, but I saw one of my friends, and she said that she'd just got a job from Ramada over here," Jensen said. "I'm paying for college, so I'll work 20 to 25 hours a week. Working and taking classes might be tough at first, but after I get used to everything, I think it will work out."

Cezanne Korbel, venator at Foot Locker's distribution service center in Junction City, said the store is looking to be more flexible with college students' schedules.

"We didn't hire for part time in the past. Now, we're hiring part time for laboring jobs," Korbel said. "There are usually two shifts people can work, a morning shift and a night shift. But depending on class schedules, students can come in at different times. We had quite a few students working for us this summer, and we've probably given 50 to 70 applications out today. We're hoping to hire as many K-State students as we can right now."

Some students visiting the expo said that while they didn't necessarily want a job, they needed the money.

"I didn't really work this summer, so I'll need money sooner or later," Michael Cowan, sophomore in open-option, said. "I'd like to work with the Manhattan schools or do some coaching for the city. Anything with kids would work."

Kim Kearney, freshman in social work, said she's not ready to work yet, but that she needs to find a job.

"I'll work at Wal-Mart back home over Christmas break, but I'll want some spending cash before that," Kearney said.

"I'm looking for an on-campus job. My classes are so spread out that on-campus would work out best with my schedule."

STEVEN DEARINGER/Collegian
Kati Cleavinger, sophomore in architecture, laughs with Keith Westervelt, Blueville Nursery, as they discuss job openings Wednesday morning at the Part-Time Job Expo in the K-State Student Union.

K-State's Department of Housing and Dining Services, one of the many on-campus employers present at the expo, had several students express interest in working at one of the three housing and dining complexes.

"We're hiring for over 100 positions right now. Thirty people have applied here today, and since Sunday there's been over 30 walk-ins that have applied," said Michael Testagrossa, assistant manager of student development and special events at Housing and Dining Services.

"We work with everyone's class schedules, and the shifts are only two to four hours long. If you have a test, we don't want you to come to work. Everyone's here for an education, not just work. The goal is for everyone to succeed while at K-State."

Loans important for college bills

By BRIAN OLBERDING
Kansas State Collegian

"With the rising cost of a college education, students need to explore their options for financing their education today, whether they're college students now or whether they will be in a year or two."

Kim Wheelock, vice president of League Service Corp.

Lines stretching from Fairchild Hall's Office of Student Financial Assistance office say a bit about the popularity of student loans.

An expense survey done by the 1999-2000 College Board shows students living away from home will pay an average of $10,909 a year for a public university and up to $23,651 at a private college.

To help cover these costs, many students rely on the financial assistance available from state and federal governments, schools, private organizations and financial institutions in the form of student loans.

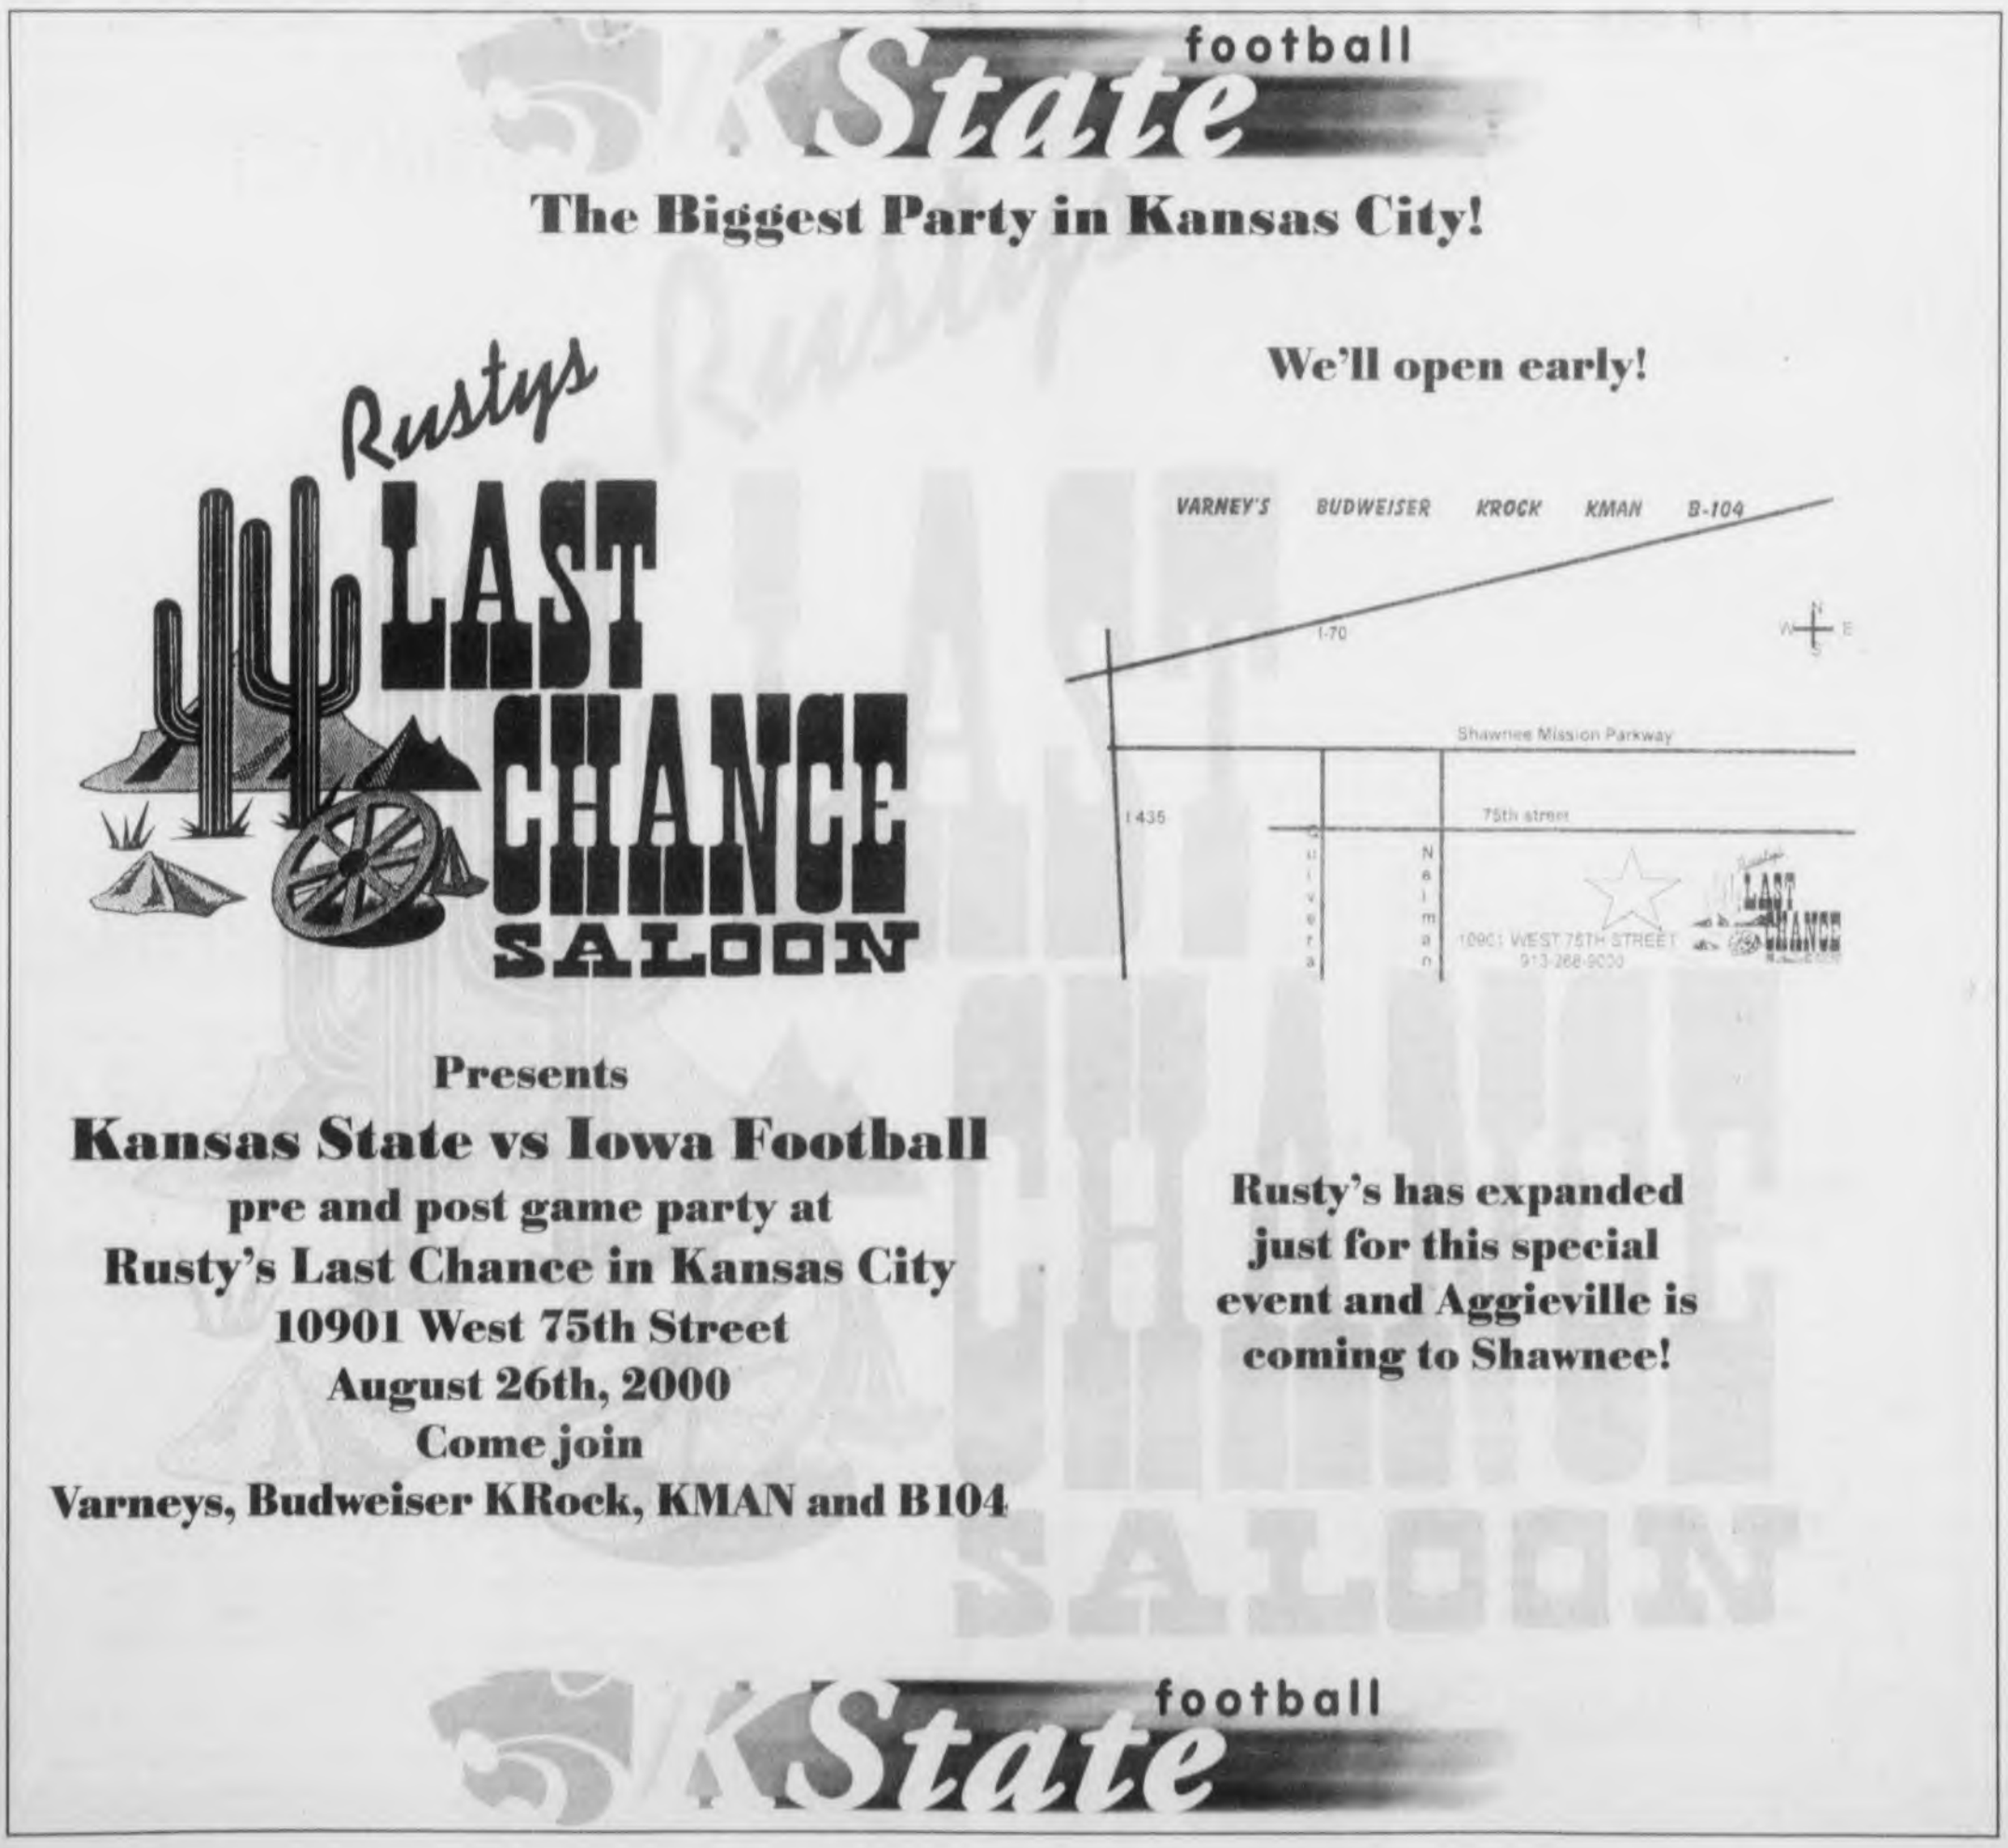
"Without the loans I get from the government, there is no way I'd be able to afford a college education," Jared Kellner, junior in business administration, said.

Last year K-State gave out $48 million in student loans through the federal aid program and already has given out $18 million this year.

Starting this year, students borrowing through the federal direct program will be receiving some incentive to pay off their loans, thanks to a new rebate plan announced by President Clinton on Aug. 11.

Robert Gamez, associate director for operations, said according to the plan, students will be getting back 1.5 percent of the 3-percent loan fee if they make the first 12 loan payments on time.

The money will automatically be deposited into the borrower's loan account to help pay the loan.



"The fee rebate could save $750,000 for K-State students alone," Gamez said.

Kim Wheelock, vice president of the League Services Corp. said paying for college can be easy by planning ahead.

"With the rising cost of a college education, students need to explore their options for financing their education today, whether they're college students now or whether they will be in a year or two," Wheelock said.

Wheelock said that to plan for your expense, you must include fixed costs, such as tuition, room and board, and indirect costs, including personal expenses, transportation expenses and school supplies.

Schools can provide students with the fixed costs of attending the institution and can often give out typical indirect costs that students face.

Communication needed to avoid break conflicts

If these first few days of school already have gotten students down, there is one date that should be circled in their calendar.

Fall break — Oct. 20, a Friday without worries and cares.

Rarely do students object to a day without classes, yet there appears to be a problem. Fall break falls on the same day as Homecoming.

This appears as if it could be a royal pain that will directly result in a lack of participation.

If K-State officials want more than the usual groups of students to participate, as has seemingly been a goal, then they should have been more cautious in terms of planning their events.

Another problem is that is also the same weekend as a home football game, hence the Homecoming problem.

Fall break was concieved as a chance for students to get away from school, a chance to go home.

Granted, the game is not mandatory and neither is Homecoming, but forcing the students who plan to participate in these events to choose between school spirit and a break from K-State is infuriating.

We are not complaining about the day off from school — we would be crazy if we were upset about a much-needed break. We are complaining about the lack of communication and planning. The campus calendar and the football schedule are decided well in advance. It's too late to worry about the next few years, but care can be taken in the future.

Society places value on image, must not be ashamed of obesity

Chubby, obese, lard butt; it means the same any way you say it, I'm fat.

I am aware of the fact that I am overweight. I really don't need the helpful reminders that are issued from random carloads of cretins who have nothing better to do with their days than to hurl unoriginal insults out their car windows.

Ridiculing someone because of his or her size is a socially acceptable form of discrimination. Society believes it is trying to help the poor overweight person by shaming him into losing the extra poundage. Everyone knows that "thin is in" and being overweight makes you an oddity. Just look at television and the movies. Off the top of your head, how many popular overweight actors or actresses can you name?

Body image is everything these days. Instead of accepting that everyone is unique and therefore has a different body type, people are trying to conform to a more aesthetically pleasing ideal. The average woman portrayed by models and actresses is at least 5 feet 7 inches and no bigger than a size 8. The average American woman is a size 14. A third of the women in the United States wear a size 16 or larger. Where are our representatives?

Many of the people who try to help overweight people rely on the old standby that obesity is a disease that claims 300,000 lives a year. The Jan. 1, 1998, editorial on losing weight in the New England Journal of Medicine says data linking death and the overweight are limited and often ambiguous. Many of the studies do not consider variables like the likelihood that many obesity-related deaths could be caused by a sedentary lifestyle.

MIAH WHITAKER

A high body weight does not automatically signify laziness and poor personal hygiene. It is possible to be fit and fat. U.S. News and World Report did a cover story called "The Joy of Fat" on Jan. 12, 1998 that talked to two overweight people who consider themselves to be fit. Steven Blair, an epidemiologist at the Cooper Institute for Aerobics Research, describes himself as "short, fat, and bald." He's also a runner. Blair's been testing cardiovascular fitness in men for over twenty years. His tests have found that men can carry up to 28 percent body fat and still be fit. He said that a thin, sedentary man is less likely to live longer than a fat, fit one.

Lisa Tealer is 5 feet 7 inches and weighs 300 pounds. She plays basketball, is a competitive swimmer, performs modern dance and ballet and co-founded the Women of Substance Health Spa in California. Tealer said many of the overweight women who come to her gym never considered going to a gym before because it was too embarrassing.

Why should it be embarrassing? Since being a little overweight is not the oddity some might believe and since going to a gym is supposed to be a socially acceptable thing to do, why is it so embarrassing? Because being fat is bad and fat people need to stop being so lazy and lose some weight. Isn't that what everyone thinks?

Ask the average young American girl which she fears more, cancer or being fat, and fat will win every time.

Fat people are treated differently in our society. Clothing stores offer a vastly smaller selection of large people clothes (and what is offered is usually covered in hideous flowers or is some kind of multicolored reject fabric that I wouldn't be caught dead in). I've been in restaurants that automatically bring me fat-free salad dressing with my salad and bring my thinner dinner companions the real thing. More importantly, at least to me, perfect strangers feel it's all right to attempt to hurt and embarrass me simply because I don't fit the ideal body image. I've seen the people who taunt me and I have news for them. They are no closer to being perfect than I am, and at least I'm happy with who I am.

MARS encourages men, women to learn about rape

A problem exists. According to John Gray, because I'm a man, I apparently feel the need to find a solution to a problem. However, this problem has been labeled as a woman's issue. It doesn't victimize my gender, so I am left with little guidance in addressing this problem. The vast majority of education and activism on this issue also is largely run by and directed to women. So what am I to do?

PAUL ENGLISH

Seven years ago, these were the thoughts that I had. I was sitting in a meeting of the Haymaker Hall Governing Board, and our hall director had just informed us that there had been a break-in and assault at the Smurthwaite Scholarship House. She told us that we might want to give the women of Smurthwaite some space because of this event. The men who lived on the ninth floor had always been close with the Smurthwaite women, and instead of giving them space, they baked cookies and made hot chocolate and took them across the street. They went there to sit with them, watch television and let them know that not all men are bad.

When I heard of this, I was impressed. I would have been conflicted about what to do. But I thought that this had been a brave and good thing to do. However, the more I thought about it the more perplexed I became. I began to think, "Is this all I can do as a man? Is all I can do is to support victims?"

This is the question I asked, and the response became the formation of the Men Against Rape Society. For the past seven years, men and women have gathered together to talk to men about rape. Why target men? The fact of the matter is that men are the primary perpetuators of rape. Men could make the biggest change in the occurrence of rape if they made the simple decision to understand what rape is, why it happens and make a concerted effort to not commit these acts.

I'm not going to try and explain all of this in one column. However, this is the time when we need to be cognizant of the problem. One in four women will be raped by the time they leave college. The vast majority of these happen in the first 12 weeks of college. This time period is called "The honeymoon period." It's the time when we all stretch our wings, test our new found freedoms. For freshmen women, it can be a dangerous and life-altering time.

If this is a dangerous time for women, it behooves us men to be extra sensitive to our environment. That means challenging each other when we are making truly inappropriate comments. It means being aware of the decisions we make when we are less than sober. It means talking to those around you to make sure that the events that we go to and the socialization that we do is safe for all.

MARS is committed to doing what we can to raise the awareness level of men on these issues. The issue of rape is not soley a women's issue. It is most certainly something that men could and should do something about.

If this is a dangerous time for women, it behooves us men to be extra sensitive to our environment. That means challenging each other when we are making truly inappropriate comments.

If you are interested in making a difference, I invite you to take a look around at some of the organizations that are doing something about rape. The Women's Center has revitalized the PEERS rape education group. They also are a great referral and support center. The Women's Center, located in Lafene Health Center, also is a great source of information. We at MARS always are glad to find others looking to make a difference. UFM offers variety of fun classes, appeals to broad range of students

By NANCY FOSTER
Kansas State Collegian

Alcohol is consumed by many students outside of the classroom, but some will have the opportunity to try it inside the classroom.

The class is called Wine Tasting, and it's offered through this year's UFM program.

"This year, they're tasting wines from Australia and New Zealand," Charlene Brownson, education coordinator, said. "It's a popular class for those that are 21."

Not only can students drink during class, but they also can fish, scuba dive, dance and play the piano.

"We offer a little bit of everything," Brownson said.

UFM offers many courses for credit through K-State, including many one-hour courses. Brownson said sometimes students need one credit hour in order to keep their financial aid.

Tabitha Smith, office coordinator, said another benefit of taking a short class is that it can help students decide whether they would like to take a longer class in that subject at K-State.

Scuba diving, fly fishing, ballroom dancing, judo, women and money are just several courses offered for credit. Archery and fencing are two new classes offered for credit.

"We have all sorts of fun classes," Brownson said.

UFM also offers preparation classes for the LSAT, GMAT, GRE and PPST in the fall and early spring semesters.

Other classes range from staining glass and home video editing, to belly dancing and massage therapy.

"There's a lot of things to learn and a lot of fun things to do," Brownson said.

Classes offered through UFM are important for several reasons, Smith said.

"They're important because they're offered to a broad range of people. It's not just to students. It's to the whole community," Smith said. "And a lot of our classes are really fun. If students need to wind down besides going out, they can take a class."

Smith said UFM also gives people who don't live in Manhattan or attend K-State the chance to be involved in the community.

Each class lasts about four to six weeks, and occurs once or twice a week.

Smith said some of the more popular classes are golf, ballroom dancing and the wellness classes. Wellness classes include yoga, Jin Shin Jyutsu and massage therapy.

"It's a way to network friends and prepare for tests," Brownson said.

The Audubon Society is offering several free courses through the program, as well, such as the Autumn Walk on the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area.

"It's kind of nice if you're on a tight budget to have those free things offered," Brownson said.

A complete catalog of all UFM courses offered can be found in the K-State Student Union, Hale Library, Alco, Hastings Entertainment and the Manhattan Public Library.

News media allowed in court

■ Judge allows coverage in barrel murder case.

By JOHN MILBURN
The Associated Press

OLATHE, Kan. — A judge Wednesday denied a defense request to bar media access to the preliminary hearing of murder suspect John Edward Robinson Sr.

"At this point, I see no reason to close these proceedings," said Johnson County District Court Judge John Anderson III.

Anderson granted 10 of 11 other defense motions, including one that allows Robinson to wear a business suit rather than a jail jumpsuit during court proceedings.

He did not rule on a motion for additional discovery, because Johnson County Attorney Paul Morrison has allowed the defense access to information he has.

Robinson's attorney, Christian Zoeller, argued that media access to Robinson's Oct. 2 hearing would prejudice potential jurors. He said the case already has received a massive amount of publicity, making it difficult for his client to get a fair trial.

Robinson is charged with two counts of capital murder in Kansas and three counts of first-degree murder in Missouri in the deaths of five women found in barrels in June. Two bodies were found on Robinson's property near La Cygne, Kan., and three more were found in barrels in a Raymore, Mo., storage locker.

He also is charged in Kansas with one count of first-degree murder in the death of Lisa Stasi, who disappeared in January 1985. Her body has not been recovered. Robinson is charged with aggravated interference with parental custody for allegedly taking Stasi's 4-month-old daughter.

The Oct. 2 hearing will determine whether there is enough evidence to bind Robinson over for trial.

The Kansas City Star reported Wednesday that Stasi's daughter was adopted by Robinson's brother and sister-in-law.

Tiffany Stasi, 15, has grown up as "Heather Robinson." The Star did not identify the girl's adoptive parents but said they could not be reached for comment Tuesday.

The girl's name was made public in a witness list filed by Johnson County prosecutors.

Morrison, who has emphasized the need to protect the girl's privacy, said he knew her name eventually would have to be made public, although he held off for some time.

"We have consciously attempted to wait in endorsing some names out of respect to protect people's privacy, particularly Tiffany and her family," Morrison said.

The Star said it learned in June that Tiffany was brought up by Robinson's brother and his wife. But out of respect for the teenager's privacy, the newspaper chose not to report her new name and other information.

But with Tuesday's filing, her identity became public record.

"Tiffany Stasi, a.k.a. Heather Robinson" was one of more than 300 new witnesses on the list, which also now includes the names of her adoptive parents.

2 football players removed from team's roster

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

Two Wildcat football players are officially off the roster, K-State Sports Information Director Doug Dull, said.

Dull confirmed that both John Gardner and Ken Greene left the squad a couple of weeks ago, but said he was unaware of the specific circumstances of the matter.

In a Wednesday telephone conversation with Gardner, the former Cat defensive lineman said it was his decision to no longer be a part of the team.

"It had nothing to do with the football team," Gardner said. "It was a personal decision I made."

Gardner, sophomore in electrical engineering, admitted school was one reason for his departure.

"I couldn't focus enough on my academics," he said.

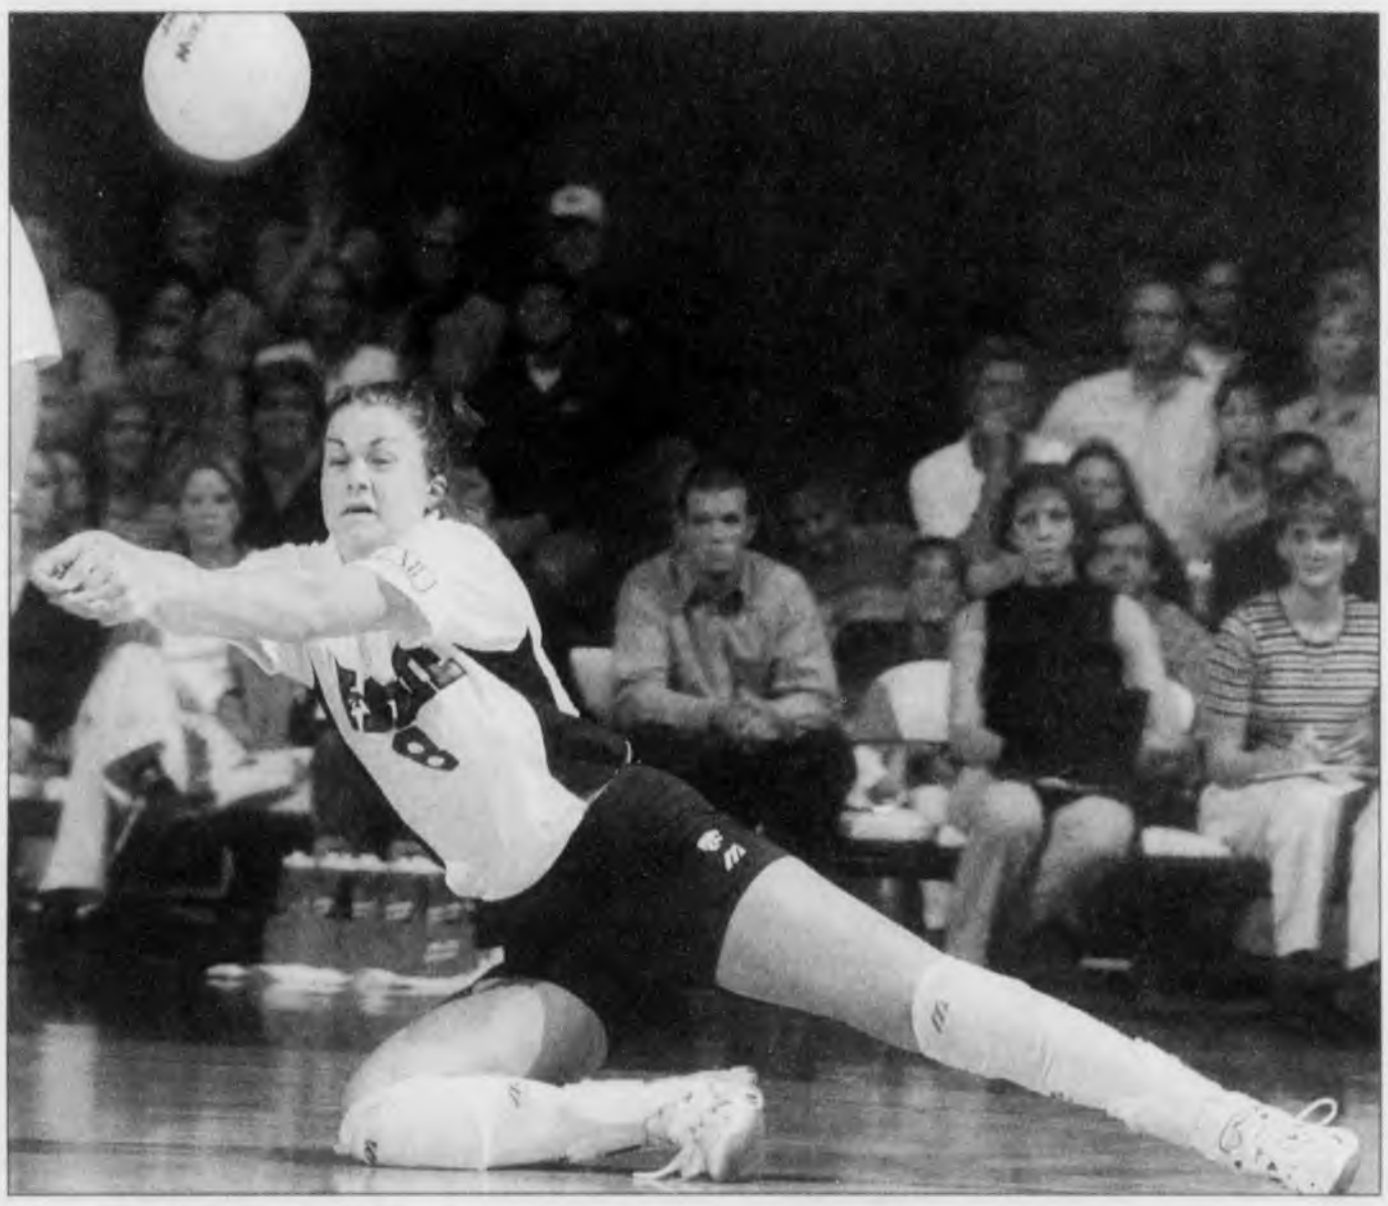
As far as the probability of a future return, Gardner said he is satisfied with his decision.

"For right now, it's final," he said. "I don't see anything changing."

The 6-foot-10-inch, 280-pound Gardner was a redshirt freshman for the Cats last season.

Out of Dodge City High School, Gardner was the top-rated offensive lineman in the state of Kansas and was named one of the Top-10 offensive tackle prospects in the Big 12 region by the National Recruiting Advisor.

He once had 26 knockdown blocks in a single game during his senior season of his prep campaign.



Meanwhile, Greene, a oommunity college transfer from Independence, Kan., Community College, was in his first season with K-State prior to his exit.

The 6-foot-3-inch junior linebacker was a highly touted recruit, earning second-team All-Jayhawk conference his sophomore year despite missing most of the season with a broken leg.

The Omaha, Tex., native received all-district and all-state honors as a senior at DeWitt High School.

He also was a member of the PrepStar SuperJuCo 75 squad as one of the top-nine linebacker prospects in the nation.

Greene was unavailable for comment on the circumstances of his departure.

Lisa Mimick dives to dig a ball during the 1999 volleyball season in a game against Baylor on Oct. 20 in Ahearn Field House. A foot injury could keep Mimick from playing this season. The Wildcats lost the game 12-15, 16-14, 14-16 and 6-15, dropping their first Big 12 conference game of the year.

Injury leads to loss of a KEY PLAYER

Volleyball player to sit out due to injury, to be replaced with freshman

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

If the K-State volleyball team is to win a Big 12 Championship, it might have to do so without one of its key players.

Junior outside hitter Lisa Mimick suffered what could be a season-ending injury to her foot last Thursday in practice. The injury was the result of an existing problem, Mimick said.

"I had a stress fracture coming into the season, and I thought I could play on it, but it broke before the season started," she said.

Since the incident, Mimick has undergone surgery in which a screw was inserted in her foot. She has worn and already discarded a cast, but still can't jump on her foot, although she can ride a stationary bike.

Whether Mimick will return at some point in the season or instead take a redshirt is unknown.

"We don't know if she is out for the season," head coach Jim McLaughlin said. "We hope she will return, but we'd also like to have her for an entire season."

Unlike McLaughlin, Mimick said she is certain she will return this season.

"I hope to be back by October 1," Mimick said.

One thing the team does know for sure is that it has lost its probable starter at outside hitter.

"We're really going to miss Lisa," McLaughlin said. "She was our No. 2 hitter. With her ability to pass the ball and make digs, we're losing a really good player."

In Mimick's absence, the player expected to fill her cavernous shoes is freshman Cari Jensen, who has been in the Wildcat program for just two weeks.

While inexperienced, Jensen brings to the court a wealth of athletic promise.

As a high schooler in Fowler, Colo., Jensen was a two-time Gatorade Circle of Champions Volleyball Player of the Year for the state of Colorado and was a finalist for the Gatorade National High School Volleyball Player of the Year.

Possibly as a result of the confidence that comes with talent, Jensen said she is ready to try and fill in for Mimick.

"I feel bad for Lisa, getting hurt in her junior year," Jensen said. "But any time an opportunity comes along like this, you have to take advantage of it."

The true freshman's inexperience in McLaughlin's system might be disconcerting for fans, but Jensen said she is learning.

"I think I'm improving," Jensen said. "Jim is such a good coach that it's easy to pick up the system."

K-State fans will get a chance to see Jensen and the rest of the Cats in action at 7 p.m. Friday for the alumni match in Ahearn Field House.

Fullback lives dream of playing at K-State

By SAM STIERS
Kansas State Collegian

The "Rock" has joined the K-State football team.

The Cats' new fullback, Roderick "Rock" Cartwright, has never been a pro-wrestler, but he's knocked his share of guys on their backs.

Cartwright is a community college transfer from Trinity Valley Community College, in Austin, Texas, and joined the team in late July.

"Rock" is built exactly as his nickname suggests — 5 feet, 8 inches tall and 242 pounds — but Cartwright said he's had the name since he was a kid.

"My grandmother game me the name 'Rock baby' when I was younger because I was so clumsy," Cartwright said. "Once I got older, they took the 'baby' off, and now they call me 'Rock'."

"Rock" already has had an effect on his teammates. Linebacker Ben Leber said tackling Cartwright is not a fun task.

"One scrimmage during two-a-days, he put me out for a play," Leber said. "I hurt my neck and broke a couple buckles on my helmet."

Head coach Bill Snyder said he'd been looking at Cartwright for a while, and once he completed his academic work at Trinity Valley, the door was open for him to join the Cats. Now, Cartwright is realizing a dream and bringing depth to K-State's fullback position.

CARTWRIGHT

"It's a dream, that's all I can say is 'I'm living a dream.'" Cartwright said. "I never thought I'd get to this point, but now that I'm here I have to take advantage of it."

Cartwright could see a lot of playing time this season if starting fullback Johnno Lazetich suffers another concussion. Lazetich sustained multiple concussions last season, missing five complete games and parts of two others.

"Personally, I think that I can be a big asset to the team as far as blocking, backing up Johnno, just giving him a helping hand as far as the position of fullback goes," Cartwright said. "I might catch some out of the back field, I might run a little and if I don't carry the ball a lot, that's fine with me. I'm just here to help the team."

Cartwright said it took him a while to adjust to the speed of Division I football. He said remembering the audibles and blocking assignments were the most difficult part of learning K-State's offensive system. However, the Cats' starting quarterback, Jonathan Beasley, said Cartwright is progressing well.

"He's going to be great for us," Beasley said. "He runs hard, blocks hard and he's trying to do his best to learn the system."

Snyder said Cartwright has done a good job of adapting to K-State's program.

"He's picked up our offense extremely well," Snyder said. "He just fits in with this program and the players and works hard. He has a chance to do all the right things."

Cartwright's leverage and power are his biggest assets, and while speed might not be the most notable aspect of his game, he said if he gets in the open, he's gone.

"I'm not too slow, and I'm not too fast," Cartwright said. "If I break away, I'm not going to get caught. I'm going to get the job done."

Cartwright posted impressive numbers while playing high school football in Conroe, Texas. He set his school's single-season rushing record with 2,060 yards as a senior, and was District 15-5A most valuable player in both his junior and senior seasons.

Cartwright was named Parade Magazine All-American after his senior season. He also lettered four times in track and field and twice in baseball.

Baylor University signed Cartwright out of high school, but his ACT scores were not high enough.

"It was so bad that I cried," Cartwright said. "I didn't think I was going to school, and I was like, 'Should I sit out a semester and take the test over?', but I didn't think I could sit out and not play football, so I went to Trinity instead."

Cartwright started for two years at Trinity Valley. He earned honorable mention all-conference both seasons he was there.

City in need of volunteers to coach youth

By DAN SMITH
Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan's Parks and Recreation Department is kicking off its fall 2000 youth sports programs by extending an opportunity for K-State students to participate as coaches.

Opportunities are available for volleyball, soccer and flag football teams, and coaches may be in any year of school.

"It involves 3-4 hours a week of practice and game time," recreation supervisor Mike Buchanan said of the volunteer positions, "and is a great opportunity to add to a student's résumé."

MORE INFO?
Contact Mike Buchanan or Ivan Wilkinson at 587-2757 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Or e-mail at buchanan@ci.manhattan.ks.us or wilkinson@ci.manhattan.ks.us. A Web site is available at www.ci.manhattan.ks.us.

Buchanan said students in any field of study are encouraged to participate, and those students in majors involving interactions with children could benefit from this opportunity to teach Manhattan's youth.

Buchanan leads the soccer and volleyball youth sports programs and said there are three characteristics that make good youth coaches.

"You need to enjoy working with kids, you need to know a little something about the sport, and you need to be able to commit the time that it takes."

Beyond adding to a student's résumé, coaching allows a student to become involved in the community through service.

"When it's done well, it's a lot of fun," Buchanan said.

In turn, he encourages groups of students to participate together in coaching. Ivan Wilkinson, recreation supervisor, said many fraternities and sororities around campus have fun coaching teams.

"The rewards aren't near as important as the memories," said Wilkinson, head of flag football for the department. "The satisfaction of watching a kid do something he couldn't do before you coached him is special."

Monica Hamby, a 1999 K-State graduate, coached for three years while at school and knows firsthand this satisfaction. Hamby is coaching one of the youth volleyball teams.

"I love kids," she said. "It's a good way to give back to the community."

Hamby has experienced coaching both by herself and with a friend, and said one of the best parts of coaching youth sports is the interaction with the kids, and the opportunity to possibly become a role model for them.

Students interested in becoming youth sports coaches for Manhattan Parks and Recreation can contact either Mike Buchanan or Ivan Wilkinson between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. by calling 587-2757, or by e-mail at buchanan@ci.manhattan.ks.us or wilkinson@ci.manhattan.ks.us.

Informational meetings and coaching clinics also are provided by the department, and little experience is needed to participate.

Tickets remain for game in KC

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

Only a few hundred football tickets still are available for Saturday's football game against Iowa, K-State Sports Information Director Doug Dull, said.

Dull said he thinks the remaining tickets are located near the top levels of Arrowhead Stadium.

To order tickets, which are $35 each, contact the K-State Ticket Office from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. at 532-7606. Kickoff for the Eddie Robinson Classic is set for 1:09 p.m. CDT, with an expected crowd of more than 79,000.

TV sports announcers should learn lessons from greats

MIKE VIETTI

Where have all the Keith Jacksons in the world gone?

I'm not talking about the former Oklahoma and Miami Dolphin tight end, but rather one of the best, if not the best, sports announcer in television history.

Jackson's brilliance was simple: don't ever, ever, under any circumstances, elevate yourself above the game.

Don't ever think that, as a broadcaster, your voice is more important than the action on the tube.

That's such an easy rule, so why can't most announcers follow it?

Who knows? I certainly don't. So, as part of my desire to be the best investigative reporter writing sports columns for the Collegian on Thursdays, I decided I would try and get to the bottom of this dastardly situation.

I contacted the new on-air personalities of a certain show that airs on one of the major networks the day after Sunday at 7:00 p.m. Central Standard Time August to January. This show has a long tradition of being outstanding but recently has suffered a ratings dive and has added a stand-up comedian, a new color-commentator and two sideline reporters to spice things up.

As part of our interview agreement, I am not allowed to reveal any of their real identities, so each will have a pseudo-name.

The color commentator is a former NFL quarterback and a hall-of-famer who, along with a man whose initials are B.M., used to form the most annoying television duo since, well, let's just say they even topped the Olsen twins. I will refer to him as "Mr. Forget-trying-to-figure-out-how-in-the-hell-I-landed-the-top-color-announcing-job-in-sports."

The stand-up comedian has his own show on a cable network and, surprisingly enough, has no football background other than being an avid armchair quarterback. I will refer to him as "Mr. Maybe-the-only-thing-I-know-about-football-is-what-is-scripted-out-for-me-but-I-can-pull-obscure-references-out-of-my-ass-and-that-counts-for-something."

One of the sideline reporters is a former NFL running back who also is a hall-of-famer.

He, ironically enough, has no broadcasting experience, either. I will refer to him as "Mr. Don't-mute-the-TV-just-yet-cause-I-just-might-come-through-with-a-complete-thought-sometime-soon."

The other sideline reporter, interestingly enough, has experience in broadcasting and has drawn rave reviews for her work. She could not be reached for comment.

Anyway, here's the interview:

Me: Thanks, fellas, for sitting down with me. I really appreciate it.

Mr. F: No problem. People around the office have been telling me I can get on their nerves.

Mr. M: Yeah, that's like the little brat who was in "Jerry Maguire" saying to RuPaul, "Hey, you stupid man, we know you've got a ding-a-ling, you're not foolin' anybody."

Mr. D: So you see, Mike, touchdown good.

Mr. M: You know what? You remind me of a 15th century leper trying to be a prostitute — you can try all you want, but you ain't gettin' any business.

Me: Hey, ease up a little. What do you expect from a guy who learned English from Dexter Manley?

Mr. F: Can you tell me why I'm so annoying?

Me: Well, I think it all started with that beer commercial you did with Kenny Stabler — I think it would be a good idea if you never laughed again.

Mr. M: His laugh reminds me of that guy who used to do those Micro Machine ads way back in 1987 — what the hell was God thinking with that guy?

Mr. D: So in this case, Randy Moss was trying to catch the ball.

Mr. F: People think I'm annoying, this guy is a freaking moron.

Me: How do you guys think the chemistry is developing on the show?

Mr. M: Well, it doesn't help when you're got a sideline reporter who interrupts the broadcast to say provocative things like, "The Packers are going to try throw the brown thing into the air." It's like having George Stephanopolous pulling on your pant leg every five minutes saying, "Can I have some Ovaltine? Please, please please."

Mr. D: Umm ... Me like vanilla too.

Mr. F: Yeah, well, it doesn't help either when you're saying crap that flies over everybody's head. Do you know that about 4 percent of the population gets all of your jokes? Sure, you might have a great one every now and then, but the rest is all just a waste of breath.

Mr. M: You're like King Abudabba, the ruler of central Madagascar in 566 B.C. — sure, you might have twelve human heads stacked on top of your straw hut, but people still remember how you got them.

Mr. F: See what I mean?

Me: Yeah, I do. Well, thanks for doing the interview, guys.

Mr. F: I'm not going to last another season. Maybe I could build a career around making laugh tracks.

Mr. M: Working in the booth with these guys is like serving in the Turkish army in the 18th century ...

Mr. D: John Madden gave me a turkey leg on Thanksgiving once.

Debby approaches Florida; visitors evacuated from Keys

By MILDRADE CHERFILS
The Associated Press

MIAMI — All visitors were ordered to evacuate from the Florida Keys on Wednesday as officials prepared for the possibility that Tropical Storm Debby could hit Florida as a hurricane.

Monroe County, which governs the island chain, declared a state of emergency with Debby still hundreds of miles away.

"It could be powerfully close by Friday," said Michael Tichacek, a meteorologist at the National Hurricane Center.

Mary Ann Kirkland, dockmaster for Whale Harbor Inn & Marina, said it was business as usual at the Keys fishing resort on Islamorada, about 65 miles southwest of Miami.

"The skies are clear — a couple of little puffy clouds up there — but it's a beautiful day," she said.

Still, a Philadelphia fisherman rebooked his weekend trip rather than risk confronting Debby.

Some charter boat captains canceled trips set for Saturday.

State and county parks and private campgrounds were instructed to close by noon, and all large recreational vehicles, travel trailers and tent campers were ordered out.

Monroe County schools will be closed Thursday and Friday. Everglades National Park and Biscayne National Park south of Miami shut down.

To the north, in Cape Canaveral, Kennedy Space Center workers took plywood and sandbags out of storage to be put up in case the storm veered in that direction. Space shuttle Atlantis could be moved off a launch pad into its hangar if it were threatened.

In the Keys, an automated calling system was activated to contact more than 300 hotels and guest houses along the 180-mile island chain with a recorded message about the evacuation. Hotels were asked to post notices and contact guests.

The system was developed to ease evacuations along the Overseas Highway, a mostly two-lane road that is the only route to the mainland from the low-lying region.

Many South Floridians weren't taking any chances. Some raced to stores and stuffed shopping carts with bottled water, canned food, milk and batteries, and the truly nervous hefted portable generators onto truck beds.

A soaking rain would be welcome throughout the state, said Terry McElroy, spokesman for the state Agriculture Department.

"We're out of wildfire danger, but the aquifer and the lakes and so on are low," he said.

11 killed by Typhoon Bilis

By CHRISTOPHER BODEEN
The Associated Press

BEIJING — Typhoon Bilis churned into coastal China on Wednesday, bringing heavy rain and gale-force winds but little of the destruction it left across Taiwan, where it wrecked homes and killed 11 people.

There were no reports of injuries or serious damage in China's Fujian province, where Bilis made landfall Wednesday afternoon before dying out further inland, said a government spokesman in the port city of Xiamen, who gave only his surname, Xie.

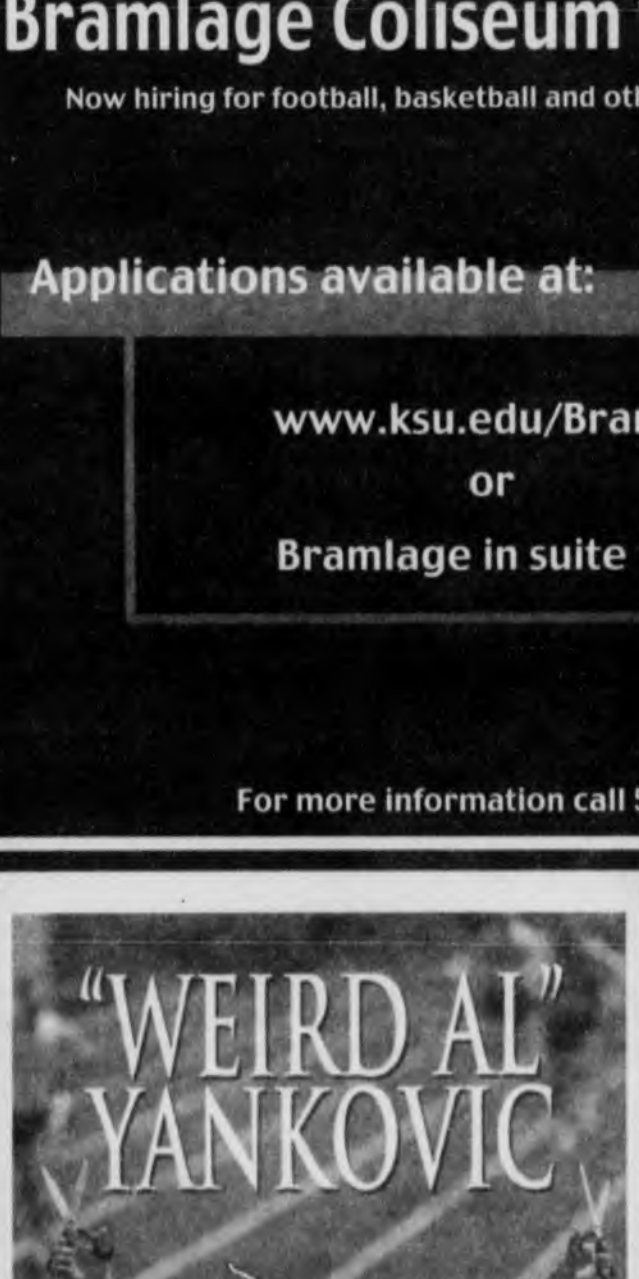
Municipal workers were keeping watch through the night for flooding and other damage from the torrential rains expected to follow the typhoon, the spokesman said.

Xiamen had prepared for a major storm, giving city workers the day off as Bilis moved in. The Xiamen ferry service and a local airline shut down operations, television stations and the state-run Chinese news agency Xinhua reported.

Boats were ordered into port along the Fujian coast, and airports in Xiamen and the provincial capital, Fuzhou, closed for part of the day, television reports said. TV footage showed signboards blown down and city residents negotiating streets in the wind and rain.

A government statement, read on Chinese television, expressed "deepest condolences" to victims of the typhoon in Taiwan, where 11 people were killed, 80 injured and thousands stranded in makeshift shelters. The statement, issued by the government's Central Office for Taiwan Affairs, was markedly different in tone from the usual blustery Chinese pronouncements on Taiwan, which Beijing considers a breakaway province.

Among the dead in Taiwan were seven farmers and a 6-year-old girl buried in a mudslide in the remote Taiwanese mountain village of Jenai. A woman was killed by downed electrical wires and a construction worker died when a retaining wall collapsed in a suburb of the capital, Taipei. Another man died after he was hit by a door knocked down by strong winds.



Rescuers searched late into Wednesday night for a missing man last seen floating down a raging river in Taiwan's central Nantou county clinging to a piece wood for support.

Canned fruits, pastas, coffee and tea are a few of the products offered at Mercado Gourmet Grocery in Aggieville. The store opened this summer, and specializes in gourmet foods that are hard to find in this area.

Gourmet items sold in Aggieville

By JJ DUNCAN
Kansas State Collegian

For those who are aspiring gourmet cooks or those who don't know olive oil from vegetable oil, Mercado Gourmet Grocery is ready to offer high quality cooking ingredients as well as advice.

"Mercado has a lot of unique items I can't find anywhere else," Lee Lojka, co-owner of Tula's Out of Bounds Sports Bar and Grill said. "They have some specialty items, cuisines from other cultures. Stuff like that is kind of hard to find at a regular grocery store."

Lojka, who enjoys cooking and has considered attending chef school, shops at Mercado. The high-grade ingredients in stock make it unnecessary to travel to larger metropolitan areas for the same products, and the staff is knowledgeable about the items Mercado offers, she said.

"Usually, I tried to pick stuff up when I was out of town, in Kansas City or St. Louis, but that was few and far between. This is a whole lot more convenient," Lojka said.

Employees are ready to assist aspiring chefs, Melody Ellis, senior in architecture, said.

"People can come in and ask (store manager Jennifer McAnarney) and I anything," she said. "We want this to be a friendly place. We want people to feel comfortable when they walk in the door and to ask all the questions they need."

The objective is for Mercado to be a place where people can come to learn how to use these products as much as they come to purchase the ingredients they can't find anywhere else. For students who are on their own for the first time, learning the basics of cooking can be a great asset, McAnarney said.

REED DUNN/Collegian

Mercado Gourmet Grocery is open Monday through Saturday, and offers a large selection of cooking oils and many other high-grade ingredients.

"One thing we really want people to know is that we're there for them to ask questions, and hopefully if we don't know the answer, we'll find the answer. I'm concerned with teaching people the basics of cooking," McAnarney said.

Mercado provides in-store demonstrations on how to utilize the items it sells. On Thursdays, Fridays and mainly Saturdays, the store provides samples for customers so they can find out what they like.

Ellis said Mercado emphasizes home cooking because often it will instill stronger family values.

"Not enough people sit down and have a meal with their family anymore. It would be nice if we could get more people wanting to cook and to be able to take that time out to spend with family," Ellis said.

Cooking with good food is important, especially in today's fast-food culture, and McAnarney said she hoped to provide the public with the quality that is lacking in today's society.

"We have hybridized everything, we have processed everything, we have done everything so quickly and in such a huge quantity that we have forgotten to taste it. People aren't really tasting what they are eating," she said. "I would rather pay a little bit more for food that I'm putting in my body that has been processed well, and is a good product to begin with."

Say Cheese Deli offers international flair

By REED DUNN
Kansas State Collegian

Even though Say Cheese Delicatessen has been open for about two years, owner Bob Sweet said he is not surprised by the number of customers who think the business is a new addition to Aggieville.

"Virtually everyday I get someone who asks, 'Did you just open?,' or 'How long have you been here?,'" he said.

Tucked down the walkway between O'Malley's Alley and Deja Vu, the deli offers customers a variety of 36 cheeses and more than 20 meats at any given time. Most of the cheeses are imported from France, Italy, Denmark and several other countries.

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said even though the business-front of Say Cheese does not face Moro Street, the walkway is heavily traveled.

"I kind of think his location is unique, like his business," she said. "It's a unique business with a special clientele."

Sweet said despite so many options, the customer favorite is a sharp cheddar from Vermont. The reason for a domestic cheese being the most popular is probably the unfamiliarity with imported cheeses, he said.

"We get people who have never seen a cheese outside of the grocery store," Sweet said.

Customers also enter the deli with a personal understanding of the products sold, since many of the clientele come from the diverse student population of K-State. Sweet said it is possible to enter the business and find students from French, English, German and Italian backgrounds scattered around the 21 seats of the dining area.

"One of the things that has kept me in Manhattan is the whole world is right here," Sweet said. "If you stay around Manhattan and open your mind, you can meet people from cultures in almost every country."

Sieben said catering to the international crowd is something that helps bring diversity to the district.

"He offers an international flare, and that's what sets him apart," she said. "He fills another niche."

Say Cheese employee Emily Sawcett has been working at the deli for about a year, and said she has been fascinated by the conversations that take place. She said the diversity makes it a great place to work.

"The atmosphere here is just very comfortable," she said. "It's a little bit different than the rest of Aggieville."

Even though cheese sales got Sweet started, the business has evolved into a place for lunch and dinner. In the past couple of years he has developed a soup and sandwich menu, and most recently added an evening menu with a selection of pasta dishes.

"This is primarily a sandwich and evening meal business," he said. "The cheese is maybe a third of the business."

Street party scheduled

By JJ DUNCAN
Kansas State Collegian

New students who aren't familiar with Aggieville, here's your chance to become acquainted.

The 1200 block of Moro Street will be closed off tonight for a free all-ages party from 8:30 to 11 p.m. Dance music will be provided by DJs Auturnie, Miro, Matt Brian and Johnno.

"We wanted to get something that was appealing to a cross-section of students," said Eileen Meyer, director of Streetside Records. "Generally, a lot of the welcome-back concerts tend to be just rock bands. This time, we thought it would be neat to have something from the electronic scene."

Streetside Records is sponsoring the event alongside Aggieville businesses Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, Varney's Book Store and Copy Co.

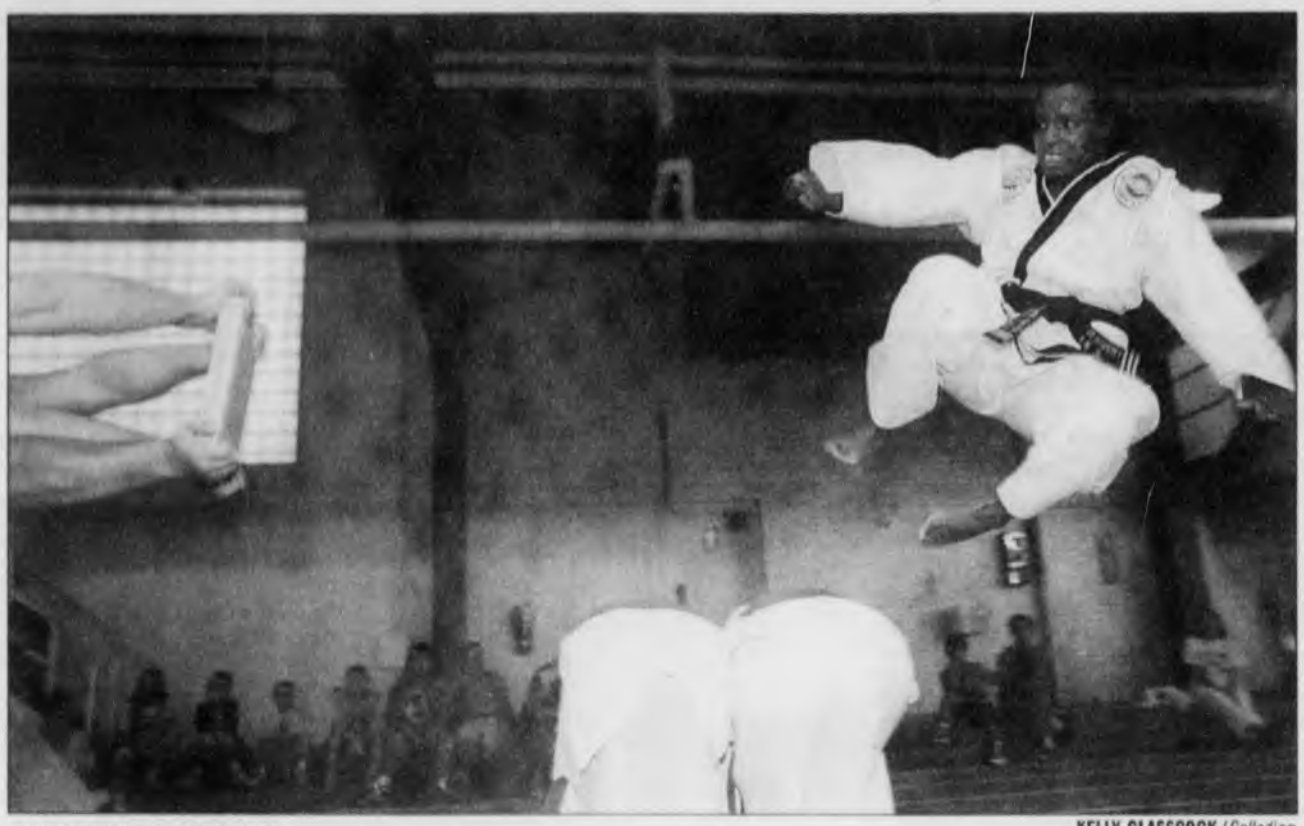
Besides multiple DJs, the street party also boasts another way to keep people entertained. A piece of canvas more than four feet wide and 10 feet long will be brought out blank at the beginning of the event. Attendees will be given the opportunity to paint the canvas and sign up to win it, said Penny Cullers, art supplies department manager at Varney's Bookstore.

At the end of the night, after it is covered by various artists' work, a name will be chosen at random from those who signed up to see who gets to take it home.

"I think this is a nice way for people to express themselves artistically and at the same time give to the community," she said.

The party will continue at Chance after street festivities end at 11. The event was conceived as a way to welcome back students and introduce new students to Aggieville, Meyer said.

"We wanted to get something that was appealing to a cross-section of students."
Eileen Meyer, Streetside Records director



Steve Levin, assistant manager of Varney's Book Store, also was part of the ground level planning.

"We hope that K-State students, wherever they're from, can come down to Aggieville and have an experience that they're not going to find anywhere else in probably the state of Kansas, or at least in a setting like this," he said. "We hope that they feel like Aggieville still has its thumb on the pulse of the K-State student."

Brian Mirakian, whose stage name is DJ Miro, has been playing shows as a DJ for about three years now. Mirakian, who spins techno music known as Progressive House and Trance music, said the ultimate goal is to produce an engaging environment where people can have fun.

Mirakian enjoys producing this kind of music, specifically for the challenge of blending the music he spins.

"I like to think that by doing a show like this that we're opening people up to a kind of music that's new to them; that we're broadening their horizons," he said.

FEE

will look first at alternatives to raising fees, like private donors, Worcester said.

If fees increase for the Union, Walker said he is confident it will handle the money responsibly.

As for the rest of the 2000-2001 schedule, Walker said it won't be nearly as controversial as last year's schedule, which reviewed Lafene Health Center and KSDB-FM 91.9, both of which had been through audits.

"This year is going to be a lot different than last year," he said "This year we can focus on the money being spent and making sure it's spent right.

"Last year there were a lot of other issues going on besides just money."

The other three issues up for review are athletics, Bramlage Coliseum repair and replacements and Union Program Council.

There is no schedule yet for when each group's fees will be reviewed, Walker said. First, the committee have to meet with representatives from each organization and discuss money matters.

Worcester said Senate will make sure these groups are using their money resourcefully.

"We'll look hard at athletics and Bramlage to assure the money is being spent well and all of it's needed," he said.

Last year, student fees were raised $6 per semester, Worcester said, something that hasn't been done in a while.

"We've been lucky with rising enrollment, so we don't have to raise individuals' fees much," he said. "Last year was the first increase in four years."

Walker said he doesn't think fees will be raised, but he can't know for sure this early.

"I don't foresee raising privilege fees," he said. "But I didn't think it was going to happen last year, either, and we had to."

Vice Chair Crystal Campbell said members of the committee will work hard to keep the numbers down.

"Nobody on there is going to raise fees unless it's necessary," she said. Keeping fees low remains a top priority for senate, Worcester said.

"We have to remember every dollar added comes from students' pockets," he said.

able to ask questions and register with the church if they are ready."

Businesses also will have booths at the expo in hopes of attracting student interest. Randy Wise, lead campus representative for Varsity Books.com, said the expo is a great way for the company to sell their products.

"It is wonderful marketing," Wise said.

"There are all kinds of people that walk by our booth, and most are interested. Our name is sold simply because we are here."

Kimble said students are welcome to browse the booths at the carnival in conjunction with participating in events at the Union Expo.

"We want it to be a fun night for the students," Kimble said. "The new Union has so much to offer, and the events will highlight these attractions."

Events for the Union Expo will start at 5 p.m. with Food Court specials, a giant slide, funny photos and a poster print sale. Willie the Wildcat photos will be from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. and Jason the Balloon Guy will be featured from 6 to 8 p.m.

"We also planned evening activities to give the students something to do on their first week back to school," Kimble said. "All evening events will be free."

Comedian Mike Rayburn will perform at 8 p.m. in Union Station, and a free movie and free Rock'It Bowl will start at 9 p.m.

Kimble said she encourages students to stop by the K-State Union Bookstore, Food Court, Computer Store, ID Center, Copy Center and Recreation Center to register for giveaways and to take advantage of special deals.

"We are hoping for a good turnout," Kimble said.

"I can't emphasize enough how much this event will help students see what K-State has to offer."

Communication, Theatre and Dance, had no objection to paying for the cost of inspections. One recommended fee for the mandatory inspection was $36 every three years. The total cost would be shared between the city and the landlord.

"I am willing, as a residential property owner, to pay that $36 to partially offset the cost of the inspection," Anderson said. "All landlords should support this because it would decrease exposure to a lawsuit to negligence."

Anderson said some landlords would not support it because it is an expansion of government, and the cost of the rent would increase due to the cost of the inspections. However, he said $36 for 36 months is not unreasonable. There also is a need for the local government to help people living in below-code housing.

Anderson cited basement apartments, similar to Diptansu Das' home, as the most dangerous. There is not an adequate way out in case of a fire, the walls have potential to leak, and most of the mechanics of the house, such as the furnace and water heater, are located in the basement. Any mechanical malfunctions or explosion would occur in someone's living quarters.

"There are all kinds of problems that can go wrong. If a basement apartment goes uninspected, you are flirting with disaster," Anderson said.

Student Body President Jake Worcester also is on the task force to help rally student involvement.

"My view in talking with the City commission is that there is a need for some sort of mandatory housing inspection. I think it is a necessity. I've seen students living in conditions that are simply unacceptable," Worcester said.

Worcester said there are landlords who support the idea, but the ones who will not support it are the ones with apartments not up to code.

Student Governing Association's mission is to improve student life, Worcester said. For that reason, he wants to push for a resolution supporting the proposal after research has been done. Most of the students will be in support of it, he said.

Anderson said the problem of sub-standard housing has been around long before, but was never an issue because the student population never voiced it's opinion.

Policy is decided by the City Commission, and students generally don't vote in local elections, Anderson said. Students have the potential to elect all five of the city commissioners.

"Property owners know that students are not a threat. They could have political clout and implement a mandatory rental inspection program," Anderson said. "But they're not voting."

and individual donations. Stanfield said she believes the number of donors shows evidence of the support the college has received. Horton said she could not agree more.

"It's great. It's a very motivating factor for us to do the best job we can," Horton said.

Horton also said the opportunity allowed other people and businesses which had not worked with the college before to do so.

"We've had a great deal of community support and encouragement," Horton said.

Recruit brings focus to house accessibility

By MICHELLE BERTUGLIA
Kansas State Collegian

Last week, more than 500 women participated in K-State sorority Rush Week.

For the first time in the history of the university, one of those women was in a wheelchair.

Ten years ago, Jill Caputo, sophomore in open-option, became wheelchair-bound. But her physical disability has not stopped her from doing the things women her age do, such as going through rush, she said.

"This was something I really wanted to do," Caputo said. "If I want to do something, I feel like I should have that chance."

There are 11 K-State sororities that have houses, six of which are handicapped accessible. Alpha Chi Omega, Alpha Xi Delta, Gamma Phi Beta, Kappa Alpha Theta, Kappa Kappa Gamma and Sigma Kappa are in some way handicapped accessible, Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs, said.

On Aug. 16, Caputo pledged Alpha Xi Delta.

"I felt very included, and it was a very positive experience," she said.

To accommodate Caputo throughout the week, Greek Affairs hired a driver from Disabled Student Services to take Caputo to each house and, if needed, provided a ramp for her to use.

"We tried to bring Jill in the same as everyone else," said Julie Hertzler, the recruitment chairwoman for Panhellenic Council. "We did not want to make her feel alienated at all."

There are no current rules for sororities or fraternities regarding handicap accessibility, Robel said.

"Because they are privately owned houses off campus, they are not subject to the American Disabilities Act guidelines," Robel said. "But the university definitely encourages the chapters to work towards accessibility."

Even though only six houses were permanently accessible to Caputo, she was free to become a new member in any house on campus.

"All the houses made the commitment to accommodate Jill even if she signed to a house that was not handicap accessible," Hertzler said.

Hertzler said she hopes Caputo's experience will inspire houses that are not accessible to become so in the near future. Caputo said she was pleasantly surprised that half of the houses already were accessible when there was no mandatory regulations for them to be.

Passwords must be changed by Sept. 10

By APRIL MIDDLETON
Kansas State Collegian

Students, faculty and staff have one more important date to add to their calendars.

In an effort to protect computing identity, files and K-State resources, Computing and Networking Services has set Sept. 10 as the deadline for e-mail passwords to be changed. Passwords must be changed twice a year, near the 20th day of classes each fall and spring.

HOW TO:

Passwords must be changed by Sept. 10

After that date, go to www.ksu.edu/activated to gain access.

To change a password, do one of the following:

- Go to www.ksu.edu/password
- Log on to the central Unix system, type "password" and follow the prompts
- Visit the InfoTech Help Desk with a photo ID

For advice on choosing a new password, go to www.ksu.edu/cns

According to CNS, this policy was implemented last fall due to an increase of break-ins on campus computers. The policy also helps to enhance computer security.

Harvard Townsend, CNS director, said in an e-mail that because this will be the third time they have required that passwords be changed, the incidents of account break-ins has decreased dramatically. He said they are rare now.

CNS automatically will change students' K-State passwords who don't meet the deadline so the account does not become a security risk. Computing IDs may be reactivated by the www.ksu.edu/activated form on the Internet. Identity verification will be required.

The deadline to change passwords was met by about 23,000 people last fall, Townsend said.

Though CNS knows the policy is needed, it is still are trying to find the best way to inform students of the policy and deadlines.

"Changing these passwords has been very beneficial," said Betsy Edwards, communication coordinator for CNS. "We K-State freshmen — get fired up.

Generating excitement was the main purpose of the Wildcat Warm-Up rally at Memorial Stadium on Thursday evening.

The event was put on by the KSU Alumni Association and the KSU Foundation. Sponsors included zk-state.com and Intrust Bank.

Mitzi Frieling, assistant director of student and out-of-state programs for the Alumni Association, said the rally was full of things to get new students excited about K-State.

"We expected between 500 and 1,000 people for this event, including incoming freshmen, members of organizational committees, band members and cheerleaders," Frieling said.

Student Body President Jake Worcester started the event with a brief welcome, followed by a few words from Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco.

"I was about to give a speech, and I wasn't entirely sure of what I was going to say. But after I walked under that arch at the Beach Museum of Art, everything seemed to fall into place," Bosco said.

After commenting on the potential of the 107th freshman class, Bosco mentioned some K-State traditions he said every student should be familiar with. In addition to the tradition of the Wabash Cannonball and the K-State chant, Bosco made a point to mention the arches at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art in his references to tradition.

When Bosco finished, Worcester once again spoke about how students choose the K-State student ambassador at the Homecoming game every season, another time-honored tradition.

Frieling said door prizes, including phone cards, gift certificates and K-State memorabilia, were given away at the rally.

Following the prize handout, Willie the Wildcat gave the freshmen their first dose of the proper way to cheer at home games. Willie lead the traditional "KSU" chant and drew some tickets for prizes himself.

The K-State Marching Band and cheerleaders also performed at the rally.

Frieling said the rally was a success, even though it was not at the most opportune time.

"Unfortunately, this was the only time we could have the rally because this is the only time that the band could be together. They had just been finished with practice before the rally started," Frieling said. "If we could have, we would have had the rally later when it might be a little cooler."

For their performance, the band performed "Hail, Alma Mater" and the K-State fight song.

Free ice cream sandwiches from Call Hall were handed out at the end of the rally, and students concluded with the Wabash Cannonball.

K-State prepares for recruitment under qualified admissions policy

By JENNIFER FARR
Kansas State Collegian

Open enrollment in Kansas universities is a memory now that the adjustment period for qualified admissions has ended.

With the close of this five-year adjustment period, high school seniors graduating in 2001 will be the first freshman class at K-State admitted under qualified admissions legislation.

According to this legislation, for students to enter any undergraduate school in Kansas, they first must complete one of three requirements: graduate in the top third of their class, score at least a 21 on their ACT or receive a 2.0 grade point average in courses required by the Kansas Board of Regents.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said he doesn't expect to see a drastic change in enrollment at K-State with this switch to qualified admissions.

"This should have a very positive and repetitious effect toward the enrollment at Kansas State," Bosco said. "Considering that most of the 3,300 freshmen managed to complete the qualified admissions, there shouldn't be any problem with enrollment."

Daniel Sjell, Manhattan High School student, said he thinks qualified admissions might keep some from attending college because they are not able to make one or two credits.

"Most of the classes we have to take anyway to prepare ourselves for college, but I think it's unfair to exclude students from college if they had only missed the requirement by one credit," Sjell said.

Director of Admissions Larry Moeder said one of the disadvantages qualified admissions carries is the assumption that if the student cannot make the requirements that they cannot attend college.

The Kansas Legislature provides a law that gives leeway for students by allowing colleges to admit 10 percent of its students as exceptions. Exceptions could be made for certain circumstances, such as the student's transcript or confidence that the student would be successful.

Other changes to be implemented will be in the approach of K-State recruitment, such as advising students on how to be admitted to the university.

"Not only are we going to inform the students about how to get admitted, but we are also willing to work with them and their high school counselor in deciding how to meet the criteria," Moeder said. "By taking the required courses for qualified admissions, students should be more prepared overall for college."

Kansas natural-gas firm to raise prices Sept. 1

TOPEKA — Thousands of Kansans could pay more for natural gas starting Sept. 1.

The Kansas Corporation Commission, which regulates utilities, approved new rates for the 93,000 customers of UtiliCorp United Inc. The KCC announced its action Wednesday.

Effects will vary from customer to customer. Some could see their rates decrease, but the overall rate increase is nearly 7.2 percent.

The company sought a rate increase to cover the cost of improvements to its pipeline system. It also established an around-the-clock customer service telephone line and a new billing system.

For the bulk of UtiliCorp's nearly 86,000 residential customers, the average rate increase will be 8.4 percent, or $4.61 a month.

However, for 48 customers south of the Kansas City metropolitan area, the average increase will be 31.5 percent, or $13.75 a month.

The average increase for most businesses receiving gas from UtiliCorp will be 9.5 percent, or $10.23 a month. The KCC said 110 business customers will see an average increase of 14.6 percent, or $14.98 a month.

The rate changes will increase UtiliCorp's revenues by $4.8 million annually, the KCC said. KCC spokeswoman Rosemary Foreman also said the changes will simplify the company's rates, which had featured 25 different classes of customers.

The company had sought higher rates, ones that would have raised an additional $5.8 million a year.

Grand jury investigates president for perjury

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Independent Counsel Robert Ray came to the federal courthouse Thursday as a new grand jury investigating President Clinton met for several hours.

Ray and several prosecutors who work for him carried boxes of documents into the third-floor area where five grand juries were conducting business, the Clinton grand jury among them.

Ray did not comment on his presence at the courthouse.

In a statement Wednesday responding to Democratic criticism, Ray said the case involves serious allegations of perjury and obstruction of justice by the President of the United States.

Ray confirmed last week that the grand jury, impaneled July 11, would delve into Clinton's actions in the Monica Lewinsky scandal. The jurors also met Tuesday.

Ray has said his duties include considering whether to seek an indictment of the president after he leaves office.

His predecessor, Ken Starr, conducted a grand jury probe through most of 1998, leaving voluminous files of evidence and testimony that could be used in the current grand jury probe. The Starr investigation led to Clinton's impeachment by the House.

Company recalls pens due to possible dangers

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A Michigan company is recalling about 7,400 gel pens included with Icee Black notebooks and Icee Black notepads, the Consumer Product Safety Commission said Thursday.

The company issued the recall after finding that an extra spring can make the end caps shoot off and possibly cause eye and facial injuries.

Colorbok, of Dexter, Mich., has received no reports of injuries involved with the pens.

The company said the pens were sold in various colors and have "Colorbok Gel" written on the clip of the pens. The included notebooks have turquoise, lime, magenta or orange covers, and contain solid black notepaper. The notepads that included these pens also contain black notepaper in various shapes, including stars, hearts, butterflies, frogs and cats.

Department, drug, grocery and toy stores sold the notebooks and notepads with these pens from June through July 2000 for about $5.

Consumers should stop using these pens immediately, the company said, and return them to the store where they were purchased for a replacement pen.

For more information, consumers can call Colorbok at 800-366-4660.

Student Senate works to make housing safer

By BRYAN SCRIBNER
Kansas State Collegian

Off-campus students could soon benefit from mandatory rental inspections within the city.

"It's a big issue we're going to be tackling this year," Student Body President Jake Worcester said. "Students are the primary users of rental property and tend to be the ones that most need the program."

At Thursday night's Student Senate meeting, Worcester, who was appointed to a planning committee by the city, said inspections will happen in the near future. He said property inspections would be advantageous for students and the community.

"We want to make sure students are safe," he said. "It's the landlords that know they are not up to code that will not support this."

Inspections would occur every three years or if a property were to change owners.

Worcester also informed Senate members of what he said are the primary issues facing K-State. He said he is looking for ways to improve student life.

Improving advising, technology and a student activities center were briefly discussed. The activities center, which is in the financial-planning stages, will receive much attention this semester, Worcester said.

Communications chair Layne Stafford said he plans to be involved with the center. He said that because of a potential privilege fee increase, many students might be skeptical about its purpose.

"Students are the primary users of rental property and tend to be the ones that most need the program."

Jake Worcester, student body president

"A lot of campus organizations don't have an office they can call their own," he said. "People don't see the long-term benefits."

Phil Anderson, director of K-State's Undergraduate Honor System, presented the system's annual review at the meeting. Now in its second year, it reported 25 cases of cheating last year.

Anderson said the young program has proven to be successful. He said students are becoming more aware of its presence at the university.

"It's interesting that we measure our success by uncovering more cheating," he said.

New senators in the colleges of Business Administration and Arts and Sciences, a new Senate secretary and an honor council representative were approved, and Worcester said the Senate roster was full.

Union EXPOsure

Program brings comedian, free activities to campus

By AMY BRIGGS
Kansas State Collegian

Bob Marley singing the words to Garth Brooks' "Friends in Low Places," and Jimi Hendrix singing the theme song to "Green Acres," are renditions unfamiliar to K-State students.

These songs are what students heard Thursday night in the Union Station. Comedian and musician Mike Rayburn performed celebrity impersonations and other music as part of the Union Expo's free entertainment.

"It's incredible that he has such a wide range of music," Andy Dueringer, junior in advertising, said. "He's well versed in many different genres."

Part of Rayburn's performance included impersonations of singers performing their own songs as well as television theme songs.

K-State students heard Michael Jackson and saw minor choreography similar to the moves Jackson is known for. All of Rayburn's ideas sprouted from his experiences, he said.

"I started as a solo musician in bars," Rayburn said. "There were drunks in these bars, and I had to be funny or carry a gun."

Included in the act were popular songs that Rayburn adapted to the guitar. He played "The Devil Went Down to Georgia" with the "Gilligan's Island" theme song tucked into it.

EVAN SEMON/Collegian

Jenny Lynn, left, freshman in occupational therapy, and Carmen Travis, freshman in pre-health, take their turn at the "Giant Slide" provided by Country Club Entertainment based in Little Rock, Ark. The slide was part of the Union Expo, sponsored by Union Program Council.

Rayburn played some of his original music, including a ballad, "Watercolors," about the perfect girl.

Rayburn also performed popular melodies with their words changed: "Hotel California" became "Hotel Oklahoma."

"I saw him three years ago at K-State," Christopher Piatt, senior in theater, said. "He's quite funny and a terrific songwriter. He writes terrific parody lyrics, also."

Other students came to see Rayburn because of his past K-State performances.

Dueringer said he heard about Rayburn after his last performance and he wanted to see what everyone was talking about.

The Union Program Council sponsored the free entertainment.

Kit Strecker, Eclectic Entertainment chair and sophomore in radio and television, said UPC wanted Rayburn to perform because of his unusual act.

"I think the students liked that it was more than him standing on a stage," Strecker said. "I think they enjoyed that it was more than talking. He's bringing more to it than what you would see in a normal comedian."

Greek housing should consider accessibility

There are six sororities at K-State that should be commended.

Members of Alpha Chi Omega, Alpha Xi Delta, Gamma Phi Beta, Kappa Alpha Theta, Kappa Kappa Gamma and Sigma Kappa, should be proud.

Out of the university's 11 sororities, these six are the only ones that are handicap-accessible.

Because these 11 houses are not based on campus, it is not mandatory for them to be equipped for people with physical disabilities. Making a house accessible for handicapped people is not something that is inexpensive, either.

However, it is well worth the effort.

It is important to remember that just because a house, or any building for that matter, has an outside ramp for people in wheelchairs, it does not necessarily mean they are completely handicapped accessible. Just because individuals have a way to get into a building does not mean they have access to rooms once they are inside.

We encourage others involved in the greek system to consider becoming handicap accessible. Even though it is not required, it invites a much more welcoming atmosphere for students who have physical disabilities.

Landlord OR Slumlord?

Local property owners treat student tenants like welcome mats

my view
ERIN SCHNEWEIS

If you want to be a landlord in Manhattan, there is one thing, and only one thing, that you must do. You must own property.

Nothing more and nothing less. If you own property, you can be a landlord.

This lack of training is evident in a situation that has happened to me.

My roommates and I knew better than to believe we were moving into a palace. We knew this would be a place where there would be no brand-new carpet or sparkling kitchen appliances.

But not even in our worst nightmares did we think, for even one moment, that we would be living in filth.

A place that, after paying an $840 deposit, looked like someone had covered the walls in feces and black markings.

It was a disaster area where closet doors weren't even on the hinges and 19 light bulbs were missing. The kitchen floor looked as though it had never been swept. The patio door was broken, allowing access. The shower rod was held up with super glue. The list goes on.

This wasn't even close to the one that we were shown. Granted, landlords are going to show their best apartments, but this was a huge stretch from the truth. Our apartment didn't even resemble the one we had been shown as an exact duplicate of our future pad. It was unsanitary and unsafe.

Parking is another issue. There are 45 tenants in our building. Our landlord promised us that two out of every three of us would have parking spaces, equivalent to 30 parking spots. Yet, even if you include four spots that are not technically spots, we have a total of 27. Throw in the fact that we basically live in Aggieville and very intelligent people seem to think we are their parking lot for their night out on the town, and that leaves the actual residents with few places to park.

What can you do? All of our stuff was ready to move in. We were nomads at best.

My parents had taken time off from work to assist me with the moving. We already had signed the contract. We had already paid a deposit.

Our landlord offered to give us two cans of paint. After a not-so-friendly discussion, this ruling was changed. Looking back on our agreement, I caved in way too easily.

It makes me wonder: how many other people have experienced this? How many other people have found out too late that their landlord is really a slumlord and that their apartment or house is really a dump?

How many other students have found themselves in similar conditions, or even worse? Such conditions not only could endanger them, but ultimately could make the difference between life and death.

Travis Lenkner, Student Senate chair, said Student Governing Association is trying to work with the city on this subject.

"This is an issue for a lot of students," Lenkner said. "Our goal has been to work with the city to put in place a system that would require inspections on a regular basis."

As of now, the inspection for code violations is not mandatory.

Brad Claussen, building official for the city of Manhattan, said a small number of landlords voluntarily ask for their buildings to be looked over for safety hazards and violations, but far more of the inspections are tenant-initiated.

The city usually inspects around 400 units per year. Tenants can have their apartments or housing arrangements inspected at no cost by calling the Code Inspection Office at 587-4506.

Claussen said students can do a variety of things to ensure they are living in a safe environment.

For instance, if the building is up to code, and the city has looked at it, there will be a Red Apple adhesive sticker on the front door or on a window located in the apartment. He said he suggests that tenants check to make sure the date on the sticker is recent.

Another option for tenants is to call to check on a particular address to see when, if ever, it was last inspected.

At the Code Inspection Office, there is a booklet titled "Check Your Home." This offers tenants a chance to look over their living environments.

The bottom line is that students deserve to move into a safe, clean living arrangement.

Until we get more programs into action, more voices raised, students will continue to be door mats.

And until we put down our foot, some landlords will continue to get by with being slumlords.

K-State needs to focus on staying 'trendy'

my view
JOE HURLA

K-State recently was named one of the top 10 "hottest and trendiest" schools in the nation.

Of course, the macarena, slap bracelets, bell-bottoms and tight-rolled jeans all had their days in the sun, too.

That is not to say K-State will not be able to extend its time in the limelight longer than these sadly short-lived fads. It is simply to say that K-State is going to have to prove itself to its own students if it hopes to hold on to the honors it received in the recent Kaplan/Newsweek 2001 Guidance Counselor Survey.

The survey polled opinions from guidance counselors around the country, asking them questions regarding various aspects of colleges. While this is a decent gauge of what high school students, or at least counselors, think of K-State, it is not an accurate depiction of what K-State students think of their school.

Sure, there are lots of great things about K-State. The university's debate program has just recently been joined by its football, volleyball and women's cross country teams as some of the best in the country. As anyone who has ever spoken to Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco, or anyone else who is paid to speak favorably of K-State, knows, we churn out Marshall, Truman, Rhodes and Goldwater scholars at an astounding rate.

But contrary to some of Bosco's banter, Harvard is rarely referred to as the K-State of the East Coast.

That is because K-State, viewed as trendy this year, might fall to the wayside in the near future if it does not work to shore up its foundation — its students.

If students are not happy, they will leave, and K-State will be in trouble. Sure, the departure of students would improve the university's student-to-instructor ratio, but dwindling numbers will eventually lead to doom.

Most students are not incredibly dissatisfied with K-State. Every Saturday they have a top-10 football program to watch. The rest of their week is easily filled with a potpourri of Aggieville bars.

There are students who want more, though. It is students who don't quite bring K-State one of the illustrious scholarships who are not completely happy with what their university offers them.

Students who don't bring headlines often are ignored.

They are unable to find quality advising; instead, they meet with someone once a semester who signs off on a schedule devised entirely by the student.

They are unable to find classes taught by the best teachers; instead, those teachers have gone to a school that finds a way to reward them for their work.

They are unable to find … well, anything in the library; they search around for books and journals only to find that Hale seems to exist only for aesthetic purposes.

These are only a few of the problems students experience. All of the effort made by dedicated students and faculty, however, are lost when administrators fail to hold up their end of the bargain.

While officials remain trendy by promising to find cures for all of the university's ailments, they have yet to produce substantial results.

K-State is thriving as it never has. But if it intends to continue to do so, changes must be made.

Rather than spending money to bolster faculty salaries and put books in the library, the past summer was spent making even more nice but unnecessary renovations to the K-State Student Union and destroying sensible traffic routes on campus streets.

Students still can't get into many of the classes they want, but they can take a break from trying at the new Cats' Pause Lounge. They can't find a spot to park, but they won't have to worry about it anymore — instead, they will have to spend their time worrying about navigating the newly reconfigured streets on campus.

Unless K-State officials, both in Anderson Hall and in student government, find a way to combat the real issues confronting the university, K-State will last about as long as M.C. Hammer on the "hottest and trendiest" list.

Worcester, Pracht inform students of campus projects, tuition hikes

By BRYAN SCRIBNER
Kansas State Collegian

Fulfilling campaign promises will be a top priority for Student Body President Jake Worcester this semester, but he said students should be aware of a recent tuition hike.

Two increases last June and December raised payments more than 8 percent this fall for resident and non-resident students. Budget director John Struve said tuition will rise again next fall.

Struve said undergraduate residents in fall 2001 will see an increase from $75.55 per credit hour to $77.75 per credit hour. Non-resident undergraduate students and graduate students' rates also will rise between 2 and 3 percent.

The rate increase was approved in June and does not include campus privilege fees.

Struve said this change was reviewed by a Kansas Board of Regents sub-committee in January and February. He said it is important for the university to let students know of tuition changes early.

The tuition increase has been an issue since Worcester took office in April, but he said he is looking forward to pursuing campus projects. He is focused on the creation of a student activities center, advising and various technology issues.

The student activities center idea will go to referendum in November, Worcester said.

"I think it's going to be an exciting year," he said. "The Union renovation being completed this fall will be very nice."

Student Body Vice President Dana Pracht said it will be important to emphasize the environment that a student activities center would create.

"The most important thing is to get students excited about it," she said.

Pracht will be in charge of the Educational Opportunity Fund this year, which will establish funding and recognition for organizations not highly represented on campus. She also said she will be working closely with multicultural cabinet members.

"We're really pumped about our issues and reaching students that aren't involved in organizations," she said.

Several minority students will be involved in Senate, as will students from every housing option, Worcester said. He said this participation will allow decision-makers to examine issues from different perspectives.

"I see real concern in the student senators to make improvements in student life," he said.

More than 22,000 students are projected to attend K-State. As student body president, Worcester said he would like to implement projects that will help improve the university not only this year, but five to 10 years in the future.

"I think the position is one that has a lot of potential," he said. "You can do a lot of things that people don't think about."

Improving academics, online voting, KATS, student life and off-campus housing will also be some of Worcester's main concerns. He said he will stand up for students.

"I want to represent students to the administration and faculty," he said. "I'm going to be a voice to the students."

KSU Foundation raises record donations for student scholarships

■ Contributions increased consecutively since 1996 to fund various projects.

By DALAENA NEFF
Kansas State Collegian

Scholarship opportunities are abundant at the KSU Foundation, with the organization reaching a record breaking amount of contributions this year.

Their new annual record reached more than $40 million as of June 30, 2000, the end of the fiscal year.

The Foundation organizes fund-raising efforts for a variety of people, not just alumni, said Julie Lea, director of communications for the Foundation.

"We are the fund-raising arm of the university," Lea said.

Lea said the Foundation also works with the administrative staff to discuss how they want their gift to be used.

"We have wonderful, cooperative relationships with the administration and faculty on campus," Lea said. "We have to be a team."

The amount contributed has increased consecutively since 1996, Lea said.

Lea said the Foundation now has developmental officers working for all nine colleges as well as the Center for Basic Cancer Research, Hale Libraries and the Multicultural Center.

Having more people working to raise money for each department and being able to visit with more donors has helped a lot, Lea said.

There is a banquet on Friday night in Kansas City, Kan., to celebrate the end of the scholarship campaign and to honor the volunteers and donors.

The goal was to raise $50 million during this campaign, Lea said.

"We have wonderful, cooperative relationships with the administration and faculty on campus. We have to be a team."

Julie Lea, director of communications for the KSU Foundation

"We raised $63.5 million," Lea said.

These scholarships are awarded through the various colleges and through their own set of criteria, Lea said.

Two K-State graduates from 1953 contributed large sums of money to establish scholarships for the College of Engineering and the College of Education. Carl E. Nuzman and Janet Steck Nuzman, of Silver Lake, Kan., have established a scholarship to be available to students enrolled in biological, agricultural, civil engineering and construction science.

The Janet Steck Nuzman Teaching and Coaching Scholarship will be available for a teacher who has an interest in coaching.

Janet Nuzman taught at Washburn University for 33 years and became deeply involved with the athletic program.

"Coaching was my first love," Nuzman said. "It was a developing time for women's athletics at the end of the 1960s and early '70s."

Janet Nuzman said engineering has helped her husband a great deal, and now they want to give back to K-State.

Bill and Mardelle Meredith have created the Dr. Hugh and Beulah Meredith Veterinary Medicine Scholarship in memory of Bill Meredith's parents.

This will be an annual scholarship of $5,000 to a student from Lincoln or Montgomery counties, where Dr. Hugh and Beulah Meredith were raised.

"My parents' lives were very involved in vet medicine," Meredith said.

Bill Meredith is a 1971 K-State graduate with a bachelor's degree in psychology. He has been the director of the School of Family Studies and Human Services for the last year.

Megan Briggs, junior in English and member of the Student Foundation, said the Foundation is a positive link between students and alumni.

"We prepare students to give back to the university after they graduate," Briggs said.

Oklahoma State's Tony Lindsay is dragged down by K-State's Ben Leber and Mark Simoneau in the third quarter of last season's game in Stillwater, Okla. The Wildcat defense didn't allow the Cowboys to score in the second half, and helped the team come back from a 21-0 deficit to win 44-21. The Wildcats start this season at 1 p.m. Saturday in Kansas City, Mo., against Iowa.

Linebacker's grit, ability add to team's reputation

By DAN GILLENWATER
Kansas State Collegian

Southern California has its tailbacks. Brigham Young has its quarterbacks. K-State has its linebackers.

Over the past decade, the Wildcat defense has built a solid reputation as one of the best units in the country.

Players such as like Mark Simoneau, Jeff Kelly and Travis Ochs have become household icons in the state of Kansas. K-State linebackers hold down the fort as the cornerstone of an aggressive and speedy 4-3 defense.

With the kickoff of "Campaign 2000" approaching this Saturday, there are some new faces in the starting trio. With high expectations and talk of a possible FedEx Orange Bowl berth, some might wonder if this year's unit can meet the quota.

"We learned a lot from Mark and Jeff and guys who have been here in the past," senior Jason Kazar, former walk-on, said. "They showed us how to become not only better football players, but better students of the game as well. Now is our time to shine."

Kazar is slated to start along with junior Ben Leber and senior Turelle Williams as the next group in a short, yet proud, tradition of fine linebackers at K-State.

Relying on grit to get him where he is now, Kazar occupies the weak outside linebacker spot former occupied by Simoneau a year ago. Kazar is described as one of the hardest workers on the team by defensive coordinator Phil Bennett.

Not the biggest or fastest player on the squad, Kazar spent hours in the film room watching tape to discover the weaknesses of the opponents in order to have the upper hand once Saturday rolls around.

A middle linebacker last season, Leber has moved to the strong side position in 2000. An All-Big 12 selection, he brings experience and veteran leadership to the Cats as a mainstay in the linebacking corps.

Taking over Leber's role in the middle this year is Turelle Williams. The senior will be relied on heavily to shut down the run and put the heat on opposing quarterbacks.

With a 1:09 p.m. kickoff scheduled for Saturday against Iowa, the idea of playing on national television in front of an estimated 40 million viewers and earning more respect in the world of college football makes Leber simply ecstatic.

"It is going to be a wonderful opportunity for us to show the rest of the country how we play football at K-State," Leber said.

Head football coach Bill Snyder is ready to play Iowa on Saturday in Kansas City, Mo. Snyder served 10 years as offensive coordinator for K-State's opponent in the Eddie Robinson Classic.

The NEW versus the OLD

Cats meet Snyder's former team in K.C.

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

Saturday will be a welcoming event for head football coach Bill Snyder.

When eighth-ranked K-State travels to Arrowhead Stadium this weekend to battle Iowa, the Cat coach will be facing a strikingly familiar university.

In fact, Snyder served as the offensive coordinator for the Hawkeyes for 10 seasons, 1979-88, prior to his arrival in Manhattan.

In Iowa City, under then-head coach Hayden Fry, Snyder played a key role in the renaissance of a program that went from 17 consecutive losing seasons to eight consecutive bowl appearances.

He was the mastermind behind Iowa's potent offensive attack, as the Hawkeyes' ranked first in passing efficiency and third in passing yardage nationally in his last five years of direction.

Now at K-State, the old and the new will clash at 1:09 p.m. Saturday in the 4th annual Eddie Robinson Classic at the game's neutral site in Kansas City, Mo.

However, Snyder said his connection and feelings toward Iowa are completely separate from his preparation and the way the team approaches the ball game.

"There really isn't a great deal of emotion involved in this for me," Snyder said. "My emotion towards the University of Iowa is the same as it was a year ago ... I have a definite love for the University of Iowa and Iowa City, the state of Iowa and the people of Iowa.

"I spent 10 years of my life there, and they were very positive years, and I was fortunate to be around absolutely tremendous people. I appreciate them and their program and all that goes along with it very, very much, but it just doesn't intercede with what we're doing."

Instead, Snyder said the Hawkeye matchup will be viewed the same as any other season opener.

"It's an opening ball game for us against a very, very fine program, a fine team, and fine players," he said.

Among those fine players for Iowa include several standouts on the offensive side of the football.

Hard work brings K-State linebacker out of Simoneau's shadow

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

He calls himself an "extreme workaholic."

"I don't like to quit, and I don't like to give up. I like to prove to everybody that I can play, and even if I'm not as athletic as other people, I think my hard work pays off."

That has always been the philosophy for senior Jason Kazar.

The former walk-on from Manhattan High School never thought he'd see the day when he'd be the starting linebacker for the No. 8 team in the nation, especially considering the talented corps the Wildcats have had in the past.

That talent, Kazar said, is centered around former K-State linebacker Mark Simoneau, whom Kazar shadowed much of his collegiate career.

"The last four years I've been behind probably the greatest linebacker in K-State history," Kazar said. "Now it's my time to shine, here's my chance to do it, and all the preparation and all the hard work I've done in the past has got to show up — and I'm just really excited to get my chance."

That chance will come Saturday, when Kazar will start against Iowa in the 4th annual Eddie Robinson Classic in Kansas City, Mo.

Kazar said he'll be able to apply much of Simoneau's teachings to the playing field this weekend.

"I can only hope to be as physical as him and be as big of a playmaker as he was, but just the way he focused was amazing," Kazar said. "If I can just focus like he did, I'll be all right.

"Every day is just another day. Every day you go out there and take it as hard as you can."

In addition to Simoneau's guidance, Kazar said he learned to think football from watching former linebacker Travis Litton.

"Sometimes he knew the defense better than the coaches," Kazar said. "That's what I learned from him, how to be knowledgeable of the game.

"You don't have be one of the biggest and strongest players, but if you can play technically sound and just do the right thing all the time, then things will work out for you. And

Volleyball team to compete against K-State alumnae in annual scrimmage

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

K-State volleyball fans should not expect much competition between the Wildcat squad and alumnae in the annual alumnae match at 5 p.m. Friday in Ahearn Field House.

In fact, there won't be any competition.

The Cats have become such a powerful team that Coach Jim McLaughlin enacted a mercy rule and is not pitting them against an alumnae team at all.

"There has never been a good match between the alumni and players," McLaughlin said. "Last year we beat them in the first set, 15-0. It's a great time for the alumni. It just wasn't good enough volleyball."

What fans will be shown, instead, is a purple-and-white scrimmage by the current K-State squad. The alumnae also will scrimmage, although a few, including recent graduate Dawn Cady, will scrimmage with the present team.

However, the change will not downplay the alumnae participation, McLaughlin said.

"It gives the alumni a chance to relive what they did here and meet the current girls," McLaughlin said. "They helped build this program up."

The lack of an actual alumnae scrimmage will not be the biggest absence Friday, however. More troubling to the team is the loss of junior outside hitter Lisa Mimick, who injured her foot eight days ago. Mimick has since undergone surgery and already has had a cast removed.

Mimick attended practice Tuesday, but was unable to jump or put any pressure on her foot and might be inactive for the rest of the season. If so, she might have the option of taking a redshirt season, McLaughlin said.

"We're really going to miss Lisa," McLaughlin said. "She was our No. 2 hitter at the time. With her ability to pass the ball and make digs, we're losing a really good player."

"Last year we beat them in the first set, 15-0. It's a great time for the alumni. It just wasn't good enough volleyball."
Jim McLaughlin, coach

With Mimick off the court at least temporarily, the player expected to pick up the slack is freshman Cari Jensen.

Despite the loss of Mimick, the team will enter the alumnae scrimmage playing well, McLaughlin said.

"We had a real good day yesterday," McLaughlin said. "The intensity was way up."

The intensity still is there, McLaughlin said, because the team was allowed to rest at times during two-a-day practices.

"We put in blocks of rest," McLaughlin said. "When fatigue increases, learning decreases."

The players will not be resting at the alumnae match, however. Fans can expect to see tough competition from the team, McLaughlin said.

"It's another opportunity to scrimmage," he said. "The players will get a chance to goof off with the alumni, but then they're going to go hard. Fans will see high-powered volleyball."

IOWA

Senior quarterback Scott Mullen will lead the Hawkeye passing game, as he looks to connect with Iowa's highly touted receiving duo of junior Kahlil Hill and senior Kevin Kasper.

"When you fit all of those three guys together," Snyder said, "you've got some pretty good 'skill' people, and it creates a lot of balance in their offense."

That balance is maintained by a strong running game sparked by junior LaDell Betts.

"He's a good, hard runner and likes to bounce a lot of his perimeter runs," senior linebacker Turelle Williams said. "He reads his blocks, and he's a great receiving back."

Betts accounted for 83.4-percent of Iowa's rushing yards in 11 games last season en route to second-team All-Big Ten honors.

"LaDell Betts is probably one of the best running backs we'll see all season," junior linebacker Ben Leber said. "Just like with any great running back and any good team, we've got to be where we're supposed to be.

"We've got 11 guys out there, and if 11 guys aren't where they're supposed to be and one guy is out of position, then I'm sure LaDell's going to find that opening and hit it."

This will be the sixth meeting between K-State and Iowa, with the Hawkeyes defeating the Cats in all five previous occasions, the last dating back to a 45-10 Iowa victory Sept. 10, 1988.

However, the Hawkeyes are coming off a dismal 1-10 season under fifth-year coach Kirk Ferentz, who served on Fry's Iowa coaching staff with Snyder.

Meanwhile, the Cats are stemming from an 11-1 campaign in 1999 and a 24-20 victory in the Culligan Holiday Bowl.

Senior quarterback Jonathan Beasley will start for K-State, although Snyder said redshirt freshman Ell Roberson will be available for action.

"He has taken reps in practice, and he's doing fine," Snyder said. "There's a lot of guys that are not starters that we would like to have a chance to get in the ballgame, but in a ballgame like this, we're not going to force the issue with anyone."

KAZAR

that's what Travis did."

Kazar said the stiff competition at the linebacker position has made him work harder every year, a quality that has become quite evident to his peers.

"He's the hardest worker on the team," Leber said. "I don't see how he does it. He's always fired up, he's always ready to go. And at the same time, we have a good time jokin' around in the locker room — he's quite a character.

"I'm excited for him. He's worked hard for his position, he's very intelligent, he knows the game inside and out."

Defensive coordinator Phil Bennett said he already can see the fire in Kazar's eyes for the upcoming season.

"He's a working fool," Bennett said. "Jason is focused right now at being a player. He knows it's not a back-up Saturday for him."

Without that back-up role, Kazar said he's motivated to prove himself each and every play.

Students attempt to stay cool as temperatures increase

By BRYAN MURPHY
Kansas State Collegian

Temperatures have reached the century mark. The humidity is high, and by simply walking to class, a typical student can break out in a hot sweat.

The weather of recent in the Manhattan area, in particular the recent temperature and humidity increases, have led to all too familiar complaints. However, there is another aspect of this that deserves special attention — people sensitive to the temperature and humidity.

With regards to records, times have been worse, believe it or not.

"Specific days when temperatures have been over one hundred degrees is changing from year to year," climatologist Mary Knapp said. "So far this year there have been 15 days when the temperature reached 100 degrees, while in the month of September alone in 1998 there were 12 such days."

The number of 100-degree days this year is low in comparison to the years of the Dust Bowl, when the record local temperature was set at 112 degrees, Knapp said. In recent years, the occurrence of such weather has varied between five and 20.

On Thursday, the air temperature reached a high of 95 degrees with a heat index of 100 degrees, Knapp said. However, Wednesday actually saw an air temperature of 101 degrees with a heat index of 103 degrees.

Knapp said that with the combination of high temperatures and humidity, the human body can find such conditions difficult to deal with unless necessary procedures have been taken to avoid such high risk.

"Basically, one has to make sure that he or she is getting plenty of fluids in his or her body throughout the day," Knapp said. "And the best liquid to use would have to be water. Sometimes people drink liquids other than water under the impression that such fluids will provide their bodies with the necessary water. This is not the case."

Cathie Barry, director of nursing at Lafene Health Center, said she agrees.

"The intake of alcoholic and caffeinated beverages causes the body to actually lose water and other bodily liquids rather quickly," she said.

Some of the symptoms associated with heat related illnesses include cramping of the joints and clammy skin, Barry said. If such symptoms ever occur, it is imperative that the person affected remain cautious and increase fluid intake. However, heat exhaustion — dehydration — is the most common symptom of many heat-related illnesses.

"Heat exhaustion results from the excess loss of fluid and salt in the body," Barry said.

Even more serious than dehydration is heat stroke, which requires immediate medical attention.

"Heat stroke is a very serious problem that must be dealt with immediately because it affects the heat control center of the brain," Barry said. "Some symptoms, besides dehydration, include headaches, confusion, and rapid respiration."

For those who choose to exercise, Knapp said that if a person is a regular exerciser, that he or she should exercise early in the morning when the air temperature is at its lowest point or wait until after sunset. In addition, Barry said she thinks it is a good idea to exercise with someone else if exercising is done during the day so that, in case a medical crisis does occur, the person affected is not alone in search of assistance.

The odds of someone getting a heat-related illness are much higher if the person has experienced such illness before, Knapp said.

Haylee Kirkendall, 6, Ogden, Kan., does a cartwheel into the spray of a sprinkler Wednesday afternoon. Kirkendall and her 8-year-old brother, T.C., spent the afternoon in the front yard of their grandmother's house on Frontier Lane. The high for Wednesday was 105 degrees Fahrenheit.

Students find local area offers variety of activities for weekend entertainment

By SHAUNA COFFINDAFFER
Kansas State Collegian

Julie Quackenbush has a problem.

"I've got the whole weekend here, and I have no idea what there is to do around here," Quackenbush, freshman in engineering, said.

From Aggieville to Tuttle Creek State Park to campus activities, students have found different ways to satisfy their desires to get out on the weekends.

Some have found fun visiting the clubs and bars in and out of the Manhattan area. Lisbeth Ohse, sophomore in music education, said going to clubs is a great way to see people.

"A lot of people go and it's fun just to get out," Ohse said.

With karaoke and live bands, Greg Bollenbach, manager of Bobby T's Bar and Deli, said he believes it's the variety of activities going on that keep people coming back.

"It is just a great way to have a good time," he said.

If the cover charge or age restriction is a problem, Dustin Weeden, sophomore in history, said just walking around Aggieville is as good, if not better, than actually going into the bars.

"So many people are out that you can talk to, and you don't even have to pay," Weeden said.

While some students plan to dance the night away, others have found relaxation over a steaming cup of coffee. Kurt Hudson, senior in management information systems, said it's the great atmosphere, along with a good cup of java, that keeps him visiting his favorite stop, the Espresso Royale Caffe.

"There's so many different people who come here," Hudson said.

Mark Skochdopole, owner of Java Espresso & Bakery, said it can get pretty crowded during the days, especially Sundays.

"We get people from students to teachers who are looking for a way to relax and get ready for the week," Skochdopole said.

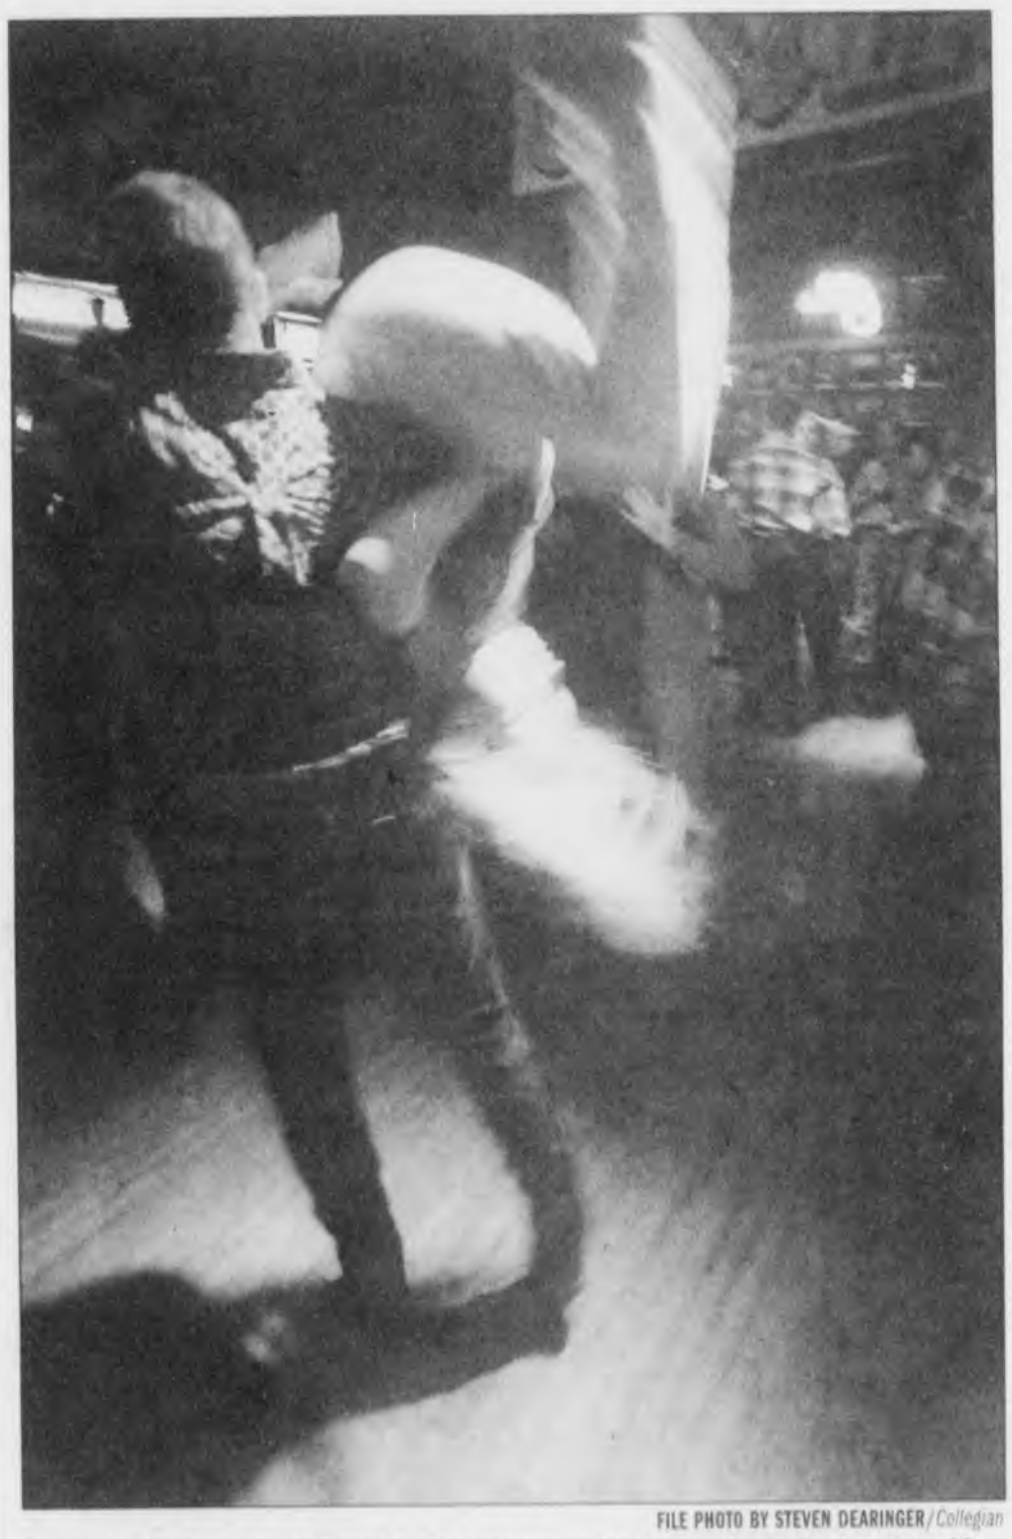
For Eric Sutter, the weekends are a great time to release some excess energy and enjoy the outdoors at the same time.

"I like to go to Wildcat Creek and play volleyball or softball. I just want to be outside and get involved," Sutter, sophomore in criminology, said.

Ben Swenson, senior in business, said he loves to go to Tuttle Creek on the weekends.

"Going out at night is the best because the stars are so big. You can see them for miles," Swenson said.

Maureen Reynolds, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, said the warm weather makes it a perfect time for her to go to the park.



"There's a beach that is nice to lay out on, and lots of people go to Pillsbury Crossing to jump off ropes into the water. We go camping a lot there, too," Reynolds said.

Kallie Hageman, sophomore in health management information, said she likes to spend her weekends hanging out with friends in the K-State Student Union.

"We like to go to the bowling alley and play pool right in the rec center," Hageman said. "It's just fun being with your friends."

Weeden said he has spent some weekends with people from his residence hall.

"We've gone camping and played games," Weeden said. "I probably know the people on my dorm (floor) better than anyone else."

Christian bands to perform free concert

By ERIN SCHNEWEIS
Kansas State Collegian

Students have an opportunity to attend a concert that fits into their budget — it's free.

United Methodist Campus Ministries, along with KHCA-FM 95.3, will sponsor an evening of Christian music Sunday at the open stage in the Manhattan City Park. The concert will begin at 8:30 p.m. with a local praise band followed by Unified Front, a five-member band from Kansas City, Mo.

Frank Pritz, campus pastor, said Unified Front is gaining recognition as a serious Christian group. The band just released its first album, which will be on sale at the concert, and will be opening for Jars of Clay at a Sept. 3 concert in Kansas City, Mo.

Pritz said Unified Front has been well-received in past performances.

"People who have heard them have enjoyed them, and they are really excited about them coming," he said.

Amber Smith, program director, said this is an excellent opportunity for students to meet others that attend K-State as well as to become more aware of other community events and groups. She said this will especially be the case for new students.

"We are really excited," she said. "It's a neat event to kick off the school year."

The chance to meet new people isn't the only reason to attend the concert, Smith said. A positive aspect of the event is getting a chance to enjoy good music in a non-threatening environment.

She said the different rhythms of the band should also please the crowd.

"They play some faster stuff and some slower stuff, so this is a group that people will enjoy," Smith said.

Jerry Hutchinson, general manager and owner of KHCA, said concert goers can expect to hear a wide range of music from Unified Front.

"The style is varied enough (that) it should appeal to a variety of musical tastes," he said.

Snyder, Wildcats deserve respect from Hawkeye fans

DEREK BOSS
K-State Collegian sports editor

If anyone has the right to criticize head football Bill Snyder, shouldn't be anyone associated with the University of Iowa.

Sure, the Hawkeyes should be excited for a chance to upset a top-10 rated school, but they know first-hand Snyder's miraculous workings, and with Iowa's 1-10 record last season, it has no room to talk.

Heck, Snyder overhauled the entire offense in Iowa City that went from rags to riches. In his 10 seasons, 1979-88, as offensive coordinator, the Hawkeyes went from 17 consecutive losing seasons to eight straight bowl appearances. Not too shabby.

Then, ironically enough, when Snyder left the Iowa program to take over the head coaching job at K-State, the Hawkeye football squad began a gradual decline to the depths of the Big Ten.

I would just like to take time to say that Iowa's 0-8 record in conference play last year was indeed impressive, considering it was its worst season in about 30 years. Now there's a program on the upswing, isn't it?

Yet, cries of "overrated" and "weak scheduling" come billowing from the university. I'm sure even the corn stalks have a negative opinion of K-State.

My only question is, why?

How can anyone from the University of Iowa turn its back on one of its own? Snyder gave everything he had, for 10 years of his life, to that football program, but what thanks does he get?

I'm afraid it all comes down to respect.

Outside the state of Kansas, it's pretty apparent there's little reverence for K-State football, and that regard comes at no easy cost.

How many times will the Cats have to beat Nebraska for people to notice? Who will K-State have to schedule as non-conference opponents to get some appreciation?

Those questions don't have answers.

No matter what the Wildcats do, they will never reach the status of one of the premier college football programs in the nation — unless they win a national championship.

It's what separates the Cats from a "good" program to a program that has reached national prominence.

And it all starts Saturday.

A romp over Iowa will set the ball rolling for the 2000 season, a ball that must continue to roll clear through the Cats' Nov. 11 meeting with the Red Sea of Nebraska.

So much to look forward to, so many big games to play down the road.

It must be hard for the Cats to not look past a horrible opponent like Iowa, but everyone knows Snyder won't allow that.

He's far too good of a coach. We're talking about the 1998 Associated Press, Bear Bryant, Bobby Dodd and Walter Camp National Coach of the Year, and the 1998 Consensus Big 12 Coach of the Year.

He was even an ESPN finalist for Coach of the Decade.

Not to mention that he's the all-time winningest coach in K-State history after engineering one of the greatest turnarounds in college football history.

Not bad, huh?

Here's just a few indications of Snyder's national prominence from his accomplishments at K-State.

Doug Looney of Sports Illustrated said, "All Snyder did was inherit an impossible situation and make it possible, proving once again that no mountain is ever too steep for a climber."

Former University of Oklahoma and Dallas Cowboy head coach Barry Switzer said, "Bill Snyder isn't the coach of the year, and he isn't the coach of the decade. He's the coach of the century."

With that kind of respect for a coach, one only wonders when K-State football as a whole will get that kind of national recognition.

Maybe this is the year the Cats will get that national title, but regardless, the K-State program will continue its contention as one of the top teams in the nation.

It'll take the strong, firm foundation Snyder has built for them and maintain it into the future.

At least it's nice to know the Wildcats aren't foolish enough to throw it away like Iowa.

Overrated K-State might be upset by non-conference foe

JEREMY SCHNITKER
Daily Iowan sports editor

Hmm ...

K-State football, the land of powderpuff, non-conference schedules and rosters loaded with community college players.

The team that always is overrated and never wins games it's not supposed to.

Heck of a first-rate, prestigious program Bill Snyder has built, isn't it?

As Eddie Robinson nears, I think it's too bad his Wildcats play Iowa when the Hawks are at their worst in 30 years—otherwise, the Hawkeyes could show them what it's like to play a decent team in a non-conference game.

I figure the only reason Snyder had the guts to schedule Iowa in the first place is because he knew it would be bad.

Iowa is pretty bad, and I will admit, K-State has a solid team this year. It's loaded with one of the best receiving corps in the nation and has an as-always solid defense.

But, even the most hardcore Wildcat fan would have to say these guys are a little overrated heading into this season; which is the only reason I have any hopes for a Hawkeye victory.

Jonathan Beasley is no gamebreaker, and for a system as centered on the quarterback as K-State, that spells trouble. On defense, there are two large holes in the Wildcats' defense with the departures of Mark Simoneau and Darren Howard.

A top-10 team? I think not.

Now, the Hawkeyes aren't great, but they're going to be better than everyone thinks, and they're much better than any non-conference team K-State has played in a while.

Iowa's offense has firepower—All-Big Ten running back Ladell Betts, a proven receiver tandem of Kahlil Hill and Kevin Kasper and a much more experienced offensive line than a year ago.

The defense will be much, much better than last year under the tutelage of former SEC Defensive Coordinator of the Year Norm Parker. The Hawkeyes have added speed and depth to every position on defense.

Above all, two things in this game stand out — K-State hasn't played a non-conference game with a significant conference team since 1994, when it played Minnesota. Also, the last time the Wildcats played a Big Ten team was when they were upset by Purdue in the 1998 Builders Square Alamo Bowl.

Talentwise, maybe the Hawkeyes don't match up well with K-State, but neither did Purdue, and you folks down in Manhattan know how that one ended.

I'll also tell you that Iowa will put up much more of a fight than previous K-State season-openers such as Temple and Indiana State.

If there ever were a scenario for an upset, this is it. One Iowa team with nothing to lose going up against an overrated K-State team that has a top-10 rating to lose. Plus, it's at a neutral site.

K-State probably will beat the Hawkeyes. They'll probably beat them pretty badly. I have to face the fact that Iowa doesn't have the talent this year. But I think it's funny that Snyder didn't agree to a home-and-home series with Iowa. I think he knows his team won't have this much of an edge over the Hawks for long.

This year will be another average season for the Wildcats. They'll thump the other Kansas school and all the other no-name programs they play. They'll get smoked by Nebraska like they have 30 out of the past 31 times they've played, and once again, K-State will get snubbed by the BCS as it always does.

Bill Snyder, when will you learn? You have to beat somebody other than Utah State and Iowa to get national respect—until then, don't cry when you're playing in the Alamo Bowl with a 10-1 record.

Jeremy Schnitker is the sports editor for the Daily Iowan newspaper at the University of Iowa.

sophomore was the right thing for her, Caputo said.

"I had so much to worry about, being in a wheelchair my first year, I thought it would be better to wait and find out what the houses were like," Caputo said.

Hertzler said she thinks Caputo's presence will help break stereotypes about the greek system.

"I hope people can look at us and realize it is not a cookie-cutter image anymore," Hertzler said. "We try to include everyone and want to help reduce stereotypes about us. Greeks don't want to come off as exclusive."

Caputo said it is important for everyone to know how wonderful her recruitment experience was.

"It was a good experience and anyone who wants to go through rush should, regardless of their limitations," she said.

Around campus, Caputo is being praised as a pioneer.

"Jill being the pioneer woman was just the push the university needed and chapters needed to look at themselves and say, 'What do we need to do for the future?'" Hertzler said.

just want to make sure all students are aware when the change needs to be made."

CNS recently decided to send an e-mail to all students in early September to remind them of the deadline to change passwords, Townsend said.

This method originally was not used because of the security risks it could pose if a hacker already had broken into an account. Edwards said the hacker would receive the e-mail, change the password and continue using the account, Edwards said.

Townsend said even though this is a small concern, the benefit of notifying every student directly by e-mail outweighs the risk.

Edwards said CNS is continuing to explore options to inform students about the deadline and importance of changing computing ID passwords.

"If there is a big problem with people breaking into K-State e-mail accounts, then I understand changing passwords," Mike O'Leary, junior in fine arts, said. "If this is happening, I guess it's a good idea."

Edwards said there are three methods that can be used to change passwords for K-State computing IDs. Students can use the secure form on the Internet at www.ksu.edu/password; log on to the central Unix system, type "password" and follow the prompts; or visit the InfoTech Help Desk with their photo ID.

"Students can use any method they want to," Edwards said. "It just depends on the time they have to spend and what's most convenient for them."

More information about changing passwords is available from the CNS Web site.

Smoking-ban issue to return to commission

By FRANK FLATON
Kansas State Collegian

Three months of work have put the once-stagnant smoking-ban legislation back on the Manhattan City Commission's plate.

After all five commission members recommended during a May 28 work session that an ordinance could be beneficial and should be evaluated, the city attorney's office compiled two drafts of an ordinance concerning the ban of smoking in restaurants and bars.

Since then, the city manager's office sent the two drafts to every restaurant and bar in Manhattan to survey local businesses' responses to the ordinance.

The drafts and the results will be presented to the commission at a scheduled work session on Sept. 12. The drafts are not official ordinances, but are suggestions to the commission.

"The work session is more for us to discuss the issue," Commissioner Carol Peak said. "This is a chance for us to receive feedback so that we can look into a future course of action. The staff has taken our direction and responded with a document for us to look at."

Peak said the session will attempt to determine if more drafts or research should be done.

The smoking-ban ordinance first surfaced when then-Student Body President Jason Heinrich recommended to the Student Senate on Feb. 3 a resolution supporting a smoking ban in all public places. Senate debated the legislation and adopted it Feb. 17.

Heinrich initiated the proposal to make bars and restaurants clear from health dangers associated with smoking.

On March 23, the commission received a request from the Manhattan Health Department to consider the ordinance.

The commission then recommended the city manager's office research and produce drafts of possible legislation.

Jason Hilgers, management assistant with the office, sent the drafts to establishments on Aug. 10 and is processing the data the office received. So far, Hilgers said that the majority of the response from the surveys is negative.

"Most of the fast-food restaurants were receptive, because most of them already prohibit smoking," he said. "We haven't received everything yet, but not all of it has been positive.

"I've gotten a lot of anti-government responses. Some owners have the perception that the government is after their business and that it is an illegal activity."

Hilgers said he sent the surveys because there was a concern that restaurant and bar owners weren't being represented.

"This is a way to make sure that they are

Marcella Burks had a laugh that was hard to forget.

The sound is so memorable, in fact, that the very thought is enough to cause her friends to smile during a time of grief.

"It was just so funny," Brandon Clark, junior in social science, said. "Marcy had such a good spirit."

Marcy Burks, a May 2000 K-State graduate from Arkansas City, Kan., died early Friday morning at Stormont-Vail Hospital in Topeka. She was 24.

BSU members remember Burks at annual group picnic Saturday.

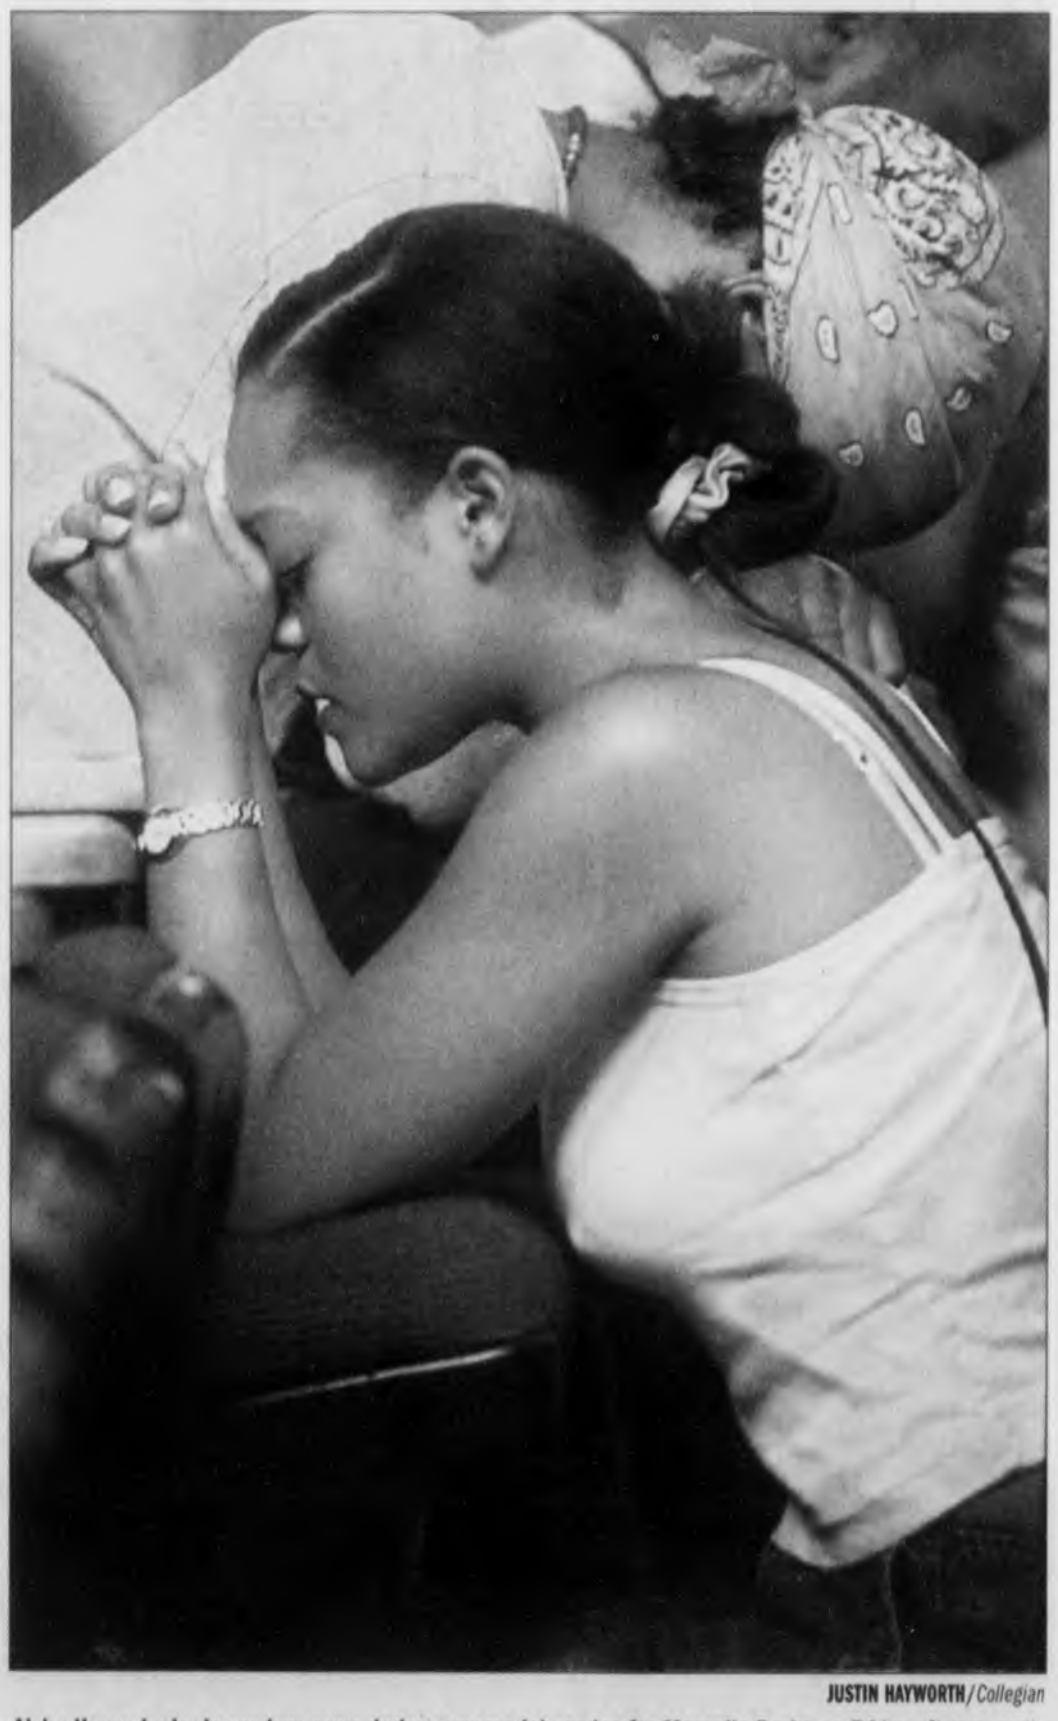
On Tuesday, Burks was admitted to Manhattan's Mercy Health Center on College Avenue and, showing symptoms such as sensitivity to light, a severe headache and a stiff neck, was diagnosed with viral meningitis. She was transported to Stormont-Vail for treatment later that day but died of complications of the disease early Friday morning.

"She was diagnosed with anemia a while back, and since then her immune system had been run down," said Brandi Edwards, senior in kinesiology and a close friend of Burks.



Viral meningitis causes inflammation of the tissues surrounding the brain and spinal cord, but it is often confused with the bacterial meningitis, a much more contagious disease. Viral meningitis can be caused by several types of viruses, especially enteroviruses, said Carol Kennedy, director of health education at Lafene Health Center.

The viruses that cause this type of meningitis are moderately contagious, but few infected people ever discover their condition, Kennedy said.

"They may carry the virus around and and it won't make them sick," she said. "It's usually not this tragic."

Enteroviruses are commonly spread through nasal secretions, and hand washing might be the only way to fight these illnesses, Kennedy said.

Discussion under way for center

By LYNNE HERMANSEN
Kansas State Collegian

Plans are under way for a new addition to the campus and K-State Student Union — a student activities center.

The idea was brought to the forefront last fall by a committee studying the structure.

A planning committee, comprising chairwoman Julie Karr and other students from all areas of campus life, was formed following the committee's recommendation. The committee hired an architect to begin drawing up preliminary plans and conducting a feasibility study.

"We have met several times, deciding what we wanted to bring to campus and what we could afford," Student Body President Jake Worcester said.

Worcester and Student Body Vice President Dana Pracht are still recruiting students for the committee.

"The planning committee is open to anyone," Worcester said. "We are trying to recruit students from different areas of campus in order to have a

Gas explosion kills motorist

By NANCY HULL
Kansas State Collegian

An explosion and fire woke residents of Wamego early Saturday morning when the driver of a 1998 Ford Explorer crashed into Ferrellgas, a propane tank station on the west edge of Wamego, authorities said.

The unidentified driver died at the scene.

The vehicle was eastbound on U.S. Highway 24 when it left the road shortly after 2 a.m. Don's Body & Wrecker Service of Wamego towed the vehicle to its wrecker lot.

"The Explorer doesn't even look like an Explorer anymore. It just looks like a burnt mess," said Betty Mazet of Don's Body & Wrecker Service. "The back end is completely smashed. The whole thing looks fried."

Authorities have not identified the victim, and the crash is still under investigation.

K-State Web page undergoes change

By ALISON PHALEN
Kansas State Collegian

K-State's Web page recently was redesigned in order to provide 10 times more information to the user and a cleaner look.

Elizabeth Unger, K-State's vice provost for academic services and technology and dean of continuing education, approached a university-wide committee and asked them to come up with at least one new version of the page.

"The goal was to add a more information-intense look to the home page while achieving a clean and non-cluttered view," Unger said.

Committee chairman William Richter said committee members wanted to rethink the structure

Kansas counties hurting financially from drought

TOPEKA — Gov. Bill Graves has asked for a federal disaster declaration for six counties where crops and livestock have suffered heavily from heat and drought.

"In many cases, farmers and ranchers in these counties are facing devastating losses," Graves said Friday in a statement.

If the request is granted by U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Dan Glickman, it would make farmers and ranchers in those counties eligible for low-interest emergency loans from the federal government.

The six counties are Cheyenne, Decatur, Jewell, Phillips, Republic and Washington.

If the request is approved, 14 counties that adjoin the six would be included. They are Clay, Cloud, Graham, Marshall, Mitchell, Norton, Osborne, Rawlins, Riley, Rooks, Sheridan, Sherman, Smith and Thomas counties.

Graves also said farmers and ranchers in some counties bordering Nebraska already might be eligible because of recent disaster declarations issued for that state.

BSU welcomes members

By BRYAN MURPHY
Kansas State Collegian

New and old members of the Black Student Union had a chance to come together over the weekend.

BSU put on its annual welcoming barbecue from 2 to 6 p.m. Saturday afternoon at the Quinlan Natural Area.

Charla Wells, senior in radio/television productions and vice president of BSU, said the atmosphere of the barbecue was affected by the death of former BSU president Marcella Burks on Friday.

"If we can, we are going to try to get a scholarship started in her name," Wells said.

BSU has about 250 members, and the group expects anything from 75 to 100 new members to be joining the organization this year. The group puts on many events throughout the year, both for the benefit of BSU and the university and the community at large.

"Besides the barbecue, we also host a Kwanzaa celebration, have many activities for Black History Month and an awards ball for members at the end of the year," Wells said.

In addition, BSU is attempting to broaden its influence by participating in other activities throughout the year, including food drives and clothing drives, and interacting with other organizations, such as Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan Inc.

"One of our big goals for the year is to build good communication with the campus at large," Wells said.

Although there were not as many people in attendance as was predicted, there were many local organizations that took part in the barbecue. There was a sign-up booth set up for new members and pamphlets being handed out by local organizations.

Games and food also were available. A large buffet was set up, and there were refreshments, volleyball and a disc jockey.

Wells said the current president of BSU, Maurice Parks, senior in marketing, is looking forward to another successful year with the organization. In fact, one of the keys to success of BSU is some of the help it receives from K-State.

"The university does give us some help," Wells said. "They give us some good funding so that we can attend the Big 12 BSU Conference every year, and that's always a very fun event to attend because of the people you get to see and the overall atmosphere."

Paris Rossiter, junior in computing and information systems, agreed with Wells.

"I am a four-year member, and every year I've had the chance to go to the Big 12 Conference. Simply put, it's a lot of fun, and the people you get to meet is one of the best parts of it," Rossiter said. "It's like a rejuvenation that we get to participate in every year."

Rossiter said the barbecue was as successful as it has in past years.

"There are lots of people registering at the orientation booth, and new members are always appreciated," Rossiter said. "There's also a photo album set up so that people can get a good general idea of what BSU is all about."

BSU will have its first meeting of the year at 7 p.m. on Tuesday in Union Forum Hall.

"We will be basically congregating from 6:50 to 7 p.m., but everyone is encouraged to come as soon as possible so that the meeting can get started on time, because we have a lot of issues to cover," Wells said. "Anyone that wishes to attend the meeting is more than welcome."

Cedrich Montgomery, sophomore in architectural engineering and first-year member of BSU, said he looks forward to participating in the various campus and community activities that BSU intends to put on this year.

"I like to get involved," Montgomery said. "Plus, for the people that can't go home, this barbecue has given them something to do."

MEMORIAL

No specific treatment exists for viral meningitis.

A former president of Black Student Union and Alpha Kappa Alpha, Burks continued her involvement with the K-State campus when she began her new job as director of special programs for Dual Diversity and Career Development this past Monday. She had worked for only one day before falling ill.

At 12:30 p.m. Friday, only a few hours after Burks' death, friends and family gathered in All Faiths Chapel for a memorial service, taking the time to participate in a group prayer. Students, staff and faculty clasped hands for nearly an hour as favorite memories were shared.

"She was free-spirited," said Dia Williams, junior in family studies and human services. "She always had something positive to say."

Clark agreed with Williams' description.

"Any time you needed something from Marcy, she's find a way to fit it into her schedule," he said.

Burks and Clark became friends in 1996 when they were brought together by involvement in BSU. Clark, a freshman at the time, said he was able to accomplish his goal of becomimg BSU president last year due to former president Burks' help.

Alpha Kappa Alpha members remember the former sorority president as a close friend, Edwards said.

Edwards met Burks in 1997 when both women became members of AKA.

"She was a very caring, thoughtful person," she said.

Burks graduated in May with a bachelor's degree in psychology and a minor in leadership studies, and this degree was meant to help her in her applications to law schools, Edwards said.

"Her plan was to work here until she could be admitted into law school in Texas," she said.

The funeral service for Burks is scheduled for 11 a.m. Thursday in Arkansas City.

For more information regarding the exact location for these services, call Shirley Whitney at 532-6487.

Fancy lights create bowling flair for Rock'It Bowl patrons

By AMBER CUNNINGHAM
Kansas State Collegian

Neon pins and loud hip-hop music drew crowds to the K-State Student Union for Rock'It Bowl on Thursday.

"It's glowing, and I can't see anything," Ben Willt, senior in architectural engineering, said. "The lights are flashing everywhere. I definitely like the music."

The use of black lighting gave the white pins an eerie glow, while strobe lights gave light to bowl by.

As part of Wildcat Welcome Week, Rock'It Bowl allowed students the chance to bowl for free and hang out with friends.

For Willt, it was a chance to bowl for free and hang out with his friends from Campus Crusade.

The evening was definitely a hit according to Brian Wetta, senior in secondary education and a second-year employee of the Union.

"About 100 people came to bowl, and another 50 more played pool," Wetta said.

Rock'It Bowl is available all semester on Fridays from 10:30 p.m. to 1 a.m. K-State students pay $1.80 per game, while others pay $2.05 per game.

For Willt, it's a bargain. He said he is used to spending around $3 a game to bowl in his home town of Kansas City, Kan.

The Union recreation area offers other options on Rock'It Bowl nights, when K-State students pay $2.90 per hour for a game of pool. Non-students pay $3.90 per hour.

It wasn't just the music and the neon pins that drew the students in. For Melissa Haberkorn, sophomore in elementary education, and her friend Kim Spradlin, sophomore in accounting, it was the non-smoking environment.

"I wish I had brought my socks," Haberkorn said.

Even though she could not bowl, she still enjoyed hanging out.

Some might wonder if the game of bowling is disrupted by all the noise and the flashing lights. "It's just another atmosphere. I like it," Ben Downey, sophomore in architectural engineering, said.

Rock'It Bowl proved to be a successful part of the Wildcat Welcome Week, Haberkorn said.

"I found Welcome Week to be very helpful," she said.

Football player denied chance to show ability

K-State's 27-7 victory over the University of Iowa in Saturday's Eddie Robinson Classic delivered the long-awaited debut of redshirt freshman quarterback Ell Roberson.

That is, for those fans still paying attention with only 15 seconds left in the ball game.

After the Wildcat defense stalled Iowa on its fourth-down conversion attempt, K-State took over possession at the Iowa 18-yard line.

Roberson entered for the final play of the game, pitching the ball to redshirt freshman tailback Rashad Jackson on a sweep for a 2-yard gain.

No doubt, Cat fans amid the Arrowhead Stadium crowd of 77,148 were anxious for Roberson's debut. In fact, after his memorable rushing performance in the 2000 spring game, fans were already slating him as the next Michael Bishop.

Now, it was no surprise that senior quarterback Jonathan Beasley started the game for K-State. Head coach Bill Snyder should go with experience in this case, and Beasley responded, connecting on eight of 12 passes for 174 yards and one touchdown in the first half against Iowa.

But when Beasley began to struggle in the second half, throwing two consecutive interceptions, a question rose to the surface. Why not give Roberson an opportunity?

It was seemingly a mockery to see the freshman enter the game with only seconds left, and it hurt even more to see him pitch the ball to the tailback on his lone play from scrimmage.

Give Roberson a chance. If he performs half as well as expected, he could make for an exciting 2000 football season in Manhattan.

Candidate's past reveals possible fatherly influence

TERRY L. WELCH

You might have missed this.

The TV pundits and the columnists (those who are paid good money for sharing their opinions, not us college students) seem to think that the American public pretty much ignored the presidential election until the conventions. Therefore, I feel it's my duty to bring you some of the background about George W. Bush that you might have missed. Namely, that his rise to both wealth and political prominence were either strokes of sheer luck or the results of backroom political bargains of the worst sort. You make the call.

In 1978, the now-presidential candidate had been out of Harvard Business School only about three years when he made two announcements: one, he would incorporate his own oil company; two, he would run for Congress. Notably, the oil venture didn't actually look for a single drop of oil until 1979, but it did allow Bush to call himself an "independent oilman" during the election. He was ridiculed by his opponent for the title, however, and lost.

For four years the "independent oilman" and his company, Arbusto Energy, limped along, squandering the money of its investor/partners, which included several prominent Republican supporters and Bush's own grandmother. Every time it would seem that the venture was near collapse, it would be saved by another investor dropping money into the pot. These were not your average investors, either. In fact, one might wonder how a man like Philip Uzielli ever raised the money to invest in the company if he had no better sense than to make investments as he did in Bush's company in 1982, when it was then known as Bush Exploration Oil Company. Uzielli wrote the company a check for $1 million, receiving in return 10 percent of a company then worth a total $400,000. Uzielli, by the way, was a college friend of Bush, friend of the family and President Reagan's chief of staff, James Baker.

The money lasted a short time, but, again, Bush was saved when an oil company called Spectrum 7 purchased the ailing company and named Bush its chairman and CEO in 1984. The bailout failed and, a year later, Bush's new company was sinking quickly again.

So, in 1986, Spectrum 7 was purchased by Harken Energy. Bush himself raked in a $120,000-a-year position and nearly $500,000 in stock. Spectrum 7's president, Paul Rea, admitted to American Spectator's Byron York that one of the main reasons Harken wanted Spectrum 7 was because it wanted the Bush name on its board of directors. It helped.

In 1990, with shares of Harken falling, Bush's name attracted not only the help of a financial contributor, but the aid of an entire nation, Bahrain. "(Bahraini officials) were clearly aware he was the president's son," former Harken executive Monte Swetnam told Salon.com's Joe Conason. That might explain why Bahrain dropped out of a deal with the oil giant Amoco and put its faith, and offshore drilling rights, in a company that had losses of $40 million that same year.

Before this deal, however, Bush put together a group of friends and purchased the Texas Rangers baseball team. Many friends of Bush have told reporters that it was Dubya's way of stepping out of daddy's shadow. Bush himself told the Houston Chronicle, that, "When all those people in Austin say, 'He ain't never done anything,' well, this is it."

Bush lapped it up. He had baseball cards made that carried his picture and passed them out at ballgames. He sat behind the dugout and played "owner" despite his 2-percent share in the team. He achieved his goal and made a name for himself.

In parts of Arlington, however, that name is mud. He and his backers pushed Arlington into paying $135 million for a new stadium and letting them own the stadium when they had paid $60 million. He got the state of Texas to give the team another 13-acre section near the stadium through the right of eminent domain as well, and gave the owners a sum worth less than half its value.

But trouble loomed on the horizon for Bush's other financial interest, Harken Energy.

With grumblings in the Mideast and Harken's stock slipping slightly, Bush surreptitiously sold off most of his stock in the company for nearly $900,000 a few weeks before Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait and Harken's stock plummeted. Bush did not report the sale to the Security and Exchange Commission for eight months — seven months later than required by law — and was briefly investigated by the SEC for insider trading, though the commission decided to take no action.

All five commissioners of the SEC had been appointed by Dubya's father, and the general counsel of the commission had been the governor's legal representative in the deal to buy the Rangers.

Republicans have often called Bill Clinton "Slick Willie," and, to some extent, they are right to do so. But whereas Clinton has used his intelligence and charm to achieve his goals, it seems that, without the help of his daddy and his friends, "Slick Georgie" would have sunk in the oil years ago.

Weekend game brings realization of school pride

REED DUNN

Traffic was not much of a problem until the hour before kick-off. Of course, that was when we left a Lenexa, Kan., apartment for Arrowhead Stadium.

With a broken cellular phone and no tickets, the plan was to meet my roommate's dad at Gate H. He had the tickets and agreed to wait for our arrival.

After nearly an hour of almost missing every exit and dodging cars swerving from lane to lane, the parking lot was in sight. We took the sports complex exit and passed several barricaded entrances. At the last possible turn, we were allowed to enter a parking lot. We found a stall and made our way toward the stadium. It was 1 p.m., leaving nine minutes before the scheduled kick-off.

My roommate and I discussed how angry her dad might be due to our tardiness, and it hit me. Before then, I was not all that geared up for the K-State football season. As we neared the stadium, the smell of tailgating was apparent. Burning charcoal mixed with the stench coming from empty beer cans raised my level of excitement.

We picked up the pace a bit, realizing we were among several others who were about to miss the first seconds of the Eddie Robinson Classic. As we got closer, the announcement was made — another year of traditions were beginning. The announcer introduced the Pride of Wildcat Land, and my level of excitement shot up another notch.

Cheers from the crowd were spilling over the nosebleed section as the K-State Marching Band began playing the Wabash Cannonball. We were down to a couple of minutes before kick-off, and were in search of Gate H. Instead, we saw a large D1 on the nearest gate entrance — four letters in the alphabet away from our destination. We took a left in search of the gate, where my roommate's dad would be waiting with tickets in hand.

At first sight, I could tell he was not happy with our timing. He mentioned our irresponsibility to plan for the traffic, but let it go at next to no comment. We entered the stadium just in time for the opening kick.

Seeing the stadium at a near sell-out capacity brought my level of excitement to the ultimate level. In my K-State T-shirt, I was lost in the crowd of thousands of the most faithful fans of college football. I sat there taking in the hype and energy focused on the game — an energy that will be one of the fondest memories of my time at K-State.

The feel of the stadium was a little different than the one gotten from KSU Stadium. It might have been the size, or the fact most of the fans surrounding me were accompanied by a cup of beer. Sitting close to the aisle, I witnessed several of the same fans making their way to the concession stand for another frosty beverage — each time stumbling a bit more. Others made multiple trips to grab another bottle of water or cup of shaved ice.

Even though the temperature reached triple digits at Arrowhead Stadium, there have been several gamedays where more sweat has been gathered by my clothing. It was hot and people were drunk, but nothing was getting in the way of the atmosphere. I joined in with cheers after the good plays, and volunteered my disapproval on several calls by the referees.

Even though I have been at K-State for two years, I finally realized I am a part of something big. I am one student in a family of more than 21,000 others, not to mention the countless alumni, who can take partial ownership in collegiate programs such as K-State football.

Office of Student Life helps students facing academic, personal situations

By JIM REINTJES
Kansas State Collegian

"Academic plus personal plus mental plus family" describes the kinds of help available at the Office of Student Life, whose annual Open House was from 1 to 3 p.m. Friday.

Scott Jones, assistant dean of student life, said the office tries to have an open house every fall.

"We usually don't have a lot of students that stop in," Jones said. "But we want students to put our office on a mental map. We would like our office be on the top of people's minds to be a comprehensive one-stop and last stop for their concerns, questions and frustrations."

Jones said there is always a dean on-call for students on the weekends. He said they deal with student concerns ranging from academic to emotional to financial.

"There are a variety of issues this time of year," he said. "It isn't even a week into the school year, and we've had about a dozen students who have had family member or a close family member die."

Jones said about 10 students have had injuries already this semester.

"K-State is like a little city," he said. "It's not surprising that on any given day people get ill, get injured or have family emergencies. These concerns sometimes call for students to take time out and focus on an urgent matter at hand and then refocus their academic priorities once they've had a chance to resolve these issues."

"There are homesick students who are missing their familiar environments."

Scott Jones, assistant dean of student life

Jones said there are a lot of transition-related issues this time of year.

"There are homesick students who are missing their familiar environments," he said.

Jones said later into the semester students might begin to stop by the office because they realize they have not been doing so well.

"We have people that realize they are not doing well academically," he said. "There are anxiety issues, and they are not sure about going home."

Jones said the Office of Student Life, which is in Holton 102, likes to help students help themselves.

"We want to find ways to help students help themselves so they can be academically and personally successful with their college experience," he said.

Jones said nearly 125 students per semester have fairly complicated problems, but mostly the office deals with easier issues.

"There are three to four times that number of students that have common or frequently asked questions. The majority of our work is walk-in traffic."

Jones said most of the students who visit say it was worthwhile.

"Overwhelmingly, people said it was a good use of their time to stop in. By and large, we were able to find a resolution to their problem," he said.

Carla Jones, associate dean of student life, said outreach programs are available in which officials go and talk to residence halls and greek houses about stress and time management.

"Every single time we go out, someone will come by the next day for help," Carla Jones said.

She said they have colleagues in each college when they need help with a student.

"We get together and network with faculty and staff to help students. Faculty and staff are very helpful and responsive," Jones said.

Carla Jones said the Office of Student Life is on call to help with crises as well.

"If a student gets injured or is seriously hospitalized, we will get called and follow up with those concerns," she said.

She also said problems relating to any aspect of campus can be worked out at the Office of Student Life.

"If you don't know where to go, come here," she said. "Or, if you've been everywhere else, come here."

Coors accident kills thousands of fish

The Associated Press

GOLDEN, Colo. — An employee of Coors Brewing Co. flipped the wrong switch and sent 77,500 gallons of beer into a creek, killing thousands of fish and prompting health warnings.

The beer, which was in fermenting tanks, washed through a wastewater treatment plant before ending up in Clear Creek on Friday, Coors spokeswoman Aimee St. Clair said. The fish likely suffocated from the alcohol — among other things — produced in the tanks.

"Somebody made a mistake," she said. "We're trying to track down how it happened so it doesn't happen again."

The Colorado Department of Public Health advised residents to avoid contact with the creek south of the brewery because of a small bacterial risk. The water could cause illness if consumed, said J. David Holm, director of the Water Quality Division.

Officials with the state Division of Wildlife could not give a precise number of fish killed but estimated it was thousands up and down the river.

"There are probably 200 to 300 fish right here in probably a 20- to 30-yard stretch," Scott Hoover of the wildlife division said.

State and federal investigators have not determined whether fines will be levied against the company.

Manhattan offers DVD rental options

By JESSICA LEDUC
Kansas State Collegian

Digital video discs are rapidly replacing video cassettes, and Digital Shelf is prepared to keep up with this change.

"We're just a typical rental store, except we rent DVDs," store owner Scott Bauer said. "We just wanted to get a jump on it."

Digital Shelf, which can be found both in Aggieville and online at www.ksudigitalshelf.com, is open from noon to 9 p.m. Sunday-Wednesday and from noon to 11 p.m. Thursday-Saturday. It also offers an unusual service in that it will deliver DVDs every evening from 5 to 7 p.m.

The store opened for business on March 27 of this year, and business has increased steadily.

"Business has been picking up since the students are coming back," Bauer said.

Digital Shelf offers 580 titles to chose from. Aside from new releases, it also offers foreign films and older movie titles.

Rudy Brown, senior in forensic science, said the variety of selections is what impressed him about the store.

"The selection is better than most places, especially in terms of diversity," he said.

Another aspect of Digital Shelf is its foreign film selection. By offering 25 foreign titles, Bauer said it is able to offer customers what most local video stores do not.

The cost of rentals also is pleasing to the college student's budget. Old releases rent for $1 for three days, recent releases are $2 for three days, and new releases are priced at $3 for two days. If the movies are delivered, there is a 50 cent charge.

Digital Shelf also sells and trades DVDs, as well as renting them. DVDs are available for between $8 and $40 for boxed sets.

DVDs are becoming more available across Manhattan for a variety of reasons. Marty Criswell, Digital Shelf employee, said there is a big difference between DVDs and video cassettes.

"DVDs have sharper, clearer images and sound, and they offer more options," he said.

Many DVDs offer the viewer the option of choosing a soundtrack, subtitle language and widescreen or pan-and-scan view. Some movies also provide interactive games, actor interviews, and extra scenes. Criswell said DVDs also provide scene selection, which video cassettes do not.

"You can go through the movie and pick out a scene and go to it," he said. "You can also shut the movie off, then pick out the scene where you stopped, and start the movie there."

Briefs filed in support of Napster

By RON HARRIS
The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Copyright law professors and a physicians' association are supporting Napster Inc.'s appeal of a preliminary injunction that would have virtually shut down the company's popular music-sharing service.

In a friend-of-the-court brief filed Friday with the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, 18 professors from various law schools argued that a federal judge erred in granting the injunction to the recording industry.

The professors said it would be impractical for any file-sharing service to operate within the constraints imposed by U.S. District Judge Marilyn Hall Patel. She granted the injunction July 26 at the request of the Recording Industry Association of America, which sued Napster in December for copyright infringement.

The appellate court has issued a stay allowing the company to stay online, at least temporarily, because "substantial questions" had been raised about the merits and form of the injunction.

Technologies that preceded Napster, such as radio, television and photocopy machines, all permitted new methods of copyright infringement, the professors said. But courts allowed them to flourish because legitimate uses were possible.

"Only when the technology is not capable of legitimate uses does it make sense to outlaw it," wrote the professors from schools such as New York University, Georgetown University and Boston College.

Napster has argued that legitimate uses for its software include the marketing of unsigned musicians and previewing of music to be purchased later on compact discs by consumers.

falling STARS

Screen legends stuggle for laughs, spotlight in unfunny caper flick

movie review
"The Crew"
Showing: Seth Childs Cinema at 4:35, 7:20 and 9:25 p.m.
Starring: Burt Reynolds, Richard Dreyfuss, Dan Hedaya and Seymour Cassel

Review by CORBIN H. CRABLE
Kansas State Collegian

So this is what happens to fallen legends.

When accomplished film stars such as Burt Reynolds and Richard Dreyfuss appear in a film completely devoid of originality and a storyline, you know their time in the spotlight is dwindling.

Reynolds and Dreyfuss appear alongside Dan Hedaya ("Maverick," "Nixon") and Seymour Cassel ("Indecent Proposal") as a group of elderly Italian mobsters living in Miami who come out of retirement for one last hurrah. However, "The Crew" is anything but a hurrah.

Subplots include a detective duo of Jeremy Piven ("Ellen") and Carrie-Anne Moss ("The Matrix"), who squabble incessantly about their past romantic relationship, and a stripper (Jennifer Tilly, "Liar, Liar") who proves to be helpful to the geriatric mobsters in more ways than one.

Fans of Reynolds and Dreyfuss' earlier work probably won't be able to overlook the fact that their favorite actors are stuck in a movie that goes nowhere, and this probably is the idea that director Michael Dinner had in mind. This movie is targeted toward an older audience with the hopes that the older, ever-faithful-to-the-good-ol'-days moviegoers will forget about the lack of laughs and plot and focus on their heroes of the silver screen. Sadly, the stellar cast can't save this doomed flick.

What few chuckles are present in the movie are few and far between; it's as if you're being teased with the promise that the humor will get better, and all you need do is wait for that next wisecrack to get you interested. Instead of getting better, it turns into "Grumpy Old Men" meets a messed-up version of "Goodfellas."

For those of you who are avid fans of Reynolds and Dreyfuss, I must warn you, this movie is a sign that these stars are falling into the abyss that is Has-Beenville. "The Crew" is a sign that the inevitable is happening — the stars we love are disappearing.

It's sad but true: It hasn't happened to Reynolds or Dreyfuss yet, but when our favorite actors sign on for movies such as "The Crew," you can bet their stars are fading. We can only hope that "Gunsmoke" or a sequel to "Mr. Holland's Opus" will make result in a comeback and save them.

PC football game improves

Review by KEN WELLS
Kansas State Collegian

The best PC football game just got a little better.

"Madden NFL 2001" is the latest installment in EA Sports' long-selling football game line. It's not a revolution, but an evolution, improving graphics, gameplay and team management.

Assuming you have enough hardware to run the game acceptably, you'll find a wealth of new graphics and realistic weather effects. Player models are more detailed, and animations are much smoother (if I could just get over the players' celebrations causing them to move through referees). Players look much more individual than ever — heights and weights are much more realistic, and each player has a variety of customizable accessories (casts, gloves, wraps, etc.) to distinguish themselves. Uniforms for custom teams can be adjusted in several different areas in a fully flexible — if somewhat tedious — process. Even when you're not playing, you'll find yourself watching and enjoying the game. It just looks beautiful.

The gameplay isn't too different from "Madden NFL 2000," with just a few pleasant tweaks to correct a few flaws — collision detection works much better now, and the players (if they are the Barry Sanders type) juke with much more realistic results. The running game has more punch than in Maddens past, and the passing game is a little trickier. Kicking seems harder and pass accuracy seems to have taken a shot, but these (and many other) game settings are tweakable from the menus.

While the menus have been overhauled and greatly improved, the Madden Challenge has been removed altogether. This is a personal disappointment, as the Madden Challenge both gave solo gameplay an unprecedented weight, but it also added myriad features (electric sidelines, David vs. Goliath mode, 20 yards for first downs, et al.) which made the game fresh, different and customizable. Eliminating these options is pointless. Purists can play without them, but we fans of gridiron chaos enjoy something unpredictable on the grass. Pity.

Speaking of personal tastes, "Madden NFL 2001" made a brilliant decision to allow extensive player creation and customization, and creating custom teams is now a breeze. Obey the salary cap restrictions or not — it's your choice — and create a team of young juggernauts or reign over a fantasy draft and reassemble Martin Gramatica, Michael Bishop and other K-State alumni on the same team.

There are plenty of positive holdover features from the previous year's version. Franchise mode is a breeze, and games can be simulated easily and quickly. Instant replay is smooth and flexible as ever. Player rosters are frighteningly complete, and if EA Sports follows last year's example, roster updates will be available periodically online.

The game isn't without its annoyances. The manual is thinner than some e-mails I've received and leaves plenty of features undiscovered and unmentioned. Pat Summerall is satisfactory as play-by-play announcer, but John Madden's color commentary is sparse, quickly repetitious, annoying and blatantly obvious — don't fall 2 yards short on a third down or prepare to get an earful from Madden. (Also, each game begins with Madden obnoxiously announcing, "Hey, this is MY game!" Uh, I don't think so, John. I paid for it. I've got the receipt.) The uniform/player editing could be tweaked. And don't get me started on the Madden Challenge again.

Eddie Robinson Classic results in season-opening K-State win, readiness concerns from Snyder.

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — "I'd think twice about playing it again."

That was head football coach Bill Snyder's response to Saturday's 27-7 victory over Iowa in the fourth annual Eddie Robinson Classic at Arrowhead Stadium.

"I don't think we were ready — that's poor coaching," Snyder said. "It's been a long time since we've played this early a ballgame. I need to reassess how we did it, and it's my responsibility to prepare our football team."

Snyder said a lack of preparation was evident in the Cat win, although there were many positives to be taken from the ballgame.

For instance, K-State took its opening drive of the 2000 season 68 yards in five plays, capped by a 1-yard touchdown run by running back David Allen.

After the Cat defense held Iowa to a three-and-out on the ensuing possession, Hawkeye punter Jason Baker angled a kick to Allen at the K-State 14-yard line. The senior took the ball and raced 86 yards for a touchdown, seemingly breaking the NCAA record for most career punt returns for touchdowns.

But it was called back.

K-State was called for an illegal block in the back penalty, negating the touchdown and pinning the Cats back to their own 8-yard line.

"It was beyond disappointment — I was visibly angry," Snyder said. "That is kind of a precarious specialty teams unit, and to play on it, there's got to be a discipline that probably transcends all of football.

"You see those blocking in the back calls time and time and time again, and that's the second one that had called back for exactly the same reason.

"Now, I appreciate the enthusiasm for playing on that unit, and the enthusiasm to go down there and block somebody to give David a chance, and give our team a chance, to score a touchdown — but you've got to have discipline, and obviously we didn't have that — and that upsets me. That angers me to a certain degree."

Following the penalty, K-State drove 79 yards in 11 plays to extend the lead to 10-0 on a 24-yard field goal by senior Jamie Rheem.

The Cats would score once more in the first half, as senior quarterback Jonathan Beasley connected with senior wide-out Quincy Morgan for a touchdown from 4 yards out with just 19 seconds before halftime.

However, a different Iowa team came out of the locker room in the second half against the Cats.

"They had a little period in the third quarter where they started getting some momentum, and their crowd got back in it and everything," senior defensive end Chris Johnson said, "but we wanted to be on the field as a defense and stop that momentum."

That momentum culminated on K-State's mistakes.

In the Cats' second possession of the half, an Allen fumble was recovered by Hawkeye Ryan Hansen. Iowa then took the ball 43 yards in six plays as tailback LaDell Betts scored from 1-yard out to cut the Cat lead to 17-7.

The Hawkeyes then caused turnovers on K-State's next two possessions, both on Beasley interceptions, but the Cat defense

Allen's status uncertain as running backs evolve

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — If K-State hadn't been wearing purple, fans at the game might have thought they were watching Arrowhead Stadium's boys in red.

Possibly influenced by their Kansas City surroundings, the Cats took a page from the Chiefs' playbook and implemented a "running back by committee" game plan.

Senior David Allen started the game in the backfield, but three backs ended up with double-digit carries.

Of course, things might have been different if Allen hadn't injured his ankle on a punt return to start the fourth quarter. The senior did not return, and the status of his ankle is uncertain, head coach Bill Snyder said.

"I think he's going to be all right," Snyder said. "The injuries indicated that there was no fracture."

However, even when Allen was in the backfield, the running game struggled, Snyder said.

"I don't know what we had, maybe a hundred yards. That's not very much, considering we'd like to run the ball."

Beasley leads football team to 1st win of 2000 season

By BRENT GRAY
Kansas State Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. —The pressure was mounting on Wildcat quarterback Jonathan Beasley before he even took the field this season.

But it didn't bother him.

"Either you appreciate me, or you don't appreciate me," Beasley said. "I just play to the best of my ability."

The pressure of the fans, and most of all, back-up quarterback Ell Roberson lies heavily on Beasley this season.

"Ell is a great athlete," Beasley said. "He just needs time and reps."

However, Beasley said pressure has been the driving motivation for him to play well at K-State.

The senior was a back-up to Michael Bishop in 1997, and last season Adam Helm provided the pressure from the back-up role.

This season, the pressure is still there — it just comes in a different form.

In his first game of the year, Beasley went 14-of-28 for 250 yards, scoring a touchdown through the air and one on the ground.

Beasley's weak spot was two interceptions.

"One was just a great play by the defender, the other I just threw off of my back foot, but it is a learning tool," Beasley said.

He found Quincy Morgan seven times Saturday for 72 yards and once in the end zone in K-State's 27-7 victory over the Iowa Hawkeyes.

David Allen grimaces as Iowa's Demond Sanders pulls him down by his ankle on a third-quarter punt return. Allen came out of the game after the play with an injured knee and did not return.

Alumni match shows differences in team

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

No score or statistics were kept, but fans still gathered last Friday for the volleyball alumni match.

However, the format of the night underwent several changes from the past. Head coach Jim McLaughlin already had decided that the alumni would not play the current team because the matches were always so one-sided.

"The alumni are like me. They're old and fat," McLaughlin said. "Last year, the team beat them 15-0 in the first set."

McLaughlin need not have worried, though, as only three alumni showed up at 5 p.m., when the match would have started. As a result, a two-hour break was taken, and at 7 p.m. the team regathered for a purple and white scrimmage.

Once the match started, fans saw a team that, despite losing only one player, plays remarkably differently than it did last year.

Without Dawn Cady, who last year essentially single-handedly defined the K-State offense, the Cats now play a different kind of volleyball, setter Disney Bronnenberg said.

"We're much more aggressive this year, and I think our offense is more balanced," Bronnenberg said.

Fans also saw what could be the future of K-State volleyball — twin freshmen Kari and Kris Jensen. In fact, the future has already arrived, as Kari Jensen likely will see significant playing time in the absence of junior Lisa Mimick, who is recovering from a stress fracture in her foot.

CLASSIC

kept Iowa from capitalizing.

"I told Kirk after the ball game that I think there was a period of time in there in the second half when they showed a great deal of enthusiasm and emotion," Snyder said, referring to Iowa head coach Kirk Ferentz, "and proved to me that they probably are going to be a pretty good football team over a period of time.

"I certainly would not have underestimated the University of Iowa. There was nowhere that I can think of that they didn't have the strength that I thought they would."

K-State added two scoring drives in the fourth quarter to seal the victory over the Hawkeyes.

Beasley scampered for an 8-yard touchdown with 5:03 remaining to make it 24-7, and Rheem chipped in a 39-yard field goal at the 1:38 mark.

K-State compiled 428 yards of total offense against Iowa, while the Hawkeyes' only mustered 156. Iowa quarterback Scott Mullen was sacked six times and was held to a dismal 10-of-26 for 76 yards in the air.

Yet, senior linebacker Turelle Williams said the Cat defense still has a lot of improvements to make.

"We didn't play up to par — we didn't play collectively as a team," Williams said. "Iowa's a good football team, and any good football team that thinks they have a chance can get back up-tempo."

On an injury note, senior strong safety Jarrod Cooper left the game in the third quarter with a strained pectoral muscle, but he assured the news media after the game that he was all right and would not miss action.

OFFENSE

Snyder said. "I wasn't very pleased with it."

K-State did manage to rack up more than 100 yards, 178 yards to be exact, but the Cats only averaged 3.8 yards per carry. Despite the sub-par performance, individuals did play well at times.

In three quarters of action, Allen carried the ball 15 times for 65 yards. Senior quarterback Jonathan Beasley also ran the ball 13 times for 24 yards, but the most rushing prowess came from fifth-year senior Chris Claybon, who rushed 10 times for 60 yards.

As a result of his team-leading 6.0 yards per carry average, Claybon drew praise from Snyder.

"I think Chris did a nice job of taking some creases in there, and at times, not always, but at times, ran hard, got his pads down and got up field when he had to," Snyder said. "I wasn't unhappy with what he did."

For Claybon, on the other hand, it was too early to judge his performance. Snyder's praise and criticism are important, but the final judgment on Claybon's running comes from a higher source, he said.

"My father's been my judge my entire life, and I haven't talked to him yet, so I can't tell you how I did," Claybon said. "My father evaluates me from the truth."

Claybon's position near the top of the depth chart is slightly unusual, since he only carried the ball 11 times all of last season. Getting the call when the game mattered didn't make him nervous, though, Claybon said.

"I've been here five years, and I've been running the ball since I was 12," Claybon said. "Everybody's been doing it since they were a little kid. You get a little bit of jitters, but you get them worked out."

While Claybon ran well, Allen's 65 yards still led the team. But if Allen's longest run, a 28-yard jaunt, is eliminated, he only averaged three yards a carry.

Snyder is not worried, however.

"David will be fine," Snyder said. "It's like on a punt return. David will truck along and will miss a read and bounce it outside when he ought to take it straight up in there. And he will do that two, three or four times, and all of a sudden he's out the gate.

"He's a lot on offense like he is on punt return."

"I could see it on the sideline, time and time again, that the ball-carrier, theirs and ours, was going down and the ball was loose."

Bill Snyder, football coach

One running back whose absence from the field was noticeable throughout much of the game was Josh Scobey.

The heralded junior transfer only carried the ball three times for 5 yards.

That lack of playing time was a result of conditions larger than Scobey himself, though. The field was so hot that players' sweat was actually making the ball slick, Snyder said.

"I could see it on the sideline, time and time again, that the ball carrier, theirs and ours, was going down and the ball was loose," Snyder said. "I was just concerned about having someone who hadn't been on the field for us in the ball game in critical situations."

In back-up duty, Roberson didn't see the field for the Cats until there were only 15 seconds left in the game. His only play was a pitch to Rashad Jackson for two yards.

Head coach Bill Snyder said there were specific reasons why he didn't feel comfortable playing Roberson Saturday.

"We wanted him to have the opportunity. Certainly there were some things that he could do," Snyder said. "but there were things that were going on at that time earlier in the ballgame when there was a little bit of a cushion, but he probably wasn't prepared to deal with it."

Overall, Snyder said there were many areas his team needs to work on for next week.

Although Snyder said Beasley had a bad day throwing the ball, he looks for the quarterback to improve on his mistakes.

He said Beasley's decision-making was not bad, but "head" trouble that caused problems for him.

"He did not play well in practice last week," Snyder said. "When you don't practice well, you have trouble against decent teams, which Iowa is."

CENTER

well-represented committee."

The center would be an addition to the east side of the Union.

"We wanted it to be part of the Union, because it's where students congregate on campus," Worcester said. "We wanted it to be an integral part of the Union, and the east side was the most feasible and economical."

The center would consist of open areas that surround cubicles on all floors. The cubicle walls will be short.

"The Union has a natural relationship with the students," Bernard Pitts, Union executive director, said. "They are natural entities that go hand in hand."

The plan for the center is to be able to see everything from anywhere that a person stands. Few walls will divide the space, and there will be a lot of natural light.

"Plans are excellent, giving the place a real open feeling," Worcester said. "We want few divisions, so there will be a community-based feeling, and we can bring together campus unity."

The student activities center could house government organizations such as Greek Affairs, Student Governing Association, Union Governing Board and four to five other campus organizations. Every organization could apply for space, and applications will be reviewed according to wants and needs.

Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, said she does not know if it is best for Greek Affairs.

"The concept is interesting, but the students are the ones who will have to decide if the student activities center is necessary," Robel said. "The cubicle concept would not work for Greek Affairs."

Many organizations don't have a home, and the center would give them access to space and resources, Worcester said.

"Organizations that have space and resources to utilize can meet their potential and be successful," Worcester said.

The center would also provide a place where organizations can join together.

"It will bring more resources, and people will be able to network together and co-sponsor events," said Gayle Spencer, coordinator of the Office of Student Activities and Services. "Right now, organizations don't have a place to gather. Every other school has one, and we are missing that collaboration."

Pitts said it would bring opportunities to maximize the resources and bring together a variety and quality of services that would benefit the students.

Queer Straight Alliance is an organization that would consider applying for space.

"I think that it's a great idea," Robert Clark, QSA adviser, said, "QSA has been unsuccessful in finding a permanent home, so they will most likely take the opportunity to apply."

Worcester and Pracht will be talking to the students to get feedback before any plans are implemented.

"We are going to take it to the students and talk to them about the benefits," Worcester said. "The students will see that the benefits will far outweigh the costs."

Pracht said a pamphlet will be distributed to the students to answer questions and emphasize opportunities.

Worcester and Pracht will bring the student activities center proposal to Student Senate. If the proposal for a referendum vote passes, students will be able vote on the center in November.

Worcester said he would like to see the center build unity among organizations.

"We have visited several universities, and seen how extremely successful their activity centers have been through their unity and excitement," Worcester said. "It is great to see all kinds of students interacting, and we believe that we can do better.

WEB SITE

and attempt a more coherent page.

"There are more what I call 'pieces of territory.' We moved to about five to seven, when the old page had eight to 10 categories," said Richter, associate provost for international programs.

The new page features a banner at the top that contains links to resource sections, libraries, information technology and KATS.

There are pop-up menus that tell the user what each category contains before the user goes to that page. For instance, when the mouse is pointed at KATS, the menu tells the user what can be done in KATS, such as checking grades, enrolling and ordering athletic tickets.

The page also contains a dominant picture in the center of the oval-shaped page.

The topics surround the picture, and there are headings for the categories, leading to the subtopics.

When the mouse is pointed at the categories around the picture, links for the following options are visible. The user can click on one of those to go straight to that subtopic.

Richter said the redesign of the page carries a more dynamic movement.

"There was an attempt to have the page visually appealing," he said.

The user also can see the entire page without using the horizontal scroll bar. Scrolling vertically can be done, although almost the entire page can be seen without scrolling down.

In 1998, the last version of the Web page was named the second-best home page among 15,000 sites nominated to the "Best of the Web," California Institute of Technology won first place.

The page can be viewed by going to www.ksu.edu on the Internet.

SMOKING

heard," he said. "We'll present this to the commission and lead them one way or another. If there is an overwhelming negative response, we might have to do two more drafts."

One version of the ordinance allows restaurant or bar owners to purchase a permit to allow smoking within the establishment. The permits can be purchased annually, but on Dec. 31, 2005, all permits will expire and all businesses will be required to be smoke-free.

The second version will allow smoking in existing restaurants with signs in appropriate locations.

Nevertheless, smoking will not be allowed if a building permit is granted for alterations, renovation or a change of ownership.

Travis Lenkner, Student Senate chair and one of the endorsers of the original Senate resolution, said requiring permits is a better option of the two drafts.

Lenkner said the second version might discourage businesses from remodeling or selling.

"We want to keep businesses looking nice, and that version discourages that," he said. "Both ordinances are a step in the right direction, but we think it's better to let the businesses decide."

Lenkner said he is pleased that a legislation the Student Senate inspired is being discussed and acted upon by the commission.

"More and more, we see tobacco issues becoming public health issues," he said. "This is a way for Manhattan to be ahead of the game, and it gives businesses some wiggle room in terms of when they can apply for permits."

MP3 downloading remains controversial

By NANCY FOSTER
Kansas State Collegian

Kyle Area used to download music from Napster Inc. daily.

When Napster, an Internet site that allows visitors to download music, was threatened by courts and an end to the free music seemed near, Area began looking for another music outlet. Finding a site that allows users to share their own files, instead of being provided by Napster-like sites, was a way of avoiding what he said was inevitable.

"It's inevitable that there was going to be a conflict like this occurring," Area, graduate student in business, said. "If they don't shut down, I think there will be some restrictions placed on it — some severe restrictions — but I don't think it will continue the way it has been."

Napster came under fire in December when it was sued by the Recording Industry Association of America for copyright infringement. The RIAA, an organization that represents several music labels, felt the copyrights of its artists were being violated by the file-sharing service Napster provides. The RIAA wants restrictions to be placed on what songs can be made available through the service — eliminating all of the plaintiffs' copyrighted songs from the list. The July injunction against Napster required all designated copyrighted songs to be removed.

Napster argued that identifying all copyrighted material would be extremely difficult, and that it is often difficult to distinguish whether the music is from a compact disc, which may be copyrighted, or the recording of a live concert, which many artists allow to be freely circulated.

"That is the critical issue of what's going on in the national level. The campus issue is an issue of resources, and we simply don't have the resources for Napster here."

Beth Unger, vice provost

While the heated war continues and appeals from Napster are filed, the site has temporarily been allowed to continue operation.

Area said he feels most users abuse what the site was intended for — helping users decide whether they want to purchase an artist's compact disc — and should have restrictions placed on it.

"The advantage of Napster is you can preview music before you can buy it," he said. "The problem is, when people like it, they just download it and get it for free."

Elizabeth Unger, vice provost, said she understands why students love the service

Patients rate Lafene highly in user survey

By ALYSON RALETZ
Kansas State Collegian

Lafene Health Center has received positive results from its summer 2000 patient-user survey.

In most areas, students awarded Lafene with very good to excellent ratings.

Carol Kennedy, director of health education and promotion at Lafene, said the results are a source of pride for the staff.

"This is a survey of people that use our services," Kennedy said. "It should demonstrate that people come here because we provide quality health care."

Lannie W. Zweimiller, Lafene director, said staff members asked each patient from July 17 to 19 to fill out the survey. The center distributed 133 surveys, with 88 percent of the patients responding.

Lafene served 5,966 students during the summer.

Patients rated the length of patient waits, quality of care, services received and the staff's professionalism. Students were able to give rankings as poor, fair, good, very good and excellent.

Lafene has administered the survey since 1990, distributing once a semester. The health center consistently receives high ratings, but the survey revealed weaknesses the staff could work on, Zweimiller said. This information helped the staff know how to better serve its patients.

"We are able to provide quality health care at a low cost to the students," Zweimiller said. "We have the ability to take the time if necessary and provide a personal touch."

Stephanie Caouette, sophomore in kinesioiogy, said she thinks Lafene has an excellent staff.

"They all smile and are very courteous," Caouette said. "They try to get everyone in and out as quickly as possible."

Caouette said she dealt with military hospitals most of her life and is not as pleased with other aspects of the center.

"It is really hard to get appointment times that do not conflict with my class schedule," she said. "I rarely get the doctor I want, and you pay too much for prescriptions."

Zweimiller said he does not receive many negative comments from Lafene patients. He said he hears negative comments mostly from students who do not utilize the service.

Alison Basore, freshman in apparel marketing, said she has not been to Lafene, but already has heard rumors.

"I heard if you are sick, you might as well go home before you should go to Lafene," Basore said.

Bob Peterman, assistant professor of civil engineering, assisted in building a full-scale testing frame used to test steel, concrete and wooden structures. The frame has been in construction for two years and will be complete by the end of fall. The facility is at 925 Carlson Street in Manhattan.

Engineers build research aid

By SHANNON MARSHALL
Kansas State Collegian

Professor Bob Peterman had a question.

How could he give his engineering students a hands-on experience that would serve to enrich their education at K-State and better prepare them for the future?

Before coming to K-State two years ago, Peterman, assistant professor of civil engineering, was able to work in full-scale structural testing as a design engineer for American Precast Concrete Inc. in Indianapolis and as a post-doctoral research associate at Purdue University. He said the experience he gained there was invaluable.

"What I found for myself was that actually being involved in the full-scale testing kind of brought all the coursework and the principles to life," he said. "So, as a faculty member, I wanted to bring those same experiences for my students."

Then came the plan. Peterman decided to build a full-scale testing frame that would allow both engineers and K-State students the opportunity to perform tests on steel, concrete and wooden structures.

There was just one problem — the university didn't have funds set aside to support the project.

So, Peterman went shopping.

"I contacted Havens Steel Company of Kansas City, Missouri," he said. "I tried to find a company that would be willing to partner with K-State in developing these hands-on opportunities in the classroom, as well as provide a facility where we could really start to begin to meet the needs of industry through physical testing of structures."

Peterman enlisted the help of Havens' president and CEO, Ken McCullough.

"Once Havens got involved, I was able to go to other industries and essentially tell them, 'This is what we're building, here's what Havens is providing,' and that gave credibility to the project," Peterman said. " I now have about two dozen corporate sponsors who have since come on board and provided additional equipment and facilities as part of the whole infrastructure development. But even with the other sponsors, it was really Havens who jumpstarted the whole thing for us."

McCullough said Havens was glad to have the opportunity to support the project.

"We have a keen interest in the advancement of the engineering profession, so we were glad to help K-State," he said. "There has been a tremendous increase in the abilities to test different types of structures, and this new facility is definitely a good thing for the university."

The facility, which cost more than $120,000 to build, was co-designed by Peterman and Havens Steel and will handle testing for all types of structures, including beams and columns and joint connections. The first scheduled project for the facility will be centered around the research of the Debt is a word that strikes terror in students.

Students without health insurance can run into serious debt problems, said Carol Kennedy, director of health education and promotion at Lafene Health Center.

Dr. Jay Reppert, medical director for Lafene, said he believes it is important for students without insurance to get on a plan at the beginning of the semester. He said he wants to help students avoid serious debt by encouraging them to sign up for health insurance before the problem strikes.

"I see so many students come in after they are already sick and they don't have insurance," Reppert said. "Most insurance will not cover students with pre-existing conditions. We see so many students who get sick and wish they would have bought the insurance before the illness."

Lafene does not directly sell insurance to students, faculty and staff. Megan Dill is the student insurance representative for K-State.

Dill works for Mega Life insurance in the division of student insurance. This year,

Time, place of funeral for Burks established

The funeral has been scheduled for K-State graduate Marcella Burks, who died Thursday from viral meningitis.

Services for Burks, who died Friday of complications of viral meningitis, will take place at 11 a.m. Thursday at the Findt-Erdman Funeral Home, located at 100 E. Kansas Ave. in Arkansas City, Kan.

Limited transportation will be provided by the university for those wishing to attend, said Scott Jones, assistant dean of student life. Reservations can be made by calling the Office of Diversity and Dual Career Development at 532-6276.

Flowers and memorials may be sent directly to the funeral home. Friends and family may contact the funeral home directly at (316) 442-3210.

Contributions to a scholarship fund named for Burks also are welcome, Jones said, and may be sent to Suzanne Mayo-Theus of the KSU Foundation.

Manhattan man arrested for rape of local woman

A Manhattan man was arrested for the rape of a Pottawatomie County woman in her late teens over the weekend, officials said.

Jason Giles Gardner, 22, 1020 Houston St., Apt. 2, was arrested at 12:20 p.m. Sunday for rape, criminal threat, unlawful restraint and intimidation of a witness.

Lt. Rodney Jaeger, of Riley County Police Department, said the alleged rape occurred in the south-central part of Manhattan early Saturday morning.

Gardner is being kept at the Riley County jail under a $5,000 bond.

No hearings have been set at this time.

University of Arkansas site of murder-suicide

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Two people were shot to death Monday in an apparent murder-suicide in a faculty office at the University of Arkansas, authorities said.

Campus police confirmed the two fatalities, which took place on the first day of classes, spokeswoman Robin Gregory said.

Earlier, another spokesman, Roger Williams, said there was a report of at least three shots in a second-floor office in Kimpel Hall.

"It may or may not involve a professor," Williams said.

"We're trying to deal with a situation that seems horrific and trying to control everything we can and bring this to resolution as quickly as possible," Williams said.

Kimpel Hall houses faculty in a number of departments — communication, drama, English, foreign languages and journalism.

Journalism department chairwoman Patsy Watkins said police arrived at the building at 12:20 p.m., when many of the 50- to 60-student classrooms on the second floor of Kimpel Hall would have been filled.

Students left the building in an orderly fashion, saying they had been told to leave, Watkins said.

"All we've been told is that shots have been fired," Watkins said.

Journalism faculty members Larry Foley and Robert Carey said police had asked them to leave their first-floor offices. Kimpel Hall is shaped like a T, with classrooms along the long end of the T and offices across the crossbar.

2 children die in blaze lit with cigarette lighter

WELLINGTON, Kan. — Two children died and their parents were hospitalized after a fire at their home Monday morning. Fire officials in the south-central Kansas community blame the fire on the two children playing with a cigarette lighter.

Assistant Fire Chief Kent Boster identified the dead children as Katlynn Mason, 2, and Gage Mason, 3. Their mother, Sheila Grable, 23, was in serious condition at Via Christi Burn Center in Wichita, while her husband, Patrick Grable, 22, was in fair condition.

Boster said two other children, Christian Miller, 4, and Felicity Grable, who is less than a month old, escaped with their parents out the back door of the house without injury.

Hall fund-raiser offers students chance to meet

By STACI HAUSCHILD
Kansas State Collegian

If you smell bad, you probably didn't make Danny Chandler's list of what he looks for in a friend.

Chandler, junior in mechanical engineering and Moore Hall resident, participated in a compatibility questionnaire that helps match students that have the same personalities and characteristics.

"I don't remember the question exactly, but it was about personal hygiene," Chandler said. "What you didn't like about other people."

Chandler's dislikes were spitting, smelling bad, swearing and smoking. He said he had a difficult time deciding if he disliked spitting or smelling bad more.

"A lot of my friends swear, and I know people who smoke," he said. "Spitting is not as bad as being around someone who smells bad all the time."

The questionnaire, produced by Data Match Inc., consisted of 30 questions, each with four or five possible answers. After the residents decided which answer best fit their personalities they wrote the corresponding number to that answer in the box.

Courtney Keith, freshman in English and Moore Hall social chairwoman, said other questions included topics from what classes students were taking and what they liked to do on a date to what flavor of ice cream they liked best.

Chandler said some of his friends encouraged him to participate in the questionnaire, and he thought it was a good icebreaker for the beginning of the year.

"I'm kind of shy, so if someone comes up to me or I can go up to them because of this, then it kind of breaks the ice," Chandler said.

Keith said the questionnaires were available during the first week of school, but students wouldn't know their 10 compatible matches until mid-September.

"It's also a fund-raiser for our hall," she said. "The company charges 55 cents for the questionnaires, and the hall charges $1 for students to get results. It will probably go to the dance or mixer that we'll have so people can see who they are compatible with."

Keith said about 30 of Moore Hall's 600 residents participated in the questionnaire.

"That's not too good, but people are telling their friends," she said. "Maybe they've been too busy or they think they already know enough people. Everyone's so hectic with school right now."

Keith also said most of the participants were male.

Lisa Griffiths, junior in elementary education and Moore Hall treasurer, said she wasn't looking for a new love life through the questionnaire, just some new friends.

"More guys might be looking for a girlfriend or someone to take on a date," she said. "Girls are more cautious and think that if they're on their list they'll have to go on a date, instead of looking at it as a way to meet new people."

Congressman speaks in Manhattan

By CRISTINA JANNEY
Kansas State Collegian

Tax breaks, private Social Security accounts and school vouchers are a few ways that Rep. John Kasich, chairman of the House Budget Committee, said Americans should be able to exercise choice.

Rep. Kasich, R-Ohio, was the guest of Jim Ryun, R-Kan., at a Manhattan Chamber of Commerce luncheon Monday.

Kasich said he would like to see across-the-board tax cuts for all Americans.

"You don't want a tax cut, tough. I'm going to give it to you anyway," he said. "If you don't like it, you can send it to me."

Al Gore has jumped on the bandwagon with a tax-cut proposal, but it would take a trained seal and an accountant to figure out how to qualify for them, Kasich said.

He also advocates an elimination or easing of the estate tax, which he said he thought might pass Congress next year. Estate taxes are taxes on inherited property or money.

"You shouldn't have to visit the IRS and the undertaker on the same day," Kasich said.

If the tax is not completely eliminated, a $10,000 exclusion might be a compromise, he said. Estate taxes affect the transfer of small businesses and family farms to surviving family.

"I am a big believer in leaving a legacy. I think you work hard your whole life, and you carve a path for your children," Kasich said.

If you work hard, you should also have a good retirement, he said.

Private Social Security accounts would allow people to invest money withheld from their paychecks. Even conservative investment could provide 7-percent yields compared to the 2-percent yields when the government invests those funds he said.

"School vouchers will give every mother and father the resources to send their children to school systems that are safe and in which they can learn,"

Rep. John Kasich, chairman of the House Budget Committee

Although Kasich was a product of public education, he said he supported state and federally funded school-voucher programs. Public schools should not have a monopoly on education, he said.

"School vouchers will give every mother and father the resources to send their children to school systems that are safe and in which they can learn," he said.

He said the federal government should cooperate with states in supporting school choice.

Kasich was in the early running for the Republican nomination for president and on a short list of possible vice presidential candidates.

He said the race between Gore and George W. Bush will likely tighten up after Labor Day.

"Election night may be a very long night. George W. stands in a good position to win because of his likability, but he will have to do good in the debates," he said. "If he has a slip-up, then there become problems."

A member of the audience asked about military spending.

Kasich said the the downsizing of the military was appropriate after the end of the Cold War, but the increase in deployments over the past seven years has put a strain on military resources.

Between 1982 and 1992, the U.S. military had 41 deployments. Between 1993 and 2000, U.S. military personnel were deployed 116 times to places around the world.

"We shouldn't be the policeman of the world," Kasich said. "We should have some interest or strategy. Getting in the middle of ethnic civil wars is wrong."

10 suggestions for surviving classes, heat

Students definitely are feeling the heat right now, as the sun beats down on them as they walk from class to class. Some might even be wondering if there are ways to escape these painstakingly high temperatures. So here they are — 10 ways to beat the heat:

1) Bring your own water to campus, since the vending machines are constantly out.

2) Walk through sprinklers on your way to class. Don't worry — you won't have to walk on the grass, since the majority of the water is sprayed on the sidewalks. You might lose a limb or two due to the water pressure, but it will help keep you cool.

3) Change your schedule so you are not necessarily enrolled in classes you need, but so you are in classrooms that are equipped with central air. Too bad those are a rarity here at K-State.

4) Skip class or continue to hope that officials cancel class due to the heat.

5) Don't wear skin-tight Wranglers.

6) Regardless of how attractive you look in your exercise gear, go to the air-conditioned Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex or jog in the early morning or evening hours.

7) Find a fountain on campus, or visit City Park. Take off those shoes and frolic.

8) Go to Pillsbury Crossing and Tuttle Creek State Park and try to enjoy the weather. Or better yet, find friends who live in apartments with a swimming pool.

9) Remember to wear deodorant and bathe regularly. Please. This is not only a request for you individually, but for society as a whole. They sell soap for a reason. Use it.

10) This weather is the best excuse to drink an ice-cold beer.

Government goes overboard in surveillance of U.S. citizens

ZAC COOK

What scares me the most is that 99 percent of you reading this right now have never heard of the program. But that is the way it is supposed to be. It is vital to our nation's security that you have no inkling of the program.

That is, until they are chasing you around in your underwear on top of a high rise and you feel strangely like Will Smith in "Enemy of the State," then you'll know what the program does and how much technological power it wields. You'll see that no amount of the American Civil Liberties Union, no bodyguard, not even an awesome group of K-State linemen can protect you. Then you'll know about a top-secret project — code-named Echelon, run by the U.S. National Security Agency.

The NSA itself began as a top-secret program, established in 1952 by a directive of President Truman's that remains classified to this day. The world political scene was a strange, insecure place after World War II. Top officials knew that to ensure domestic stability, the United States needed a common enemy. A top-secret spy program would allow the United States to keep track of "naughty" rogue states, then use the press to paint a picture of the enemy.

It's hard for young people like myself to understand the Red Scare of the early 1950s, but that's exactly what it was: a scare plot by our government. The Russians were probably were building missiles and planning to blow up the world, but then again, so were we. So we used spies, traded dirty secrets and caused enough turmoil to fuel the building of the Berlin Wall. I'm sure the German teenagers of the 1960s appreciated a place for practicing graffiti, but the tension could have been averted.

Echelon is one of the most technologically advanced projects of the NSA. The program aims to intercept every satellite, microwave, cellular, and fiber-optic communication at stations in Yakima, Wash., Sugar Grove, Va., and other stations worldwide. After interception, massive computers using advanced voice recognition and text character recognition filter the transmission. They hunt for words, phrases and symbols common to the Echelon dictionary, which the NSA maintains. These are usually things related to terrorism and threats to U.S. interests abroad, but many groups believe the program is used to spy on innocent, peaceful groups within the U.S.

How exactly does Echelon work? Let's say you are talking on your cell phone to your friend in Nebraska. Being a die-hard K-State fan, you proclaim, "K-State will kill Nebraska and terrorize the BCS communists." Forgetting the date of the actual gridiron battle, you remark, "This Armageddon will be carried out on 17 November."

First of all, you should be run over by a herd of bulls from the dairy farm for forgetting that the showdown will be Nov. 11 in Manhattan and that K-State will have won 26 games in a row at KSU Stadium. If you are member of the "not quite 21 but look 16" group, like me, that means you have never seen the boys lose at home.

OK, as your words travel down the bandwidth clogged by Napster, they are filtered by the massive computer. Your journalistically excellent loaded words become flags to the filtering system. With enough words such as "kill," "terrorize," "communist," and "Armageddon," you might actually be enough of a threat for the computer to record the conversation and encrypt your voice so that when you call from anywhere, it will lock on to your conversation and begin recording.

Really, the key phrase would be "17 November," the powerful terrorist group operating out of Greece whose actions might prompt the relocation of the 2004 Olympic Games.

The central question remains, should Echelon be able to do what it does? Is listening passively to citizens too much? Are our civil liberties for sale to pay the price for protection from terrorism and rogue states? I think Echelon is a good program, and it doesn't infringe on our rights. It does leave the possibility that the system could be compromised if we were invaded by aliens — they could use our own program against us.

However, I think if an invading group was that powerful, we would already be in a lot of trouble. So when you are lingerie shopping, be aware of the strangers who might drop you a present and have you chased by the NSA.

Metallica shows hypocrisy in Napster case

CLINT MUDRICK

My illustrious years in journalism have taught me several things. First among these is that if you can't add something to a story, don't report on it.

Such rules seem to make Napster effectively untouchable; the last dozen stories on MP3 piracy relayed by Kurt Loder and Rolling Stone writers have been little more than rehashed drivel.

However, a combination of writer's block, Mountain Dew and a sudden sense of self-worth made me think I could shed some light onto the issue of Napster with an admittance followed by an accusation.

First, the admittance. Is Napster technically encouraging illegal activities? Of course. Music piracy-by-proxy is much like a drug dealer who hooks up contacts: while both partys' hands technically are clean, there is no denying their involvement.

Having said that, who cares? Napster is, in effect, an extended group of friends from whom one would have simply dubbed a tape before. Yet now, because it has become so immensely popular on college campuses, the world of music distribution has taken center stage, sharing the limelight only with a lying president, "Survivor" and Regis Philbin.

Necessity is said to be the mother of invention. While this can be put to question (if true, who the hell "needed" the Chia Pet, Jolt Cola or the WNBA?), a variation of this statement does hold: once invented, a product's demand signifies its necessity. So what accounts for the recent explosion of Napster's popularity?

Several mall stores charge in excess of $16 for compact discs. CD singles can cost upwards of $6. Gumby's and Pizza Shuttle don't exist because they make impeccable pizza; they exist because students are poor, and they can't afford the extra $3 for Pizza Hut, let alone a ridiculous amount of money for a CD they probably will not like anyway. Thus, the appeal of Napster for college students.

Now for the accusation. Metallica is, unequivocally and undeniably, hypocritical. The band that once preached angst and rebellion is now hiding behind big brother, pointing fingers at the fans that first took the band from obscurity to stardom.

I still am unsure as to how they took the leap. From the beginning, I found the group to be boring, annoying and about as talented as Milli Vanilli (but at least those guys had the decency to lip sync and save us their terrible voices).

As you can likely tell, my grudge with Metallica is not because I was kicked off Napster for downloading their songs; I'd sooner download "A Tiny Tim Christmas." My disfavor for the group comes rather from their audacity. Metallica filing suit because fans are rebelling against the system is like Zack de la Rocha suing because Leonard Peltier stole his car stereo; it is hypocritical.

But back to Napster. Apparently the rogue MP3 distributors are hurting record sales. It's intriguing that some 23 million more CDs were sold between January and June of this year than in the same time period last year. In fact, 'N Sync broke previous sales records, proving two things. First, America's musical tastes have gone straight to hell. Second, Napster is not hurting anyone with decent material to sell.

Yet Metallica is relentless because it isn't getting enough money off their new CD for Lars Ulrich to buy another new house, so the realities of Napster's influence on music-buying habits are unimportant.

It is time for Metallica to realize that, to continue to sell music, a band must on occasion produce a song that doesn't sound exactly like everything else it's ever done. If the "Mission: Impossible-2" song is any indication, the group has simply lost its ability - if it ever had it - to create decent music.

Bush, Limp Bizkit, Offspring and Public Enemy have all rallied behind Napster. Yet Ulrich continues to whine about being an artist who needs to eat. Why then do the local bands, the ones who truly need record sales, support Napster most strongly?

Napster is a song-distribution service. If a person has no intention of buying a CD, it makes no difference what music he or she has. However, for those of us who might be in the market, what better way to whet the appetite than with a free song or two? Napster can make unknown bands known and big bands huge.

But then again, maybe Metallica is right. Maybe the (gasp) 4-percent drop in record sales around college towns in recent times is an indication that the poor artists are being robbed of their new Bentleys; the 12-percent overall rise in record sales would say otherwise, but nobody ever accused Metallica members of logical thinking.

Or maybe it just means that students who used to get stuck with a Metallica CD, bought for only one song and shortly thereafter discarded, can now hop on the Web, grab a dub from a "friend" half a world away and save the $16 for a Big Ass pizza.

The ball is in your court, Metallica. Press a decent album and maybe, just maybe, your record sales can once again match those of everyone else in the industry.

Campus radio station could move to Union

By SHAWN HEIN
Kansas State Collegian

KSDB-FM 91.9 could have a new address in the future.

The radio station could be moving from its current location in McCain Auditorium to the K-State Student Union. Candy Walton, station manager, said the move would be great for Wildcat 91.9.

"I am looking forward to the change of location," Walton said. "It'll be brand new, improved facilities."

The Union Executive Office had no official comment on the matter, only that the Union Governing Board had agreed to the concept of the radio station moving to the Union. If it does go through, Wildcat 91.9 would occupy space on the first floor to the east of the Computer Store, where the Copy Center formerly was located.

Walton said the change from McCain to the Union would not happen for a while.

"We are still in the beginning of planning," Walton said. "We are still on things like floor plan, technical aspects of moving a radio signal, equipment costs, et cetera. We have not set a date yet because we are too far out, and I won't even guess."

Matt Jolly, an employee of the station, said he doesn't expect the move to be anytime soon.

"I don't expect to see it happen in my time here," Jolly, junior in public relations, said.

InterVarsity offers students opportunity for involvement

By MAGGIE BLUNK
Kansas State Collegian

In an effort to introduce new students to K-State, InterVarsity Christian Fellowship is sponsoring a get-together at 8:30 tonight in Union Station on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union. The meeting is titled "Search for Friendships."

Wade Weber, campus staff worker for InterVarsity, said this meeting will give students the opportunity to connect with the university.

"Statistics have shown that when students get involved, their chances of staying enrolled in school are greater," Weber said. "We feel that if we are given the opportunity to partner with the university in allowing students to get involved and connected with other students, we should take advantage of it."

InterVarsity is an interdenominational Christian group that meets at 8:30 on Tuesday evenings in the Union Little Theatre.

"Being a part of ICF is like being a part of a family," Lisa Loomis, president of InterVarsity, said. "The people have helped guide me, walk with me, and have held me accountable to get into God's word on a daily basis."

Weber said the group is characterized by love for God, love for God's people, love for God's word and love for God's purposes.

"This semester, some topics we will talk about include finding Mr. and Mrs. Right, religion, why we should build relationships with people who aren't like us and what Jesus says about the role of women," he said.

MORE INFO?
Anyone interested in joining InterVarsity Christian Fellowship can attend a get-together at 8:30 tonight on the ground floor of the Union.

Weber said Tuesday night's focus for the group is searching for friendships. Two K-State alumni will come and tell their perspectives of their university experiences.

"We hope that we can help students adjust to campus and help them meet new friends," said Sharol Warner, member of the InterVarsity leadership team. "We hope we can help them get connected with other students and show them how Jesus can fit in to all parts of their life."

The event will take place in association with Wildcat Welcome Week and is one way the group said it can help people get started on the right foot.

"At the beginning of the year, it's a search to fit in," Loomis said. "We think it is important to get a solid foundation and let students know that we are a caring group."

Weber said that on Tuesday and Sept. 12, the group will meet in Union Station due to scheduling conflicts with the Little Theatre.

"Come one, come all," he said. "Everybody is invited to come and join us."

Baseball stadium expansion delayed

■ Construction of field slows due to lack of available funds, supplies, building materials.

By SAM STIERS
Kansas State Collegian

Lack of money and delays in the delivery of supplies have slowed the construction of Frank Myers Field.

"The construction is not going as fast as I'd like it to go," Max Urick, K-State athletics director, said. "We're still waiting on the delivery of the steel that will be used to form the framework of the luxury suites and press box. The limestone that will go on the outside of the stadium has been delivered, but the masons aren't ready to put it up."

Urick said the steel was supposed to be delivered two weeks ago, but now he expects it to arrive in the next couple of weeks.

Charles Thomas, director of Bramlage Coliseum, said it's tough to keep a reliable schedule when the contractor must wait on supplies that have been donated.

"We'd like to have been farther along," Thomas said, "but a portion of the construction is what we call gift-in-time, which means all the materials for certain parts of the construction have been donated. You just get the supplies as they become available."

All of the exterior limestone and part of the steel that will constitute the framework for the suites was received by donation.

Despite the delays, Urick said, in his opinion, the limestone and steel work will be completed by Nov. 1. The next phase of construction will consist of building offices for the coaches and a weight room for the players. Urick said this next phase of construction is dependent on funds that have not yet been received.

"We don't have the money for the offices and the weight room yet," Urick said. "The field is being primarily financed by donations."

Wooldridge assembles staff, team

Basketball team loses off-bench contributor

K-State will be without the services of No. 23 Kenyatta Dix next season.

The 6-foot-1-inch guard left the basketball program over the summer — a move that Coach Jim Wooldridge said was a mutual one.

"It was in his best interest not to be at K-State and to go somewhere else," he said. "I think we both agreed to that."

Dix started four games last season for the Cats, averaging 11.5 points per game and shooting 42-percent from the field.

Primarily, though, Dix was a contributor off the bench, averaging 11 minutes per game and filling in for the Cats starting guards. He also was five of 27 from three-point range and had 32 assists during the season.

The Cats will look to replace Dix with some of the players they signed in the last recruiting period, a class that included four guards.

By NICK BRATKOVIC
Kansas State Collegian

A foundation for the Jim Wooldridge era of basketball is being laid inside the K-State men's basketball office in Ahearn Field House.

The offices have a new shine to them, and a suite is filled with telephones ringing, e-mails being written and plans being arranged. There is new hope and optimism from the players as they come in and out of individual drills.

In his office, where autographed pictures and memorabilia align the walls, K-State head coach Jim Wooldridge is overseeing a program he hopes will lead to improvement over last season.

"We are going to bring our own style, our own recruiting style," Wooldridge said. "We hope to be here a long time. We are going to lay a foundation, and if people can see that we are making progress and presenting the program the right way — that this program can fit within the athletic department and within the university — people can have a sense of pride as they look at it."

When he was hired last winter in the days following former K-State head coach Tom Asbury's exit, Wooldridge got right to work.

He assembled a coaching staff, that included specific coaches who would deal directly with recruiting. It was that group of assembled coaches who began shaping the 2000-01 Cats.

K-State's first recruiting class under Wooldridge addressed a variety of the program's needs, including three guards, a point guard and a power forward.

"These recruits hopefully will be able to help the existing players improve their team," Wooldridge said. "For that to happen, the other has to happen as well — the existing players will have to improve."

The recruited players, which the team hopes will become household names to K-State fans, includes Richie Terry, a 6-foot-3-inch guard from Jacksonville Junior College, who averaged 18.6 points per game and was named the school's MVP. Terry said he is optimistic about playing at K-State.

"I just can't wait for the first game," Terry said. "In Texas, coach didn't take no stuff, and just like here, Coach Wooldridge doesn't take any stuff

Cooper, Leber, Allen in race for national football awards

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

Three K-State football players are on watch lists for the 2000 season.

Senior strong safety Jarrod Cooper, junior middle linebacker Ben Leber and senior tailback David Allen all received preseason nominations for national awards in a Friday press release.

"They're all fine ball players," senior defensive end Monty Beisel said. "They go out there and work hard, and I love 'em to death. I hope they get all the recognition they can."

Cooper, from Pearland, Texas, was one of 40 defensive backs across the nation to be named to the Jim Thorpe Award "Watch List," the Jim Thorpe Association announced last Wednesday.

The 6-foot-1-inch, 210-pound safety was listed as one of four favorites for the award, which has been presented annually since 1986.

Cooper is the Wildcats' top returning tackler and sits in the top 25 of K-State's career tackle chart.

Beisel said Cooper brings a lot of chemistry to the Cats' defensive unit.

"He's one of those guys that when you're down, you can always look at him and say, 'Hey, this guy's going strong,'" Beisel said. "He brings a lot of chemistry to the ball club, and he's always a guy that's going to go hard."

Football team's performance raises questions regarding season's future

FRANK FLATON

I don't know if it was the severe dehydration or the malaria I received in the tropical/desert/inferno-like temperatures in Kansas City, Mo., this weekend, but the world didn't seem clear during K-State's 27-7 victory over Iowa.

Nearly every K-State fan, a number of preseason magazines and sports journalists, including myself and ESPN analyst Lee Corso (Lee Corso and me in the same sentence — who would've thought?) have predicted the Wildcats to contend for a national championship.

Delirium caused by heat exhaustion might have forced me to look toward Kauffman Stadium instead of the field at Arrowhead, but the team in purple didn't look familiar.

There were no exciting 40-yard runs, beautifully executed passes and no 50-point beating. Don't get me wrong, there were some good things that came from the victory. For instance, the defense played well. (Sorry, that's all I could come up with.)

So far, excuse after excuse has been brought up after K-State's poor offensive performance Saturday — it was too hot, it was too early in the season and so on and so forth.

I realize that a win is a win: It doesn't really matter how a team gets it.

Nevertheless, K-State should never have been just 10 points ahead in the third quarter against a team that offensively couldn't beat Ball State.

The heat probably was unbearable for the Cats and they might not have been ready to play just one week after two-a-days. Regardless, K-State needs to get better, and fast. Real fast.

If anything, though, the first victory of the season has spawned about 1,631 questions about this year's team. For space reasons, I've left a few out.

Question No. 1 — Is Jonathan Beasley going to be good enough?

Maybe the heat affected Beasley, too, and he thought he was throwing passes to Manute Bol instead of Aaron Lockett.

Beasley did look more poised and confident than a year ago. He was calling plays and getting the Wildcats into productive situations, but his passes were either overthrown or 10 feet away from his receivers. His accuracy must get better or redshirt freshman Ell Roberson might just snag his job away.

Question No. 2 — Speaking of Ell, where was he? Offensive coordinator Ron Hudson said Roberson is just not ready. But, you'd think that a quarterback with his supposed athleticism would be better off playing at least two series instead of one pitch (You have to admit that was a dang good pitch — probably the best I've ever seen).

Question No. 3 — Are David Allen's legs broken? The All-American was nearly kneecapped on his final punt return. His limp didn't look healthy. Snyder said the injury was not a fracture, but he didn't release the severity of Allen's injury.

If he's out, K-State will have trouble in the backfield. Besides Allen, the Wildcats don't have a proven running back.

Question No. 4 — Is it possible to petition the Kansas Board of Regents to let Joe Hall play despite his grade problems? If Allen can't play for weeks, Hall would be the gamebreaker the Wildcat offense needs. Josh Scobey and Chris Claybon may be efficient, but a high-profile running back still is the only piece missing in K-State's arsenal.

Question No. 5 — Is all the hype getting to Quincy Morgan? The fleety flanker is considered to be one of the best in the Big 12 Conference. He dropped four passes, though, and didn't display the breakaway potential he showed last season.

Question No. 17 — Who is the man behind the Willie the Wildcat mask? I just want to know.

Question No. 32 — Why didn't Josh Scobey, Josh Buhl, Roderick Cartwright and Terry Pierce get sufficient playing time on Saturday? Was Iowa that much of a threat that Snyder couldn't experiment with some of the new prospects?

Question No. 333 — How many purple jumpsuits does Snyder own?

Question No. 565 — If Iowa can come that close to the Wildcats, what will happen when K-State travels to Boulder or College Station?

Question No. 785 — Will the absence of key superstars like Lamar Chapman and Mark Simoneau be enough for the defense to shut down a high powered Nebraska offense?

Question No. 1,357 — Why would anybody call a university Ball State?

Question No. 1, 631 — Will it ever be cold again?

Urick said if the donations aren't there to complete the stadium, the athletic department could use money from general revenues. However, he said the bulk of the money must come from private or corporate donations.

"We give money based on needs," Urick said. "Baseball has been competing with a lot of things, such as the golf course. Baseball just hasn't generated a lot of interest."

Yet, Urick said he is optimistic the money will be there to finish the stadium.

"I think we're in good shape," Urick said. "We do need more money, and we are waiting on donors, but someone could call up tomorrow and help us out. You just never know."

Urick said most of the construction should be completed when K-State's baseball team takes the field in the spring.

"I don't think the weight room will be done," Urick said. "It's hard to say — it's a matter of revenue. Right now, the completion date is indefinite."

Head coach Mike Clark said the new baseball stadium already has helped in recruiting talent to K-State.

"The new stadium put us on a level playing field with other Division I schools," Clark said. "We've had the same caliber of talent come to visit us in the past, but they took a look at our facilities and went somewhere else."

The field itself is complete, and K-State will play its home games there this spring.

Thomas said construction went smoothly during the summer, and he said he was happy with the efforts of the job's contractor.

"In short, most of the infrastructure is done, and the exterior work, which needed to be complete in order to hang the rock facing and begin to build the additional steel structure for the luxury suites, has also been completed," Thomas said. "The top railings along the bleachers were also completed.

"We have an absolutely great contractor working on the stadium. Coonrod Construction is doing a great job on getting the stadium built."

Coonrod Construction is based in Wichita and has worked on projects at K-State before such as the Academic Learning Center and the west side press boxes at KSU Stadium.

AWARDS

Cooper was slated a 2000 preseason first team All-American by both Street and Smith's and The Sporting News, while earning consensus preseason first team All-Big 12 honors.

Leber, a second-team preseason All-Big 12 choice by Lindy's, was one of 70 linebackers nationwide to receive Butkus Award consideration, named after NFL Hall of Fame linebacker Dick Butkus.

Leber, who hails from Vermillion, S.D., is the Cats' top returning tackler at the linebacker position. The 6-foot-4-inch, 250-pound Leber recorded 58 tackles, including seven for loss, in 1999.

Chosen as a co-captain for the 2000 season, Beisel said Leber is well deserving of the honor.

"Being a middle linebacker, he's already got a role of being a leader on the defense, so with Mark (Simoneau) leaving, a lot of guys look to him," Beisel said. "He's definitely a leader on our defense, and he's one of those guys that's going to go out there and play hard game in and game out."

Allen is the third of the Cat trio named to a "watch list." The 5-foot-9-inch, 200-pound tailback is one of 39 collegiate running backs listed as nominees for the Dr Pepper Doak Walker Award, given to the nation's top running back each year since 1990.

A Playboy preseason All-American, Allen is known for his special teams heroics. Allen, of Liberty, Mo., is tied for the NCAA record with seven career punt returns for touchdowns. Through 1999, Allen has tallied 2,415 career all-purpose yards, including 364 rushing yards last season.

A semifinal list for each award will be announced in mid-season.

Three finalists for the Thorpe Award will be made the Tuesday prior to Thanksgiving, while three finalists for the Butkus Award and Doak Walker Award will be announced Nov. 9 and Dec. 1,, respectively.

Finalists for both awards are invited to attend ESPN's College Football Awards Show on Dec. 7 at Disney World in Orlando, Fla., for the awards presentation.

K-State's David Allen was chosen as Playboy preseason All-American for his special teams heroics. He is pictured on page 123 of the October Issue.

The following day, Dec. 8, the Butkus Award winner will be announced at a gala in Orlando.

either. You have to work hard."

Also recruited was Matt Siebrandt, a 6-foot-8-inch power forward from the College of Southern Idaho, where Siebrandt averaged 15 points and eight rebounds per contest.

Daryl Williams, a 6-foot-5-inch guard from Pasco-Hernando Community College, should be another scoring threat. Last season, he averaged 17-points-per-game and was the Sun Coast Conference player of the year.

Wooldridge and his staff also will have the services of Larry Reid, a 6-foot point guard from Northern Oklahoma Community College, along with Tony Atchison, who attended Central Florida Community College. Atchison averaged 13-points per game last season as he was named a first-team Mid-Florida Conference selection.

However, Wooldridge said there are a lot of things he doesn't know about his team.

"Outside of expecting our players to play hard, and play together and play smart, because we have not coached them, it is hard to say what they are going to be like," he said.

With practice still over a month and a half away, Wooldridge said in the interim, players are going through individual drills and continuing with their strength training workouts. He also said the program is working on the fundamentals, both on and off the court.

"We're trying and we're going to teach on a daily basis things that have a lot to do with being a successful program," he said. "That's being responsible to each other and avoiding things that take away energy and time from the program. We're talking about those things all of the time.

"Being a credible person — that's on the floor and off the floor. I really think that those things have a lot do with whether you are going to be successful, or if are you going to be unsuccessful."

Police use tear gas to deter riots at CU

The Associated Press

BOULDER, Colo. — Boulder police used tear gas to subdue about 1,000 University of Colorado rioters on University Hill early Sunday morning, the fifth riot in the area since May 1997.

Officials said they hadn't expected any trouble before the Labor Day weekend next weekend.

"In previous riots, the students' reasoning was, 'We're stressed because of mid-terms and we really need a break,' 'We're celebrating the Super Bowl,' or 'We're ... (angry) at the cops for cracking down on underage drinking,'" police spokeswoman Jennifer Bray said.

"What we're thinking is this is the largest freshman class ever — 5,600 kids — a nice night, and many students were probably out wandering around ... looking for parties and it just added to the huge amount of folks who were here."

The latest riot comes just two days after Boulder police supplied pizza and sodas in the University Hill area in an effort to tear down the walls of mistrust between students and authorities.

Boulder Deputy Police Chief Jim Hughes said it took as many as 70 officers to disperse the crowd. He estimated the damage, manpower and cleanup costs at $8,000.

Boulder police reported that four vehicles were damaged Sunday and two officers suffered slight injuries. One reveler was arrested for obstruction of justice.

Several rioters received slight injuries from the projectiles, but no one was hospitalized, said Jana Petersen, spokeswoman for the city of Boulder. The damage and injuries came mostly from hurled rocks, bottles and bricks.

"A lot of people think this is just college kids having fun," Hughes said. "But it's more than just kids being kids. There are some consequences. Within the last 2 1/2 years, we've had two officers critically injured."

Petersen said police first learned of the gathering just after midnight. At that point, it was small. Reinforcements were called in because officers on the scene feared it would get worse.

The rioters ignored repeated commands to disperse and hurled objects at the officers, Petersen said. The city had to resort to using the new reverse 911 system to alert nearby residents to close their windows because police were about to use tear gas.

AROUND CAMPUS

WHO: Pat Bosco, dean of student life

BOSCO

Pat Bosco has spent more than half of his life at K-State.

The vice president of institutional advancement and dean of student life graduated from K-State with a bachelor's degree in elementary education and a master's degree in educational administration.

After receiving a doctoral degree from the University of Nebraska, he returned to K-State in 1971 as an administrator.

Bosco and his wife, Susan, have a son, Chris, who graduated from K-State, and a daughter, Mary Catherine, who is a senior at K-State.

He said he enjoys his connection with the university.

"I love the students and the K-State spirit," he said.

When Bosco isn't working with K-State students, he spends his time reading mystery novels and four newspapers a day.

He also coaches competitive fast pitch girl's softball. His team won the state championship and qualified for nationals this last summer.

"I coach because it gives me a chance to use my undergraduate degree and volunteer for the community," he said.

K-State student uses creativity to make gothic clothing

By JJ DUNCAN
Kansas State Collegian

Black skin-tight Lycra cut to highlight the model's nipple piercings and a matching ankle-length skirt is just one of Crystal Elliott's clothing designs.

"I find things that aren't of the norm; that are unique, intriguing," said Elliott, junior in apparel design and production. "A lot of the type of clothing I do is risque and seductive. And a lot of what I've done, at least lately, has been dark."

Elliott designs and produces gothic-style clothing and hopes to make a career out of her work after college. Her designs, which are strongly influenced by the gothic subculture and by bondage fetishism, are products that reflect not only her creativity but her personality, she said.

In order to understand Elliott's design style, it might be necessary to understand her personality. Elliott, who dresses in dark clothes, sports blue and black hair and wears pale make-up with dark eye-liner, said she identifies herself as part of the gothic subculture.

"I really like doing a lot of goth styles and club wear, stuff that's just fun to wear, stuff that you don't see every day," she said. "I would also like to make bondage wear and accessories which, while sometimes not socially acceptable, is one of the fashions."

Whether or not her styles are socially acceptable, Elliott has received a great deal of encouragement and support from instructors, as well as other students, she said.

Janice Huck, associate professor of clothing and textiles, has worked with Elliott for about two years on a variety of projects. Huck said Elliott has been a strong student with a knack for the creative side of the production process.

"I think her creativity level sets her apart," Huck said. "Some students are really strong on the technical side but not many people have the vision, the illustration skills and the creativity that Crystal does."

These things might set Elliott apart in her classes, but she said it is her gothic style that sets her apart in her everyday life.

"I do think it's good to create a reaction in people sometimes, because that helps them think," she said. "It helps people realize that there are other things out there in the world that they don't know about."

Not all of the feedback Elliott receives is positive. Her controversial designs are sometimes greeted with distaste. She said this makes her appreciative of the support she has received from faculty and other students.

Elliott, who has had to learn a great deal about the technical side of production, said she wouldn't have been able to bring her ideas to life without the guidance and help she received from her instructors.

She has put a great deal of time into her work in the classroom and brings notebooks full of ideas to expand on. Sometimes the hardest part isn't coming up with the idea, but bringing that idea into existence, Huck said.

"It's one thing to have an idea in your mind, but to be able to translate that into something you can cut out of a piece of fabric is a difficult undertaking," she said.

Starting young, Elliott was sewing simple pillow patterns when she was 8 years old. After years of her family moving around, she eventually became the president of the fashion club at Olathe North High School. This led to a high school fashion show, "Kaleidoscoping Endeavors," which highlighted 10 of her garments, she said.

After high school, Elliott attended Johnson County Community College before transferring to K-State for the Department of Apparel, Textiles and Interior Design last year. Since then, Elliott said her instructors, Sherry Harr, assistant professor of apparel, textiles and interior design, and Huck have given her plenty to work on and helped her along the way.

"Sherry and Janice are wonderful instructors," she said. "Janice has really believed in me, and it makes me feel good to know that she likes my stuff even though it is different."

The production process itself is a long process in which Elliott's idea-packed sketch books have helped her out. She said the process begins with a sketch that is then made into a prototype made out of the inexpensive fabric, muslin. Either a mannequin or model is used to make sure measurements are correct, she said.

A pattern is then made using the muslin prototype. The final step is to choose the fabric and sew the final product from the pattern, Elliott said.

One of her most recently designed garments, the skin-tight Lycra top with the ankle-length skirt, was developed in class. She used her boyfriend, Daren Lewis, junior in advertising, as the model for the outfit.

"I had to experiment with the measurements since it was stretch material," Elliott said. "Daren had to keep coming in for fittings. It took about eight weeks to do that full outfit in class because I was still learning."

The outfit is just a sample of Elliott's out-of-the-ordinary style. Her clothing requires the wearer not be afraid of the opinions of others, Lewis said.

"It seems there are people who really are scared to be different, who don't want to be outside of the crowd," he said.

Elliott said she wished at least one thing for those who view her work.

"I don't expect everyone to like what I do," she said, "but at least to try and keep an open mind and consider the possibility of something different."

ABOVE: Crystal Elliott, junior in apparel design/production, displays some designs she is working on. Elliott has been designing and redesigning clothing since she was young.

BELOW: Daren Lewis, junior in advertising, models an outfit that Crystal Elliott designed. The outfit was entered in a competition but did not place. Elliott said she aspires to design apparel for the alternative/club scene.

INSURANCE

Mega Life scripted a new insurance plan that is endorsed at all of the Kansas Board of Regent Schools, Dill said. The plan is the same across the state. One benefit of having the same plan for all of the regents schools is a lower overall cost for everyone, Reppert said.

The plan offered through Mega Life gives potential holders a choice of two kinds of plans. The first is a limited plan that costs $275 for a full year. The limited plan provides the basic health care needs of students from limited prescription drug coverage to covering a certain percentage of hospital stay.

The comprehensive plan costs $600 for a full year. This more inclusive plan has a higher maximum coverage of medical expenses and provides more coverage than on the limited plan.

Dill said each person who comes to see her about insurance has different needs and so it is hard for her to prescribe which plan is best for individuals.

"It is important to talk it out with your parents," Dill said. "Each student has a different situation and a difference in what they can afford."

Sally Sowell, director of administrative services at Lafene, said students shouldn't judge the plans by the cost.

"The majority of students look at the dollar. Instead they need to look at what is offered," Sowell said. "We will be putting out pamphlets to help educate students about the issue of insurance."

Students should make health care a top priority in their budgets, Kennedy said.

"No one expects to get sick or get into a car accident," she said. "A year of this insurance is cheaper than a year of car insurance. Students should prioritize and put health insurance at the top of the list instead of at the bottom."

The new Mega Life plan will go into effect Friday for those who purchased it. Students can make a choice of paying for it by semester or all of it at once, Dill said.

About 75 percent of K-State students are covered under some kind of insurance plan, Mary Dixon, insurance clerk said.

Dixon said those who do have insurance either from their parents or individually should know the basics of their plan.

"In general, lots of kids are just given insurance cards and are not informed very well about how they work," Dixon said.

All students need to understand is the basics, she said.

"Insurance is really difficult," Dixon said. "If students can just get the basics of the policy that is great."

Dixon said it is a good idea for those with insurance to carry a copy of their cards with them and to get a copy to Lafene before they get sick.

Getting sick can be expensive, Dixon said.

"I've seen students with balances over $2,000 owed to Lafene," she said. "Insurance can dramatically help cut those costs."

LAFENE

Kristen Summerson, freshman in business and marketing, said she already is wary of going to the Women's Center.

"I hear that if you are a woman and you are sick, their answer to everything is that you are pregnant," Summerson said.

Kennedy said a commonly negative attitude arises when students feel they ought to get a prescription, regardless of what the diagnosis might be. She said the students then feel they are not getting the care they feel is best.

Kennedy said the opinions of satisfied students are not vocalized as much.

"It is unfortunate that a negative image exists and it can hurt someone," she said. "I would hope that students who are ill would seek our help."

Zweimiller said Lafene deals with a population that is in a period of transition.

"Lots of times they have nothing to compare Lafene to," he said.

TESTING

use of fiber-reinforced polymer materials to repair damaged bridge girders. The estimated time for this project is approximately one year.

The testing facility is located at 925 Carlson Street in Manhattan, behind K-State's Civil Infrastructure Systems Laboratory.

Lakshmi Reddi, Head of the Department of Civil Engineering, said this new testing facility is just one section of CISL.

"The steel project of Dr. Peterman's is part of an 'umbrella' lab that is evolving there," Reddi said.

Reddi said other projects will be going on simultaneously.

"This is going to take the K-State program to new heights," he said. "This is a unique, large-scale testing program that many schools in the country don't have. This gives K-State tremendous national recognition in the area of civil infrastructure systems. I think that the activities we see at CISL will continue to grow at a fast rate because there is so much need to test systems at large scales."

Peterman is anticipating the advent of the new projects his facility will introduce to campus, and said he believes they will be a worthy addition to the civil engineering program.

"To be an effective teacher, I think I need to bring research into the classroom," he said. "I think that as a result of this expansion of the program, students will have a better grasp of structural design and behavior, and hopefully more enthusiasm. I know they're excited about doing something other than sitting in class and doing homework. This brings it all to life."

Napster provides.

"I do understand that students want to preview music and see if it's something they want to buy. I understand what they're doing and why they're doing it," Unger said. "In a sense, it's laudable and a good service the Internet can provide."

The issue, she said, though, is whether the site is a way to circumvent a customer from purchasing their own copy of the music.

"That is the critical issue of what's going on in the national level," she said. "The campus issue is an issue of resources, and we simply don't have the resources for Napster here."

K-State students were asked not to download MP3 files in May due to the amount of bandwidth, or space, it used.

Harvard Townsend, director of Computing and Network Services, said Napster created many problems at K-State due to the amount of networking traffic it caused, interfering with academic use. For that specific reason, it was banned from use on K-State computers.

"Whether it's illegal or not for Napster to operate, I'll leave that up to the courts," he said.

Not only did it cause a problem for K-State Internet traffic, he said, but another problem was that it allowed students to obtain information illegally. Students are ultimately responsible for downloading the copyrighted material, he said, but Napster makes it easier to do.

"Napster is also used to distribute that music that is not copyrighted, and that is perfectly legitimate, but unfortunately for the most part, it is being used to distribute music illegally," Townsend said.

Area said the online site could be a disadvantage or advantage depending on the band.

"It is advantageous to bands that wouldn't get heard elsewhere, like local bands," he said, "but mainstream bands that are popular are being hurt the most."

Internal fighting has proven detrimental to Reform Party's chances in Kansas

By JOHN HANNA
The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Eight years ago, Kansas was one of the best states for Ross Perot's independent presidential candidacy and appeared to be fertile territory for the new Reform Party.

However, the Reform Party is foundering this year, beset by an internal split over its presidential candidate. That split threatens to kill the fledgling political organization.

Claiming the Reform Party's presidential nomination are Pat Buchanan, the conservative commentator who left the Republican Party last year, and John Hagelin, a nuclear physicist who has identified with the Natural Law Party, which touts the benefits of Transcendental Meditation.

Secretary of State Ron Thornburgh refused to put either candidate's name on the Nov. 7 ballot as the Reform Party nominee until the State Objections Board makes a ruling. The board consists of Thornburgh, Lt. Gov. Gary Sherrer and Attorney General Carla Stovall, all Republicans.

Buchanan supporters clearly are worried the Republicans will find a way to keep their candidate off the ballot and see it as something that would kill the party in Kansas.

"They're putting a dagger through the Reform Party," said John Cooney of St. Marys, a Buchanan delegate to the party's national convention. "Forget about Buchanan and Hagelin. Look at what they're doing to the Reform Party."

Hagelin supporters, of course, place much more of the blame for the Reform Party's decline on Buchanan's candidacy. Hagelin is drawing strong support from longtime activists attracted to the party by Perot.

"A lot of people who have worked to get it started are just so disgusted."

Ida True Terry, Reform Party activist

"I have just been, frankly, so disgusted with the whole thing," said Ida True Terry, a longtime Reform Party activist from Topeka. "A lot of people who have worked to get it started are just so disgusted."

In 1992, when Perot first ran for president, Kansas looked like a good place for a Reform Party organization to take root.

He received 27 percent of the vote in Kansas. His percentage was higher in only three other states: Maine, Alaska and Utah.

Officials in both main parties in Kansas thought Perot's candidacy hurt the majority Republicans. Many in the Kansas GOP believe Perot cost President George Bush the re-election.

Yet the Reform Party itself never seems to have caught on.

It is the smallest of the five recognized parties in Kansas. At the end of July, fewer than 2,200 registered voters were affiliated with it, or less than two-tenths of 1 percent of the total. No Reform Party candidate has run a truly credible campaign for even a legislative seat.

This year, the only Reform Party candidate on the ballot is a candidate for the Franklin County Commission.

"Once Perot was gone, the Reform Party was gone," state GOP Chairman Mark Parkinson said. "The way you build a party that lasts is that you build it from the ground up."

State Democratic Chairman Tom Sawyer said, "You can't have a party that's just centered around one person. You need to be able to generate candidates up and down the ballot. A lot of people were in the Reform Party because they liked Ross Perot."

Reform Party activists are trying to counter the picture of the organization as moribund, both in Kansas and across the nation.

Cooney switched from the GOP to the Reform Party after the state canceled its presidential preference primary this year.

He says the party still can attract voters who are tired of what he describes as the sameness of the two main parties.

But the split highlights a tremendous internal tension within the Reform Party, something that's been present for at least several years.

High temperatures in Kansas set records

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

K-State now can claim to be one of the hottest colleges, as well as the most trendy in the nation.

Manhattan, along with Lawrence, posted the nation's highest temperatures Monday, each at 109 degrees. The National Weather Service also reported that Monday might go on the record as the hottest day of the summer.

However, forecasters are not holding their breath, because the weather service has issued a heat advisory for south central and southeast Kansas through today.

"There is nothing in the forecast to indicate any major changes for this and next week," said Mary Knapp, state climatologist for the K-State Weather Data Library. "The temperatures could go beyond the 100 degree mark. Without any moisture in the air, we could be in for a long, hot spell."

Knapp said the cause of the heat right now stems from the lack of moisture in the air.

"With water vapor and moisture, it is hard to heat the atmosphere," she said. "We have next to nothing in the way of moisture, so the temperatures are going to stay high."

The forecast calls for temperatures to rise between 100 and 105 degrees today and Thursday and to continue through Saturday, which is predicted to remain dry with temperatures in the upper 90s to low 100s.

"August is not unknown to have 100-degree readings, but this weather is a shock to many because we are not used to it," Knapp said.

In recent years, August has reported only a handful of days that broke the 100-degree reading.

"However, if you go back to the 1980s, August routinely had 10-12 days of this temperature," Knapp said. "It definitely catches people's attention because we weren't expecting it."

The recent rise in temperatures have caught the attention of K-State's ground crew.

"We are working twice as hard to keep up with the temperatures," Mary Walgrave, grounds supervisor, said. "We run water 10 hours a day in certain areas to make sure the grounds stay green."

The grounds crew have increased its supply of sprinklers, hand hoses and fertilizer to keep up with the demand for water.

"When the grass gets hot, it wants to go dormant, so we have to try and trick it into believing the weather is cooler," Walgrave said. "We also are having to pull flower pots to the shade to keep them alive."

Walgrave said they also plan to increase their staff on duty through the weekend.

"I can't remember when it has been this hot out," she said. "We are having to make a lot of changes in staff and watering times."

Twelve cool, juicy watermelons and a temperature above 100 degrees were the perfect combination for the Watermelon Feed and Club Activities Fair on Tuesday evening.

The Agricultural Student Council and Alpha Zeta Agricultural Society sponsored the event, which took place on the front lawn of Waters Hall. Steven Briggeman, senior president of Alpha Zeta, said all the agricultural clubs and activities represented at the event make it a good opportunity for new students to become involved.

"It's a chance to show all the new students the different organizations that we have for them to get involved in," he said. "It's also a chance, though, for the returning upperclassmen to meet up again after the summer."

Briggeman said the attendance this year was comparable to last year's attendance, and the main problem the event organizers ran into was obtaining the watermelon.

"Because of the high temperatures this year, there was a poor watermelon crop and we weren't able to get as many watermelons as we usually do," he said.

Jennie Struthers, chairwoman for the Watermelon Feed, encouraged students in attendance to become involved and enjoy the school year.

"We just encourage everyone to go around and meet people," she said. "By getting involved with these organizations, it will help to make your four years here the best you'll ever have."

Margaret Smith, junior in agricultural economics, was at the feed to provide information about Block and Bridle Riding Club.

"We're here to inform students about our meetings and recruit new members," she said.

Workshop aids new students

Phi Theta Kappa honor fraternity helped transfer students feel at home Tuesday night at its transfer-students workshop.

The workshop in the Union Cottonwood Room was presented not only to help transfer students get acquainted with the large campus but also to hit highlights of what it takes to be a successful student.

"Our focus was to create an atmosphere much like the freshmen were given during orientation," Michelle Haupt, assistant director of admissions, said.

"Since transfer students are already familiar with the college process, they need to be informed of the many opportunities that Kansas State offers," Haupt said.

The workshop included activities to get to know other transfer students and proceeded with a question-and-answer period with a panel of Phi Theta Kappa members. Each student received a packet including pamphlets and calendars of helpful information and upcoming events on campus.

The fraternity covered questions on how to enroll, change majors, request an adviser, use KATS and set up their e-mail account. The panel also mentioned the Office of Student Activities and Services, Career and Employment Services and the Degree Audit Report System, a KATS feature that shows your progress toward a specific major.

Katie Bowlin, senior in agricultural education, said new students need time and others to adjust to K-State.

Student's weapon linked to murder

By MELISSA NELSON
The Associated Press

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — A University of Arkansas English professor and a graduate student who recently was dropped from a doctoral program were shot to death in an apparent murder-suicide.

English professor John Locke, 67, and James Easton Kelly, 36, were found dead Monday in Locke's office. People nearby said they heard the men arguing before three shots were fired.

University police Capt. Brad Bruns said a .38-caliber revolver belonging to Kelly was found between the men but it was unclear who shot whom.

"We don't want to say it was one way and it turn out to be a different way. With the location of the gun and the two bodies, it was not obvious at the scene," university police Lt. Gary Crain, said.

Bruns said four empty shell casings were found in the gun, which Kelly bought at a pawn shop five years ago.

Kelly was dismissed from the doctoral program Aug. 21 because he habitually enrolled in and then dropped classes. The university said a committee of six professors voted to drop Kelly from the program. Locke was on the committee but abstained from the vote.

The committee allowed Kelly to continue his studies as a non-degree student.

Kelly had scheduled a meeting with Locke, his adviser, who was reluctant to meet the student in private.

"He said he was going to have it in the department office, not his own office," said Brian Wilkie, a fellow professor. "I asked him if he (Kelly) seemed violent, and he said 'You never know.'"

Drug convictions lead to suspension at CU

BOULDER, Colo. — University of Colorado students will be suspended if convicted of abusing alcohol or drugs three or more times, officials announced Monday.

They said the new policy was not a response to this weekend's riot in downtown Boulder, the fifth since 1997.

"This new use of our established sanctions does not mean a student cannot be suspended for his or her first offense. It just means that after three incidents, no matter how minor, a student will be suspended," said Ron Stump, vice chancellor for student affairs at CU-Boulder.

Last year, 93 students were caught in at least three violations, Stump said.

Stump cited a university research program that found a small number of students cause the majority of the problems. Those students also tended to not do well in class.

Robert Maust, director of A Matter of Degree, said CU students have drinking patterns that are more serious than national averages.

"More students come to CU with established at-risk drinking behaviors than are found at the national level among college-bound students. In addition, many students, once enrolled, follow or adopt a drinking lifestyle that is much more aggressive and dangerous than the national average for college students," Maust said.

Woodstock to be site of art, entertainment

BETHEL, N.Y. — This is the dawning of the age of construction at the 1969 Woodstock concert site.

Gov. George Pataki and developer Alan Gerry appeared at Max Yasgur's farm Tuesday to announce plans for a $40 million performing arts and music center at the festival site. The center, to be completed by 2003, will have covered and lawn seating.

"The original Woodstock concert was an historic event that continues to draw thousands of annual pilgrims looking to recapture a piece of its magic," Pataki said. "Its organizers found what was then, and remains today, the perfect location for entertainment and hospitality."

The center would be the first permanent structure erected on the site 80 miles north of New York City since the famed three days of peace, love and music in August 1969.

Gerry, 71, a lifelong resident of the area who built his television antenna business into one of the largest cable television operations in the nation, bought the 37-acre concert site and surrounding land a few years ago. He created the not-for-profit Gerry Foundation to help develop the site and help the area's ailing economy.

The new center is to have dance, theater and music performances in a 4,000-seat indoor theater, which could partly open to accommodate another 15,000 spectators on the back lawn.

"It's not something for a narrow segment of people," Gerry said. "It's going to be for all the people."

Proposal approved for Garden City Feed Yard

GARDEN CITY, Kan. — Kansas environmental regulators have approved a proposal to more than triple the size of the Garden City Feed Yard, making the cattle feedlot the fourth largest in the state.

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment approved the proposal to enlarge the feedlot's capacity from 28,000 to 88,000 head of cattle after receiving no public comments on the application. The facility would grow to 338 acres.

The application, approved Tuesday, was filed July 26, and the public had 30 days to comment.

A conditional use permit was approved July 16 during a public hearing of the Garden City city commission. The permit is contingent upon the feed yard maintaining its current dust control program, which consists of watering the grounds.

In its permit application, Garden City Feed Yard said the depth of the groundwater would be about 90 feet and that well water would be used.

The expansion makes Garden City Feed Yard the fourth largest in the state by capacity, according to the 2000 Cattle Feedyard Reference Guide.

The largest is the Grant County Feedyard in Ulysses with 112,000-head capacity, followed by Cattle Empire Feedyard in Sublette with a 108,000 capacity and Caprock Industries in Leoti with a 98,000 capacity.

Mayor hopes for more student involvement in city affairs

By JAMIE BARRETT
Kansas State Collegian

Mayor Karen McCulloh has had a busy life.

From attending both the University of Kansas and K-State, moving to Germany and back several times, to her current position as the mayor of Manhattan, McCulloh has kept herself busy.

"All the experiences I have had have been very good for me and for my family," McCulloh said. "All the opportunities I have had help me in my job now."

McCulloh was elected city commissioner in 1997 and served as a county commissioner for four years before that. She now is serving as mayor, which rotates yearly among the commissioners.

McCulloh said she has many responsibilities as mayor, but also has the job of development officer for Hale Library.

"I love working at the library," she said. "My job is basically to raise money for the library and the Friends of the Library, and people I work with are wonderful."

McCulloh said her job as mayor sometimes seems ceremonial to her because she doesn't believe she is more important than any of the city commissioners.

"All of the commissioners are of equal importance," McCulloh said. "Each person has a specific interest that is of great importance to Manhattan."

One of the most important things McCulloh said she has realized as mayor is that Manhattan and K-State have a direct relationship, and that it is important to have students participate in city meetings and decisions.

"When we look at something, we have to look at how it will benefit the university and the city of Manhattan," McCulloh said. "We have students on many of our project boards, and that is a great way to include students in community issues."

McCulloh said that, as mayor, she has had many issues she has wanted to address and has been happy with the results so far.

"One of the main things I wanted to work on as mayor was the housing issue," she said. "We have made great strides and we are continuing to all the time."

All of the success she has had in her time as mayor McCulloh attributes to the city commissioners, whom she works closely with.

"We have had a really good commission," McCulloh said. "We work very well together and that is proven by seeing that almost every major vote we have had to take has been 5-0."

Commissioner Carol Peak said she has noticed many impressive things in the city and its government since McCulloh became been mayor.

"We have had some very controversial things to deal with that evoke emotional feeling," Peak said. "Karen is not afraid to tackle these issues, but always smiles and has a positive attitude in the face of adversity."

McCulloh said she has enjoyed her time as mayor. Even though it has had its ups and downs, it has been a good experience for her thus far, she said.

"I think my favorite part has been making things work for people," McCulloh said. "Some people do not understand how the system works, so if I can put them in contact with someone who can help them I have been successful."

John McCulloh, McCulloh's husband and professor of history at K-State, said that since she became mayor she has provided Manhattan with a balanced point of view and a serious view on the community.

"She has the interests of the people at heart," he said. "She maintains a good climate within the community and the commission."

McCulloh said she values her job because she has been able to grow with it.

"It makes a job much more than just a job if you are energetic and enthusiastic with it," McCulloh said. "It has been something that I have been able to grow with."

Manhattan Mayor Karen McCulloh, who was elected to office in 1997, said she has a serious interest in the relationship between the city of Manhattan and K-State. She said she encourages students to get involved with the city and community issues.

1st virus for Palm computers accidentally released through Internet

By D. IAN HOPPER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Antivirus experts are warning consumers about the first intentionally destructive program for Palm handheld computers: it appears as an update to a Palm program, but instead deletes all programs on the device.

The author of the program says he didn't mean for it to go public and that he's helping antivirus companies detect it.

The program, a type known as a Trojan horse, has been dubbed "Palm.Liberty.A." Liberty is a popular Palm program, made by Gambit Studios, that lets users download and play games made for the Nintendo GameBoy handheld computer.

Liberty is distributed as a shareware program, meaning that users are expected to try the program out and, if they like it, pay for a full-featured version. But as with many shareware programs, hackers have developed crack downloads that allow software pirates to use the full version without payment.

Palm.Liberty.A is being distributed under the name "Crack 1.1" through Internet Relay Chat, a network of chatting channels. When run, it deletes all the programs on the user's Palm device, though it leaves the address book data, calendar and other databases intact.

Antivirus companies said they have not received any infection reports. But it is fairly easy for a hacker to modify the program and re-release it in a more dangerous form, similar to the many versions of the "Love Bug" virus that have come out since the first outbreak.

"It will definitely get attention," said Vincent Weafer, director of Symantec Corp.'s Anti-Virus Research Center in Cupertino, Calif. "I believe we've opened a Pandora's Box on some handheld devices."

Palm.Liberty.A affects Palm handheld computers and the Handspring Visor computers, which use the same operating system. It can be downloaded from a desktop computer or transmitted through the device's infrared communications port. Several virus companies offer software that detects and removes the program.

The person who wrote the program also was one of the developers of Liberty.

"The whole purpose of my research was to investigate anti-cracking, and assist developers stop cracking," said Aaron Ardiri, a Swedish software developer who also teaches at the University of Gavle in Sweden. "It is nothing about being malicious to the hacker."

Ardiri said he created the program to sweep off unwanted programs without harming a user's data, and he gave an early version to several of his friends. He said he decided not to release it because it might cause harm, but he said a friend posted it on an Internet Relay Chat channel without his knowledge.

Opportunities endless during fall semester

Students need to take advantage of the opportunities K-State presents while they can, especially since the majority of these opportunities are free.

Events such as the transfer-student workshop — not to mention committees and clubs galore — can introduce students to others who share similar interests or experiences.

Opportunities offered by Career and Employment Services, such as its Résumé-Building Workshop, are the best chance for students to find resources on campus that will help them critique their resumes and ultimately land jobs.

Students can check out the Web site www.ksu.edu/events to find out how to become involved, including a section that is updated on a daily basis. Some of these activities include a Business Social at 5 p.m. Thursday for incoming business students in the K-State Student Union. At 2:30 p.m. on Sept. 8, there is a Gallery Talk with John Newman in the Union art gallery, and admission is free.

This is the best chance to meet other people and get business contacts for future references, as well as friends.

There is no excuse for low attendance at events like these. If this continues, the variety of events will likely decrease, and that would be costly to students.

Soulless candidates leave voters thinking they will never get ahead

KEN WELLS

Quick quiz: why vote?

It used to be a question borne of youthful angst and ennui (ooo, let's see how many funny-sounding foreign words we can look up today!), but lately it's more a matter of tired futility. I know, with solemn certainty, that come November, my vote for the presidency just doesn't count.

On one level, we're shackled in by the electoral college. It's a winner-take-all system state-by-state; if Al Gore or George W. Bush wins a majority of popular votes in Kansas, they rack up all six of Kansas' electoral votes — (as many as Montana and Alaska combined!). So, if you're a Democrat in a traditional Republican stronghold such as, er, Kansas, your vote only matters in the primaries.

You remember the primaries. Those were the interesting races — ALGOREVPEXE versus former basketball star Bill Bradley, Dubya versus former P.O.W. John McCain. These challengers, love 'em or hate 'em, undeniably had personality — more personality and charisma in their cuticles than either of the primary winners will ever earn or inherit. But that was a long time ago. Any shred of potential in-party democracy lies way outside of our state line.

Okay, let's play "what if." What if ... the Texas governor makes it an actual race in Kansas? Maybe he runs over a nun in Topeka or spends a few days in Abilene clubbing prairie dogs or continues this newfound Quayle-like ability to spewing inane and insipid comments (last week in Des Moines, Bush announced defiantly, "We cannot let terrorists and rogue nations hold this nation hostile or hold our allies hostile." Mmm, stunning.) What if only three people (you included) turn out to vote? What if you actually determined if Bush or Gore won Kansas?

Stupider things have happened. It's the only explanation for why some guy named Rich walked away with a million dollars and some truck driver named Sue didn't get fed to the rats. (I didn't watch the show. I overheard it. But damned if that woman didn't get on every nerve I haven't had surgically removed).

OK. We're all tired of "Survivor" references, I'm sorry. But I'm tired of the Democrat/Republican binary. I'm tired of having my choices made for me in April. I'm tired of corporate candidacy.

But I'm really damn tired of the same people choosing my government as kicked Colleen off the island.

We're not voting for candidates, for personalities anymore (if we ever were). We're voting for platforms decided by millions of lobbying dollars. These aren't the best candidates — these are just the best candidates money can buy. (Not that Bradley, McCain or any of the other primary also-rans were saints, but if nothing else, Gore and Bush simply reek of the establishment, avatars of More of the Same). I want a candidate with at least a glimmer of hope of change. I want an answer to the two-faced demon of American "democracy."

Who does that leave? Pat Buchanan? Please. His candidacy is the death blow to the Reform Party's legitimacy. This is what happens when you form a coalition solely with the agenda "We're not the other two." Ralph Nader? His spunky little campaign finally has some thrust given that both of the conventional candidates look worse animated than the dinosaurs in "Jurassic Park." It'll be interesting to see how the Green Party platform stands up to sincere scrutiny by the general news media if and when it gets some serious attention in the charisma gulf.

And if enough people vote for Nader, the Green Party will be eligible for matching election funds from the government in 2004. I'm not endorsing them per se (again with the foreign phrases, ooh la la), but I'm all about getting more voices heard. The two-party system rots our ideal of democracy, and with corporate investment in politics increasing every year, we've gotta turn this from dialogue to a town hall.

If you're confident enough in the Bush victory in Kansas, give Nader a vote. It's one of the few times one vote actually counts.

Unless you're on a desert island. God, I hate politics. And Sue.

Government regulations necessary for worry-free adult living

RICK WOOTEN

The last time I was at the doctor's office, he asked me if I knew that smoking was harmful to my health.

C. Everett Koop he was not, but he either thought I was the only illiterate, blind, deaf-mute senior at K-State, or that I already knew about the hazards of smoking and chose to do so anyway. I believe the latter to be the case, and I am frustrated with the assumption that the little people need to be saved from themselves and that our government should be the ones to do it. But since this already is the prevailing way of thought, I have come up with several other things our wonderful leaders can do to save us all.

Anything prefaced with the word "big" probably should be banned.

I need not remind anyone of the adverse health effects caused by consumption of Big Macs, Big Kings and Big Ass pizzas. Heart disease is one of the leading causes of death in this country and it would be best for everyone if we ate "Li'l Rice Cakes" and "Small-derriere pizzas." Say goodbye to mayonnaise and double ranch days. Say hello to dog food envy and frequent trips to the bathroom. Thank you, government, for keeping my arteries strong and clear.

Cars apparently should be outlawed as well.

The number of fatalities resulting from car accidents each year is many times more than the number of Marlboro "miles" I have collected. From now on, we all should ride horses. Not only because they are low pollutants and are self-drivers when we are drunkenly getting home, but also because government will lift the ban on genetic testing and develop a fine filly with anti-lock hooves. These new horses also will be super intelligent, taking the plain voice of Mr. Ed and transforming it into the fantastic stereo bass sound of DMX. Police officers will turn in their Crown Vics for buckets and shovels. When this plan is implemented, I will be ahead of everyone by dating a member of the new equestrian team. Thank you, government, for eliminating any need for faulty Firestone tires.

Too many people die each year in the water.

Accidental drowning can be prevented by banning the use of water to bathe in, swim in, drink or pour on oneself while walking from Umberger Hall to Nichols Hall on a mild 105-degree day.

By pulling in favors from friends in high places, Jon Wefald will gain an exception to national water rules and K-State will be allowed to water all of its sidewalks as long as students might be walking on them.

Alcohol makers are saved by the breakthrough invention of "The Double Bourbon Pill." Thank you, government, for saving me $20 a year on Herbal Essence shampoo.

Finally, we all would be better off if we were forced to be at home and in bed at 2:15 a.m. each night.

Sure, Mini's Diner might go out of business and your horse might not get home as fast as others, but wouldn't it be worth it knowing that the same Big Brother that doubles as a member of the local draft board is there each night to tuck you in like the mother you already have? Thank you, government, for reminding me to brush my teeth after too many double bourbon pills.

In conclusion, our lives would be a whole lot safer, although a bit bumpier and stinkier, with government in complete control. After all, everybody knows that government has never made any mistakes before, because if they had, they would have told us already. Freedom, smeedom. You can't spell government without Gore.

State attorney general speaks regarding women's equality

By SHANNON MARSHALL
Kansas State Collegian

Joseph Smith wanted a speaker for National Women's Equality Week who would relate well to women and the issues they face today.

Carla Stovall was the first person who came to mind.

"The issues she represents are my main concern, and I admire her very much for those," said Smith, chairperson for National Women's Equality Week.

Stovall spoke at the Federal Grain Marketing Production Research Center on Tuesday.

EVAN SEMON/Collegian

Carla Stovall, Kansas' attorney general, was the keynote speaker Tuesday for National Women's Equality Week at the Federal Grain Marketing Production Research Center.

Stovall is the first female Attorney General to be elected in Kansas. Stovall said that as a young adult, she never dreamed she would rise to the position she occupies today.

"I didn't think I was smart enough to go to college," she said.

When she decided to attend Pittsburg State University in Pittsburg, Kan., Stovall said she didn't receive a great deal of encouragement from home.

"When I told my dad I wanted to go to college he told me, 'I have never heard you talk about anything that is such a waste of time and money,'" she said.

After graduating from Pitt State, she earned her law degree from the University of Kansas.

During her time as attorney general, she has advocated a number of causes, especially those pertaining to children.

"I think that in Kansas, we're in a place where we can do lots of really good things for children, and that, in my view, ought to be the legacy we want to leave for generations to come," Stovall said.

Stovall's possible career highlight came in December 1996 when she was asked to argue before the United States Supreme Court concerning the Sexual Predator Law. The law originated in the state of Washington, but Kansas was the first state in which the law was constitutionally challenged.

"It was an intimidating process," Stovall said. "I wanted to argue with the thought of losing that argument — would it affect me politically, would I be held accountable for having lost that case, would I be able to stand up to their questioning — all those issues made me wonder."

Stovall said it all came down to the fact that if she turned down the chance to argue for the law, she would regret it forever.

"To let that opportunity pass me by, especially for a law that I cared so much about, was something I decided I couldn't do," she said. "And the good news for me personally was that we won in the end."

The law, which now is in effect in 18 states across the nation, mandates that when a person is in prison for a sex crime, before being released for parole he or she must be evaluated by psychiatrists. Margo Caley, food technologist at the Grain Marketing Production Center, said Stovall inspires her.

"I'm just really pleased that she would take the time to come speak here," she said. "I really like the causes she works for, and I think she's a wonderful person."

Tires lacked safety feature

■ Bridgestone/Firestone under renewed scrutiny over Venezuelan findings.

By TOM SHARP
The Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Some Bridgestone/Firestone Inc. tires supplied to Ford Motor Co. in Venezuela didn't have a nylon layer even though they had been labeled as having that safety feature, the tire maker said.

A Ford spokesman Tuesday disputed part of the tire company's explanation, saying the automaker had asked for the safety feature years earlier than Bridgestone/Firestone started producing it.

Venezuelan authorities are investigating the tires in connection with 62 accidents and are expected to submit a report to the country's attorney general that could lead to fines or criminal prosecution against the tire maker and Ford.

Bridgestone/Firestone said the mistake has been corrected, and the company has no plans to recall tires made in Venezuela, even though Ford said it is pushing for one. However, Venezuelan dealers were asked Thursday to return their inventories of mislabeled tires to the company, Bridgestone/Firestone spokeswoman Christine Karbowiak said.

Company spokesman Ken Fields said Ford asked for a layer of nylon between the steel belts and tread of two types of Wilderness AT tires in January 1999.

Firestone's Venezuela plant began producing those modified tires six months later, Fields said. Before that modification went into effect, however, Firestone "inadvertently began marking tires without a cap ply (nylon layer) as tires that had a cap ply," Fields said.

But Ford spokesman Mike Vaughn on Tuesday disagreed with Fields' account. Vaughn said Ford had asked for the nylon-reinforced tires in 1996, when it first started selling Explorers in Venezuela.

Vaughn said he didn't know why Firestone said Ford did not specify the nylon layer until 1999. Fields could not be immediately reached for comment.

On Monday, Fields could not say how long the tires were mismarked or how many mismarked tires were delivered.

"This mismarking situation is totally unrelated to the U.S. recall," Karbowiak said. "None of the mismarked tires were made in the United States or exported to the United States."

Ford said the nylon layer was needed to accommodate hotter, more humid weather and more demanding driving conditions in Venezuela, Ecuador and Colombia.

Some 6.5 million Firestone ATX, ATX II and Wilderness AT tires were recalled in the United States after the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration began investigating reports of at least 62 deaths and more than 100 injuries in crashes that could be connected to the 15-inch tires.

The tires were standard equipment on Ford trucks and sport utility vehicles, especially the Explorer, and primarily were made in Decatur, Ill.

The tire maker's parent company, Bridgestone Corp. of Japan, said Tuesday it had boosted production in Japan by 650,000 tires to help fill the need for replacement tires in the United States.

Bridgestone also said it had chartered a jumbo jet to ship those tires to the United States beginning next Monday.

It already has shipped some 2,000 Japanese-made tires to the United States on regularly scheduled flights.

Two Commerce Committee subcommittees will have a joint hearing Sept. 6 into the case, with Rep. Billy Tauzin, R-La., presiding.

Ford, Firestone and safety experts will be called to testify, Tauzin spokesman Ken Johnson said.

"We are getting the cooperation of the two companies, which is good. But they (congressional investigators) have basically confirmed what the news reports have told us — that the recall is going awfully spottily," Tauzin said Tuesday on CBS' "The Early Show."

He said the recall was being handled "terribly. ... Three more people got killed just a weekend ago while the recall is going on. ... It's been a terrible mess, and frankly, we've got to find out why."

Woman of the Year

Former Wildcat volleyball sensation awarded Kansas 2000 NCAA honors

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

K-State always has known Dawn Cady was special. Now it's official.

The former Wildcat volleyball standout has been selected as the 2000 NCAA Woman of the Year for the state of Kansas. Cady was one of 51 state winners chosen by the NCAA for the honor, all of whom are eligible for the NCAA Woman of the Year award.

The state winners will be narrowed to 10 finalists in mid-September.

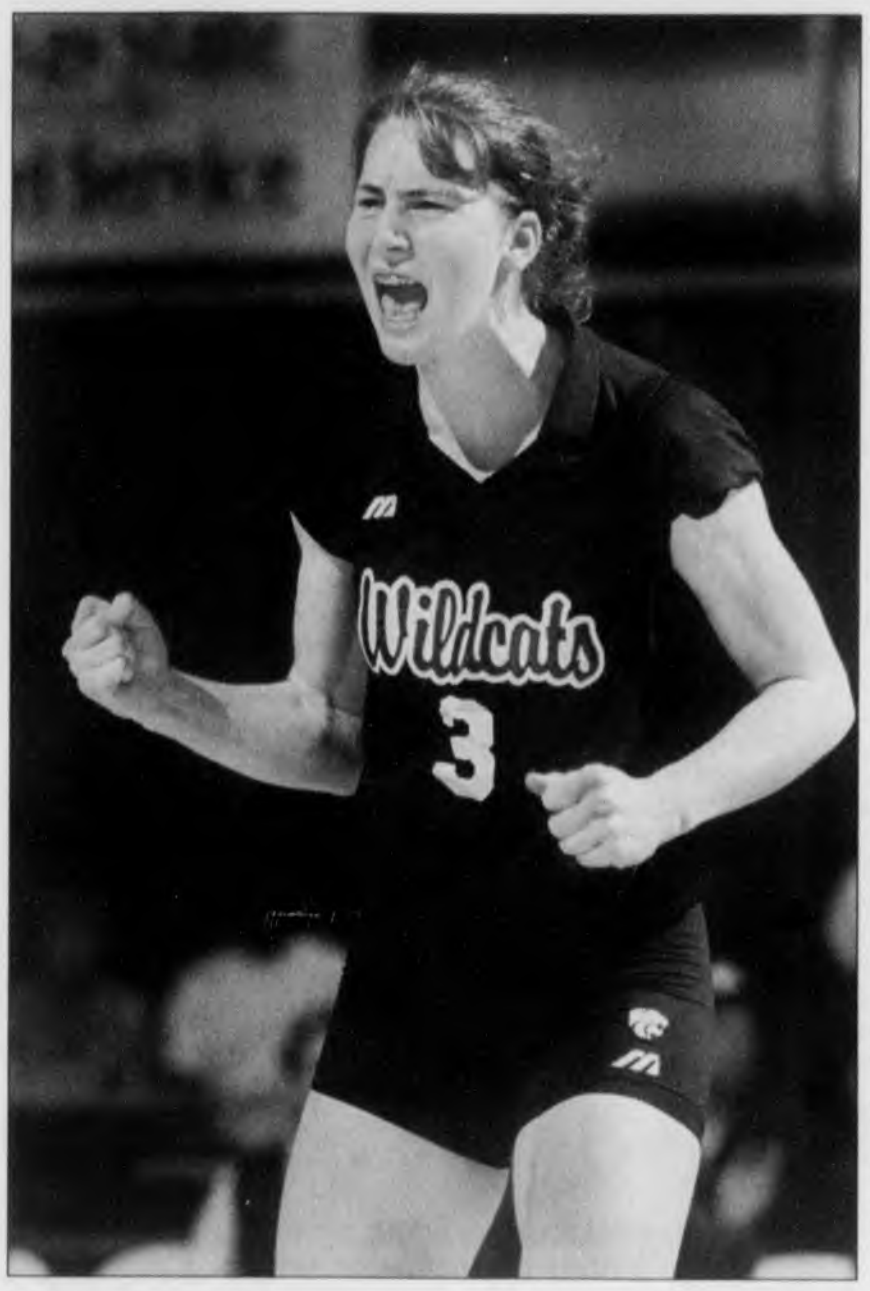
"I think it's huge. I think it's big for Kansas State volleyball," K-State head coach Jim McLaughlin said. "She's the Kansas Woman of the Year. But in my opinion, she's always been that."

Cady left a lasting impression on the Wildcat record books while at K-State. She became just the fourth player in K-State history to collect 1,000 kills and 1,000 digs in a career and finished second in the record books in kills, attacks and digs.

Cady cannot merely be defined by her athletic achievements, McLaughlin said.

"She was also the only All-Big 12, All-Academic player four years in a row," McLaughlin said. "Now, people don't know that, and I hope this committee knows that. Because not only was she this university's first All-American, which is hard, but then she also maintains the standard in the classroom."

"She's the Kansas Woman of the Year. But in my opinion, she's always been that."



Jim McLaughlin, head coach

As a result of her volleyball prowess, Cady has received more national attention than just the Kansas Woman of the Year award. Last year, Cady was unanimously voted to the first team All-Big 12 Conference Volleyball team and was named American Volleyball Coaches Association second team All-American.

Even though she has played her last game at K-State, Cady is not finished with volleyball. She has considered playing for a professional team or trying out for the U.S. National Team.

Cady said she might end up staying at K-State.

"I might stay here and help with the team," Cady said. " I want to keep athletics a part of my life. It made my time here an awesome experience. My teammates, my coaches and the community here just made it so good. It's hard to leave."

Dawn Cady celebrates a point for the Wildcats last season during their Nov. 10 match against the Texas Longhorns. K-State dominated Texas in a three-game victory, 15-10, 15-4 and 15-9.

K-State forward hones skills, learns culture while abroad

By NICK BRATKOVIC
Kansas State Collegian

K-State forward Quentin Buchanan did what the rest of his K-State basketball teammates did this summer.

The sophomore guard stayed in Manhattan, took some classes, worked out and found a job.

Then, at the end of the summer, things got a little more interesting when he took a 10-day trip to Europe as a member of the Big 12 All-Stars basketball team.

The trip allowed him to do a variety of things: eat foreign cuisine, study a foreign language, see the sights and play a little basketball.

Buchanan said that while basketball was his chief concern on the trip, he took more away from the experience than just playing the games. It was an adventure, he said, one filled with a variety of experiences.

"The first night, I ate the foods there and I threw up, so all I ate on the trip since that night was pizza and McDonald's for nine days," Buchanan said.

"So, I didn't eat a lot of the food. It was nasty to me."

The trip also was a chance for Buchanan to see a different part of the world.

Buchanan, who is from Junction City, said he did a little bit of sightseeing along the way.

"We went to some Mozart Opera Houses and the oldest church there," Buchanan said.

"I wasn't really that interested in the sightseeing, but I went anyway. I was just more interested in playing basketball."

Europe also posed the challenge of translation and learning to speak and interpret a new language, at least well enough to communicate, Buchanan said.

"Most everybody spoke German, then you had a few people over there who knew a little bit of English, but it was kind of hard," Buchanan said.

However, on the court, the forward said it basically was the same game, although he said he thought the officiating tended to be slanted.

He also said the European teams, which featured some players in their late 30s, were adept at working officials.

"The players over there were more mature, but the skill level was about even," Buchanan said.

Against the different European teams, Buchanan averaged four points per game, helping the Big 12 All Stars to a 5-1 record. The highlight of the tour for Buchanan came against the Kapfenberg Bears B.C., a contest in which he scored a tournament high 10 points.

"It was fun to play with the same guys you played with during the Big 12 Conference — it was a real good experience," Buchanan said.

"I learned about their style of game, and I can take that to the court when we play them."

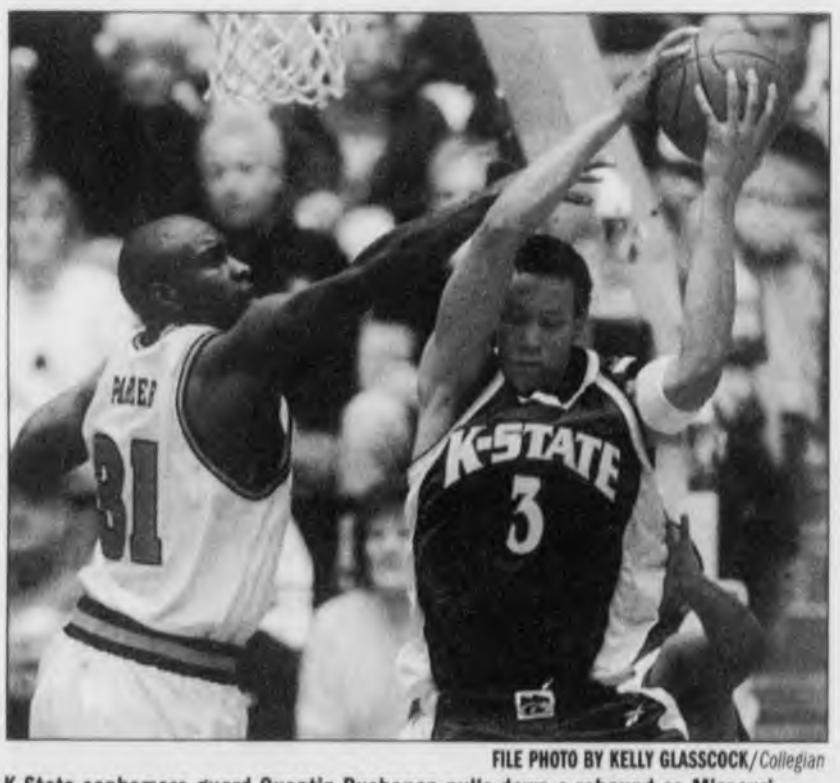
K-State head coach Jim Wooldridge said the competition will speed up Buchanan's development.

"I was very glad to have Quentin play on that All-Star team and to represent K-State," Wooldridge said.

Now, with the excursion behind him and the regular season approaching, Buchanan said he is working to improve his basketball skills.

"I went over there, and now I am just trying to vary my game and work on the things I need to work on," Buchanan said.

For Buchanan, it's a different type of off-season. He participates in Wooldridge's training program. Buchanan said there is an increased emphasis on lifting, and that the players don't seem to mind the extra work.



"Every day we go out and lift and play — nobody ever says 'I'm tired' — they are just ready to go," Buchanan said.

With the new recruits now on campus, Buchanan also is serving as friend and leader to the new players on the roster, guard Richie Terry said.

"It has been fun hanging around them and playing with Quentin," Terry said.

Buchanan has goals of helping K-State eliminate memories of last season and, while not making guarantees, he is looking for improvement.

"We are going to do some things, you know. We have got everybody working hard and if you work hard, it is going to pay off if we keep it going," he said.

NFL provides variety of stories, offers element of surprise for fans

RICH SMITH

Hide the women and children. Bar the doors. Pray for deliverance. The National Football League is back in season. May God have mercy on us all.

Who knows what to make of the NFL today? It can produce both the pixie dust-saturated Kurt Warner story, and a higher murder rate than the Miami metro area.

It is an alternately disturbing and fascinating blend of greed, heroism, felonies, star power, shameless self-promotion, parity, drama and egocentrism. With every silver lining there seems to be a rust-colored one trailing close behind.

It's like a giant, Astroturf-covered roulette wheel — you simply never know what you're going to get.

So it goes with the upcoming season as well. With the league in a greater state of flux than Nasdaq, no one has the faintest clue of what's going to happen. Not you, not Paul Zimmerman, not Peter King, not Chris Mortensen, not Cleo the $1.95 a minute psychic.

And not me. Especially not me. I've picked the Chiefs to make the playoffs the past two years — that makes me more delusional than everyone else.

But in a league where Dennis Miller and Paul Maguire can be considered respected authorities and Steve Bono can have a long and fruitful career, sometimes the completely illogical makes the clearest sense. That gives me some small confidence in my half-baked prophecies.

So here, concocted with the aid of four hours' sleep and Magic Eight Ball, here are my breakdowns of three of the top contenders for the Lombardi Trophy this year — and three potential sleepers. But don't be surprised if something completely screwy upsets it all. It's been known to happen.

Contenders:

Washington Redskins

The plus: Money can't buy love, but Daniel Snyder is finding it does quite nicely for everything else. The 'Skins' new owner brought in future Hall of Famers Deion Sanders and Bruce Smith, veterans Jeff George and Mark Carrier and young studs LaVar Arrington and Chris Samuels to augment his team.

Failing that, Snyder probably will use profits from his $9 training camp cover charge to clone Don Hutson and outfit Jim Brown with a pair of "Six Million Dollar Man"-style bionic legs.

If that still doesn't get him a Super Bowl ring, the man probably can afford nukes. Where there's a Visa Platinum card, there's a way.

The minus: Snyder sure seems to understand math, but it remains to be seen whether his superteam can master chemistry. If Smith, Sanders and George debated on the McLaughlin Group, the studio would be reduced to kindling in minutes.

Big egos, high expectations and a potential quarterback controversy clashing together could bring it all crashing down.

Odds: 2-1

Tampa Bay Buccaneers

The plus: They have good special teams, a fantastic inside/outside running back tandem in Mike Alstott and Warrick Dunn, and a defense that's more rigid than Al Gore. The Bucs easily might have been in the Super Bowl last year, except for...

The minus: ...the passing game. Yeah, the team won with rookie Shaun King at the helm last year, but he didn't exactly blow people away. Miller attempts more Rosencrantz and Guildenstern jokes per game than King did passes.

More will be demanded of the passing game for the Bucs to become Super Bowl-worthy. To help their impotent air attack, the Bucs traded for Pro Bowl wideout Keyshawn Johnson and hired Tennessee offensive coordinator Les Steckel.

Problem solved? Maybe, maybe not. Steckel had on paper, at least an excellent quarterback and receivers with the Titans, but tight end Frank Wycheck was the only person he made a star in their passing game. Johnson is a tremendous talent, but he can't throw the ball to himself. It all hinges on whether King can take care of that.

Odds: 4-1

Indianapolis Colts

The plus: Not since the Nickelodeon/Toys 'R' Us "Toy Run" contests of my youth have I seen someone load up on goodies as fast as Colts general manager Jim Polian has.

In a few short years, Indy has accumulated the three best young players in the league in quarterback Peyton Manning, running back Edgerrin James and wideout Marvin Harrison. And it hasn't even reached its prime yet. Offensively, this could be a Cowboys-like dynasty.

The minus: Name a player on the Colts' defense. I dare you. Heck, I'll buy you a Coke if you can.

They drafted relentless linebacker Rob Morris, but who knows whether Indy's defense can shut down the big boys when it really counts?

Odds: 3.5-1

Underdogs with bite:

Chicago Bears: Potent, unorthodox offense should make them tough to stop.

Odds: 12-1

New Orleans Saints: Vastly improved talent. Now if only they could get Ricky Williams' brain back from the Martians...

Odds: 16-1

Baltimore Ravens: Talent on both sides of the ball and, above all, a very weak division. Sometimes it's better to be lucky than good. Especially these days.

Odds: 10-1

Wichita State University professor to perform as Western artist at Beach Museum of Art

COURTESY PHOTO

By ALLISON RUSHTON
Kansas State Collegian

Load up the wagon and head to the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art to travel back to the Wild West.

Phillip Thomas, professor of history at Wichita State University, will give a performance as frontier artist Charles M. Russell at the Beach Museum on Thursday night.

Art and history buffs already might be familiar with Russell, an American artist well-known for his depictions of the West during the late 1880s. His paintings and sculptures embody the Wild West with images of cowboys, bison and American Indians.

Frontier art exhibit

The performance is 7 p.m. Thursday and admission is free. The art exhibit runs through Sept. 3.

"One of the things that makes Charlie Russell unique is that he was one of the first artists who painted the West to really live there as well," Thomas said. "He moved to Montana just before he turned 16 and stayed until his death in 1926. He loved everything about the West."

Russell also wanted to help preserve the West from the rapidly changing times. His work shows sympathy both to the rugged cowboy and to the plight of the American Indian.

Thomas said that, during his performance, he will take on the persona of Russell, including the artist's trademark humor. Thomas said his portrayal of the artist will include a review of Russell's life, his relationship and understanding of the West and a display of several canvases of work.

Deborah Pomeroy, resource center coordinator for the Kansas Humanities Council, said Thomas won't portray the artist for the entire performance.

"Phillip Thomas will emerge as the scholar," Pomeroy said. "This will give the audience the opportunity to ask questions that Phillip as the artist couldn't answer, but Phillip the scholar could."

Kathrine Schlageck, education and public supervisor of the Beach art museum, said the performance complements the current museum exhibit on display, "Dear Friends: Views of the American West from the Collection of R. D. and Joan Dale Hubbard."

The exhibit includes the art of many frontier artists and features 25 works, both sculptures and paintings, by Russell. The pieces are from a private collection, Schlageck said.

"This is kind of a neat exhibition," she said. "The paintings are ones you'd never see anywhere else because they are not normally loaned to the museum."

She said the Thomas performance is part of the Arts Above the Arch series that is designated to help enhance current exhibits at the museum.

"We try to bring in lectures, performances and workshops that bring an added dimension to the exhibits," Schlageck said.

Dance, play, musical productions provide students alternative entertainment options

By COLLEEN FOOTE
Kansas State Collegian

From Shakespeare to "WinterDance 2000," K-State students have many reasons to turn off the television and head to the theater to see their classmates, peers and friends in several student productions.

The K-State Department of Speech Communication, Theatre and Dance will perform the William Shakespeare play, "Two Gentlemen of Verona." The story of two men whose quests for love go awry is this year's Nichols Theatre season opener.

"This is one of Shakespeare's best plays," Jody Bell, freshman in theater and dance, said. "This play shouldn't be missed."

"A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum," a musical comedy based on the plays of Platus, is described as silly, sexy, funny and farcical, and should attract students with its laid-back theme, director Charlotte MacFarland said.

"This musical is hilarious and totally politically incorrect," MacFarland said. "It's like one big toga party."

Performances in the Purple Masque Theatre this season will include "Daughters," a comic drama about four generations of Italian-American women dealing with crisis.

The dance program will present its annual dance showcase "WinterDance 2000," which incorporates student, alumni and professionally choreographed dance.

"This year's WinterDance will be different from previous years because it will incorporate more student choreography," said Marcie Mamura, junior in theater and dance. "This is a really exciting artistic collaboration of music and visual art."

A full list of performances will provide something for every theater buff, Bell said.

"K-State has a wonderful selection of theater productions this semester," he said. "I hope students take the time to attend some of these performances."

Catbacker club to be host to pregame tailgate party

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

K-State fans are invited to attend the annual Catbacker Tailgate party Saturday, Sept. 2, prior to the Wildcats' home opener with Louisiana Tech.

Festivities for Catbacker and Fort Riley Day begin at 2 p.m. in Cat Town, located in the south end of the parking lot west of KSU Stadium, and come to a close at 5 p.m.

Kickoff against Louisiana Tech is set for 6:10 p.m.

The tailgate party, an annual event for the Wildcats' home opener, features a live band, games and activities for children, and a prize drawing.

Southwind, a local country western band, will perform at the event, and prizes will include an all expenses paid trip to the K-State-Colorado football game, Sept. 30, in Boulder, Colo., as well as a three-day trip to Las Vegas.

TICKET INFO
For ticket information on the tailgate party, contact a local Catbacker Club or call Diana Philippi in the K-State Development Office at 532-7932. Cost is $10 in advance or $15 on game day.

Wildcat fans aren't required to have a Catbacker Club membership to take part in the festivities, so all are welcome to attend.

much smaller community college, it took me a while to figure out when and where things were going on," Bowlin said.

"The transfer workshop is a great way to get your foot in the door as a first semester student."

Many transfer students agreed that the size of the campus was their largest battle at K-State.

The difference in student population increased for those coming from community colleges.

Jessica Neely, junior in biology, agreed that her transition from Coffeyville Community College was a big change in both population and environment.

"It will take me more time to adapt to the size and difficulty level of my classes more than anything," Neely said.

"I can already tell that it won't be as easy to have one-on-one time with my professors."

As students learned more about the university, they interacted with one another to meet new people in their same position.

Wrapping up the workshop with refreshments and discussion, the panel answered any final questions that students had.

"I believe we were successful in achieving our two goals for the workshop, which was to enlighten students of K-State's possibilities and introduce them to other transfer students," Haupt said.

HEAT WAVE

said he agrees that the changes are their only option.

"I know it is bad to water in the heat of the day, but we have no choice," he said.

"I also think that some students enjoy the sprinklers going because it allows for them to cool down on their way to class."

Erin Thompson, sophomore in mass communications, uses the sprinklers as a way to beat the heat.

"I usually try and walk through the sprinklers on the way to class because it gives me a chance to refresh before the next class," she said. "It is really a way to cool off."

Other students are having trouble even getting to class because of the weather.

"I dread going to class because I know I am going to have to walk in the heat to get there and then turn around and walk back home in the hot weather," Erin Tysinger, sophomore in apparel design, said. "Every morning I wonder if it's worth battling the heat."

Several faculty and student body members were scheduled to speak at the event. In addition to Briggeman, other speakers included Jake Worcester, student body president; Jill Casten, president of the Agricultural Student Council and Larry Erpelding, associate dean of the College of Agriculture.

Students were not the only attendees of the event. Linda Martin, associate professor of animal sciences and industries, was among the faculty members present.

"I think it's a great opportunity for upperclassmen to visit with people in the field in which they're interested. It's also a good chance for them to mentor and offer words of encouragement to incoming students," she said. "I think lots of students don't realize how many opportunities are available to them."

Travis Hummel, junior in landscape design, added another activity to his résumé while at the feed.

"I joined the Horticulture Club tonight," he said. "This is my third year up here, but I still came out to meet people and get involved."

At least one student had reasons other than becoming involved to attend the event.

"I came out here to meet the guys," Jami Vacon, freshman in agricultural business, said.

Student activities center to cost $5 million

By BRYAN SCRIBNER
Kansas State Collegian

Extending the K-State Student Union about 60 feet could cost $5 million.

The addition would house a three-floor student activities center on the Union's east side.

The proposed project has not yet been approved by the student body. Human Ecology Sen. Ryan Walker said it will be voted on in November.

Members of the Student Governing Association are researching how the center would be funded. Walker, Privilege Fee Committee chair, said it could increase student privilege fees.

Increasing the fee is one option the committee will discuss when it meets in late September. Walker said it also will investigate private funding.

"I can assure you that we're working our best to keep it as minimal as possible," Walker said. "The meetings we've had have been pretty promising."

An addition, the fee will not necessarily mean the current charge will be affected, Student Body President Jake Worcester said. The center would cost each student as much as $9, but if outside funding or a decrease in the current fee is accomplished, Worcester said there could be no change.

"We're trying to find creative ways to fund the center," he said. "Students are going to bear some of the cost, but we're trying to keep that as low as possible."

Privilege fees fund student services such as Hale Library, Lafene Health Center and the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Walker said students enrolled in at least 12 hours were charged $257 in fees this semester.

"We're one of the only universities that has control of its funding," he said.

Construction of the center would start next fall if the proposal is accepted in November. Walker said it would be completed within two years.

The new area would feature 120 cubicle spaces for student organizations. Organizations such as Greek Affairs, Union Governing Board, SGA and four to five Alpha Tau Omega fraternity received the top award for its Delta Theta chapter for the third year in a row this summer.

"We don't do the things that we do for the awards. That comes in second," said Chad Russell, senior in management information systems and marketing and Delta Theta chapter president. "We do it for the good that it does."

Along with being the top chapter, ATO also won the True Merit, Anderson Gold Communication and Excellence in Scholarship awards as well as the honorable-mention award for Good Samaritan Community Awareness.

Through scholastics, intramural sports, campus leadership and community service, the fraternity won what it had strived for — the national Rock Chapter Award.

"It was definitely a great honor for our chapter," said Brian Fisher, senior in chemical engineering and Sigma Nu president. "In the last few years, we've made some good improvements. It just reinforces

With careful precision, Matt Williams applies the traditional bull-fighter makeup before the Manhattan Open Rodeo on Wednesday night in CiCo Park. In addition to a painted face, he wore brightly colored clothes to attract the animals. BELOW: Casey Pearson, 5, of Manhattan, ties her horse, Red, to the trailer before the rodeo Wednesday night. Pearson has been riding by herself since she was 3. She competed in youth barrel racing, and this week's Open Rodeo in CiCo Park is her second competition.

Side-splitting entertainment

■ Manhattan rodeo site of excitement while cowboys, cowgirls compete for prizes.

By APRIL MIDDLETON
Kansas State Collegian

Casey Pearson has been riding horses for about two years — almost half her life.

At age 5, she competed in barrel racing for the second time of her life. Pearson, of Junction City, was one of several contestants who competed Wednesday night at the Manhattan Open Rodeo in CiCo Park's Wells Arena.

"We've always went to rodeos. She thought it looked fun and wanted to give it a try," Suzan Pearson, Casey's mom, said. "Right now it's something that's just a lot of fun for her."

For most rodeo competitors, the love for rodeo was spurred at a young age.

Brock Baker, senior in animal sciences and industry and member of the K-State Rodeo Team, grew up on horses. He said when he was younger it was a hobby, but turned to a competition as he got older.

"I enjoy competing and meeting lots of people," Baker said. "More than anything though, I always hope I'll do well."

Baker said although fun might have spurred the interest, competition is what keeps him active in the rodeo circuit.

"Rodeo is a lot of fun, but it's the competition that makes it fun," Baker said.

Jim Roberts, rodeo promoter, said he expected a good show. He circled the arena before the rodeo began, as contestants and entertainers prepared for the first of a two-evening event.

Clowns painted on their best faces. Riders straightened their hats and mounted their horses. The audience's voices hummed in the background.

Local rodeo announcer, Scott Grover, quieted the audience by guaranteeing them a show with great competitors and side-splitting entertainment.

"Yeah," Roberts said. "I think it will be a good night. I believe we are ready to put on quite a show."

Steve Frazier, K-State rodeo coach, said to love rodeos is to enjoy every aspect of it. He said there is a lot more to the life than cowboys and livestock.

K-State coach Bill Snyder, his football team and thousands of fans will be excited and ready to go. The band will be playing, and the Classy Cats will be leading cheers.

And not a single down will be played.

The annual Purple Power Play on Poyntz pep rally will be taking place today and Friday along Poyntz Avenue near the Manhattan Town Center to kick off the Wildcat football season.

Ashley Shaneyfelt, senior in business, said she attended the 1999 pep rally and plans on going again this year.

"It's a great way to get pumped up for the football season," she said.

Students mistaking the pep rally as only a family atmosphere should take a look at the activities planned for the rally.

"It's a family event, yet we strive to make it have something for everyone," said Randy Crow, marketing director for Manhattan Town Center Mall.

Sponsored by the Manhattan Town Center and other area businesses, the Purple Power Play will offer concerts, fireworks, games and an inflatable carnival in addition to the pep rally.

Thursday night will feature Sharkey's Little Groove Box, Ruskabank and the Dave Stephens Swing Band, along with the pep rally including the K-State Marching Band, cheerleaders, Classy Cats, Willie the Wildcat, Snyder and members of the Wildcat football team. Lambda Chi Alpha's philanthropy Watermelon Bust also is scheduled for Thursday evening.

"If we were to designate anything student night, it would be Thursday night," Crow said.

Friday night will include a martial

Government searches for money to fight fires

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The federal cost of fighting wildfires across the West soon will exceed $1 billion, and Congress is likely to dip into the treasury again this year to pay the final tab, federal officials said Wednesday.

So far, the federal government has tallied at least $626 million in costs to battle scores of fires from Montana to New Mexico, spending as much as $18 million a day, according to the National Interagency Fire Center, which is coordinating the firefighting effort.

But several senior administration officials — after an internal review of the worst outbreak of wildfires in half a century — said it has become clear the firefighting costs will exceed $1 billion before long.

"Actual costs will be right at about a billion dollars," said Hank Kashdan, budget director for the U.S. Forest Service.

Officials at the fire control center said their running tally of $626 million is conservative and might understate overall costs because it focuses only on direct firefighting and does not include tens of millions of dollars spent this year on preparedness and training and other fire activities.

"A lot of the bills won't come in until after the fire season is over," said Lorraine Buck, a spokeswoman for the interagency group that has set up headquarters in Boise, Idaho.

The U.S. Forest Service and the Interior Department already have spent just over $1 billion this year on all of their fire programs — direct firefighting and preparedness — with another month of the fire season remaining.

"We're depleting all available reserves. ... We're going to be looking at fire suppression costs far in excess of what we have available," Kashdan said.

Just before leaving for its summer recess, Congress came up with an additional $350 million for fighting the wildfires, bringing the total amount budgeted for direct firefighting to $836 million this year.

While that is expected to fall short of what will be needed, officials emphasized the money will be found.

Philip Morris to support global laws on smoking

NEW YORK — Philip Morris, the world's biggest tobacco company, is telling the World Health Organization that it could support sensible global regulations on smoking and would like to have a broader role developing them.

The company, which makes Marlboro and other cigarette brands, told the U.N. health agency that while it supports measures to keep youngsters from smoking, the regulations should preserve the right of adults to smoke and treat tobacco companies equally.

Philip Morris outlined its position in a statement submitted in advance of the health agency's October hearings in Geneva to deal with curbing tobacco use and reducing the number of deaths from smoking worldwide.

The company said it intended to appear at the public hearings, but said it would like to be allowed more involvement than the prescribed five-minute presentation and the five-page written statement. It said it would like to be invited to the working sessions and be consulted regarding the treaty.

WHO hopes its member governments can negotiate a global treaty on tobacco control by May 2003.

New York-based Philip Morris appeared to be taking a more conciliatory approach to the process than British American Tobacco had earlier this week when it described the agency's global proposals as fundamentally flawed.

British American Tobacco, based in London, is the world's second biggest tobacco company with brands such as Kool and Lucky Strike.

Thursday's deadline for comments on tobacco regulation comes only a few weeks after the WHO accused big tobacco companies of waging a covert campaign well into the 1990s to subvert its efforts to reduce smoking.

Philip Morris, which along with BAT was named in the report, said while it had opposed the WHO in the past, inferences of improper influence are not accurate.

Pop-culture icons to face scrutiny

■ Midnite Madness offers everyone chances to participate in, watch student-written plays.

By APRIL BLACKMON
Kansas State Collegian

Pop-culture icons — namely boy bands — will be the subject of ridicule, embarrassment, humiliation, admiration and anything else playwrights choose to have them do.

Audiences and potential actors will have the chance to bring these characters to life, enjoy their presence and mock their fame.

At 11:30 tonight in the Purple Masque Theatre, the third season of monthly Midnite Madness showcases will begin.

"I encourage you all to attend," host Chris Piatt, senior in theater, said. "It's very exciting, and you'll have a great time."

Midnite Madness, started by Charlotte MacFarland, professor of speech communication, theatre and Dance, is a chance for students to showcase their talents in a relaxing, entertaining environment.

"Midnite Madness was an idea we started to give people a chance to show their talents," she said. "It's now become a monthly thing. I had no idea it would get this big."

Students interested in writing mini-plays are invited to write three to five page scripts for any or all of the showcases. The scripts must include a reference to the month's theme, MacFarland said.

The scripts are randomly placed on stage, and audience volunteers are asked to read them.

"Any student is welcome to write and/or read the plays, and everyone is welcome to attend," she said. "It's a great deal of fun, and we get a bunch of exciting pieces."

Playwrights' identities remain anonymous, and the scripts are not censored, helping to maintain a positive, creative and entertaining atmosphere, said guest co-host Mindy Hines, senior in applied music.

"Everybody's extremely encouraging," she said. "Midnite Madness gives us a chance to be crazy together and make fun of something together."

Themes for Midnite Madness have ranged from the game "Clue" to obscenities.

Playwrights have written a variety of pieces, including dramas, comedies, play and movie spoofs and even mad-libs filled in with audience selections.

While this month's theme is boy bands, Piatt said incorporating female roles into the scripts is important.

"A little feminist action would be greatly appreciated," he said.

Piatt said it is vital for all K-State students to know they are welcome — and invited — to attend.

"When you come, bring your dorm floor, your boyfriend or girlfriend, your physics class. Bring everyone you know," he said. "I promise you it'll be a party."

Junior volunteers as child advocate

By NANCY FOSTER
Kansas State Collegian

Michelle Roddy came to college not knowing that she later would become involved in a program that would change her life.

She enrolled in classes, moved to Manhattan and joined a sorority. Roddy, junior in speech, did the college thing just like everyone else, until she learned about a volunteer program in need of court-appointed special advocates. Interested in helping children, she volunteered.

The CASA program pairs volunteers with children placed in the court system for one reason or another — usually for abuse or neglect, Roddy said. The question in court becomes where should the child be placed — in foster care, a group home, back with the parents or put up for adoption.

To help answer this question, CASAs spend time with the children to gain insight as to how they feel about the situation, and with whom they would like to live.

"We are the eyes and the ears of the court," Roddy said. "The judge really doesn't have much time to look over the case. He gets maybe 15 minutes to look over it, so we take the time to talk to social workers, the SRS, school officials, and parents and relatives to learn more about it. Most importantly, we get to know the child."

After 30 hours of training, she was ready to take on her first case — two girls, ages 11 and 14.

"When I initially met them, they were turned off to the idea of hanging out with me," Roddy said. "Then I found out they were acting that same way toward the person they were living with, so I took them outside and then they opened up to me."

Getting the children to share their inner most feelings was hard at first, but later became easier, she said.

"The easiest way I found to get trust was to show up every week. Once they knew I wasn't going to let them down, they started talking to me and telling me about things that were going on," Roddy said. "A lot of times they don't have a stable person they can see regularly, so that's why it's important for CASA to be there to give support."

MORE INFO?
For information about CASA, call 537-6367

Jayme Morris-Hardeman, advocate supervisor, said being a stable person in the children's lives was essential.

"They get someone to be a mentor and a friend, and they also get someone to be stable in their lives," she said. "They may have many social workers come in and out of their lives, but the CASA worker remains constant."

Spending time with the children three hours a week — taking them swimming, bowling or to the park — Roddy said she became a friend to them instead of a stranger. She learned to see through their eyes, sharing their pain and their joy.

Relating to their experiences was sometimes hard, though, because she had never suffered abuse like they had. Dealing with the emotional stress also became difficult, but Roddy said it was worth it. She just had to cope with it so that it wouldn't consume her.

"Sometimes I just have to separate myself," she said. "I can't take home all of their problems. I have to go on with my life."

The emotional stress always will be a part of it, she said, so that's not what drives her to continue. It's what she gets from the children.

"I really enjoy it because they are so happy when they see me. I know they look forward to our visits and that makes me feel like I've accomplished something with them," Roddy said. "They're just fun to be with. They have a lot of energy and enthusiasm and just want to have a lot of fun with me. That's why I like to do it."

With the history they had, she said she didn't know what to expect of their personalities, but found they are fun to be with, always cracking jokes and that they are highly intelligent.

"Mostly, they are just kids that happen to have a dark past," Roddy said.

After working on the case for eight months, and her kids having been in the system for four years, the case might close in October.

As a part of her job, Roddy wrote a recommendation to the judge about where she thinks the children should be placed, the place she feels is best for them, both psychologically and physically.

"It is really difficult to know when a case should be closed," she said. "Just because they like living with someone doesn't mean that will help them."

Knowing the affect her decision could have on the children's lives can be intimidating, she said.

"It is scary because the child's safety is in our hands, basically, and we don't want to place them somewhere they'd be placed in danger," Roddy said. "It is scary to think what if we might put them somewhere where they're going to be in physical danger, or more importantly, psychological danger. We have such a big impact on their lives."

While the girls have been in the system for four years, many others have been there longer, she said. Seeing what these children have experienced is tough, she said.

"A lot of kids don't even have any possessions," Roddy said. "They just move their bodies around, which is sad. If they do have possessions, such as clothes, they usually just move them around in trash bags."

Looking back at the eight months so far, she said one thing stuck out at her that she didn't realize at the beginning of her case.

"I don't think I realized the reality of the situations, going into the houses and meeting some of the people that caused the child to be in the court system in the first place," she said. "It's really difficult."

Because of her involvement, though, Roddy said she has now decided to not only be an advocate for children, but an advocate for people of all ages.

"This has encouraged me to be outspoken about issues of domestic violence, abuse and neglect," she said. "I'm now a volunteer at the crisis center, too.

The things I've learned from CASA made me want to contribute more to the community."

Tailgate, cheer in anticipation of Wildcat wins

If students want a way to get pumped up for the first home football game of the season, there are a variety of ways to do so.

On Saturday, tailgating and cheering on the team shows tremendous pride. This is demonstrated by the sea of purple that can be seen in the crowd.

However, there are things to do before the big game. For instance, there are events students can participate in today and Friday that show their Wildcat spirit.

The Purple Power Play on Poyntz pep rally will get the pride running through students' veins.

Events include concerts, games, an inflatable carnival and fireworks, as well as the original pep rally.

Thursday night will feature musical talents such as Sharkey's Little Groove Box, Ruskabank and the Dave Stephens Swing Band. Also performing are the K-State cheerleaders, the Classy Cats and Willie the Wildcat.

Friday night there will be a martial arts exhibition, a concert by Dustin Evans and a variety of other activities.

Guests of honor at the pep rally will be members of the football team and Coach Bill Snyder.

Also, there should be students galore showing their support for a top-notch football team.

Go out and show your purple pride.

Fantasy life & Friendship

Gaming groups not about stereotypical geekdom

MIAH WHITAKER

What do you think of when you hear Shadowrun, Vampire: The Masquerade or Dungeons & Dragons?

If you are like most people, you picture a group of gauche teens or socially inept 20-somethings pretending that Gnarfblag the furry-footed burrower has defeated the red dragon of Gandolf or Granola or something. The players, or gamers, can't handle real-world social interaction so they have to resort to fantasy worlds and scenarios, right?

Wrong.

I'm a gamer, or at least, I'd like to be a gamer. I've been told I can't officially be a gamer until I own much more dice. It's a badge I'd wear with honor. But when I tell people that I like to spend my free time role-playing, I get pitying looks and offers to be introduced to "normal" people.

This past Friday a friend I haven't seen in over a year came into town and the old gang had a bit of a reunion. During the catch-up phase of the evening, my friend Becky blurted out that I play D&D, like I had developed an incurable and highly nasty skin disease.

It's interesting to note that Becky role-plays on occasion, but she will not play D&D in any of its numerous incarnations. It's like there's an invisible line to super geekdom that she's afraid to cross, and D&D symbolizes that line for her.

I have met more interesting and friendly people since I started gaming this past January than in my tenure as a college student, which is considerable, much to my parents' displeasure, and I've yet to meet anyone I would call geeky.

My introduction to gaming came from a past roommate who was getting ready to drop a game in which he thought I might be interested. I'd heard all the stereotypes and didn't want to get involved with all that freaky fantasy stuff. I went with him to his last game just to watch, and ended up creating my first character that evening. He left sometime around 11, and I really didn't notice him leave. It wasn't until I was on my way home that night that I noticed that even though I'd only really known two people at the game, I'd felt comfortable with everyone in the room.

The group went out of its way to make me feel welcome and to teach me what I needed to know. There was no feeling of insecurity, no clique to fight to join, no need to worry about being accepted.

I game with several different groups, and each is just as accepting as the first. Sure, each group has its unique characters, but what group doesn't? There isn't a social outcast in the bunch. If anyone could be classified as socially inept, it would have to be me — I'm the terminally shy one.

If you want to see what a group of gamers are really like, stop by the Gamer & Comix Shop some Saturday afternoon and I'll introduce you to some interesting people. Get to know us before you judge us. Who knows? You might just have the makings of a rather fine furry-footed burrower.

Organizations promoting women's equality offers place for those searching for niche

TERRY MCGAUGH

When I first came to K-State, I, too, thought about two main things: (1) I kick ass at this living on my own thing and (2) I hope this won't be as boring as high school.

It took me almost two years to find my niche, to get to a point where I felt like college really opened a door for me (and not just in resume' terms, either).

"Women's issues," women's studies, feminism, call it whatever you want, but it all struck a chord with me. Gender inequality, minority issues and violence against women became my passion, but I had no idea how to act on that. In other words, I wanted to change the world but didn't quite know how to get started. And I wasn't totally sure what feminism was, either.

I stumbled upon a new group that was just starting up. I went to the meeting and I was a kid in a candy store. Everybody shared those same passions and everybody needed a space in which to DO something. "Ordinary Women" was born.

Through my involvement in Ordinary Women and through the classes I've chosen, I've learned what being a feminist means, and it's probably not what you think. Most people think of feminists as lesbian, angry and hostile. Any good feminist will tell you that some of us are, and some of us aren't. Just as there are different types of people, there are different types of feminists. The one thing we do all have in common is a drive to educate (Women's liberation has done a lot, but the constricting organizations still are in place, and there still is work to be done), to enact change (we KNOW that most men aren't bad, and for those who are, we know there's several reasons for that, and some aren't your fault), and to just start listening to one another (women have so many unique experiences that we haven't traditionally been privy to).

Ordinary Women encapsulates each of those facets of feminism and more. We don't just sit around and gripe about what needs to change; we get out there and do something about it. This semester we're going further than we have in the past. We're working on a Turn Out the Vote campaign, educating the campus and community about affirmative consent and planning a Take Back the Night march to top last year's showing of more than 400.

We're always looking for new members, both men and women. If you think you might be interested in Ordinary Women, have any questions on becoming a member or just want to know more about us, contact our Web site at ordinarywomen.tripod.com/start/. There's so much more than I could express here and so many other things we plan to tackle this year.

Don't just sit back and be happy with stereotypes or sit at home and think that somebody should do something. Come find out for yourself if Ordinary Women is right for you.

READERS WRITE

Redevelopment of 3rd Street should proceed thoughtfully

Editor,

If the city of Manhattan is to be home to yet another new retail development, this time along north Third Street, it must strive to assure that the project is aesthetically pleasing and respects its proximity to the downtown business district.

This is what the City Commission seems to want, for tit has mentioned in the past that it wants this plan to sort of blend into the downtown setting lying to the plan's south. It even has called for the plan to be sympathetic to the Downtown Tomorrow plan that is always being improved.

However, in a recent Collegian article regarding the retail development (from Aug. 21), Mayor Karen McCulloh said the plan would be good for downtown, among other things. Yes, encouraging most new retail to be near the downtown and Manhattan Town Center is a good move, but when it's built in the style of places such as the Wal-Mart shopping center on Tuttle Creek Boulevard, or the nearby Dillons Superstore, it's not at all conducive to a unified central business district.

If Manhattan is to allow something such as a SuperTarget and accompanying stores to be built in a new development, this development needs to be shaped to look good and feel at home in the oldest part of the city. While the site is not directly in the middle of downtown, it could be blended with the mall and Poyntz Avenue, if adequate and attractive pedestrian opportunities were made. Alas, the closure of Third Street at Leavenworth Street makes that more challenging, but maybe it's time to confront that break in the city's street plan now, also.

Aren't there other options for the city to consider? For instance, if there is such a concern to foster downtown's role as a business center, why doesn't the city work to call for submissions for new retail buildings along the disorganized 500 block of Poyntz, extending the existing retail spine that was shortened by the mall's construction? Or perhaps the city could recognize the community's distaste with existing cinemas and try to push for plans for a downtown movie theater emulating the style of the Wareham only with modern conveniences. There are many options the city itself could devise and encourage designers all over the state to submit ideas for, sparking new potential. Third Street does not have to be the only game in downtown's near future development.

The bottom line here is there is a difference between building shopping centers near downtown and building shopping centers that are part of downtown. What I see coming before the City Commission is a shopping center that happens to be near downtown. There also is a need for a city that will encourage creativity and see what people can create for its future. Manhattan has spent no small expense coming up with innovative plans like Downtown Tomorrow, and thus, the city can't back down and let another developer shove an automobile oriented place in the midst of this city's traditional place of retailing. We should press the developers of the Third Street plan to make sure their idea connects with Poyntz and the mall, and make downtown Manhattan a place even more attractive in which to be. This is no time for our strong City Commission to defer to private business' way of shunning the uniquenesses of a community.

Volunteer Fair offers students chances to donate time to community-service efforts, receive university credit

By NANCY HULL
Kansas State Collegian

Spending her free time with children has been an important aspect of Kultida Varaphan's life for the past four years.

Varaphan, freshman in open-option, sought to carry her passion for volunteering with children into her college years during Wednesday's Volunteer Fair in the Union Courtyard.

"I always have tried to give a couple hours a week doing things to get to know kids and work with them," Varaphan said. "Volunteering helps me spend my time wisely, and I'm not just sitting around all the time."

In the past, Varaphan said she has enjoyed volunteering at a public library and helping grade school kids with projects for a science fair. After stopping by the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce's Jaycees' booth Wednesday, Varaphan said she now is interested in helping with a haunted house sponsored by the Jaycees.

Thirty-three local and state human service agencies and organizations were present at the fair to discuss volunteer, internship and career opportunities with K-State students. Career and Employment Services and the Community Service Program sponsored the fourth annual fair from 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

Representatives from Career and Employment Services said both students and parents were showing interest in this year's fair.

"Parents whose children are engineering majors called to ask what engineering companies would be here," said Jessica Heller, senior in hotel and restaurant management and employer at Career and Employment Services. "There was lots of interest and questions about this fair."

K-State students interested in helping international students feel more comfortable in America's culture had the opportunity to gather information from the International Student Center's booth about the center's Conversational English Program.

"We look for students who are committed to spending time with international students and practicing conversation skills," Maria Beebe, coordinator for the program, said.

Beebe said that last year there were 88 pairs of students involved in the program, and they spent about an hour each week together.

Some students at the fair were looking to fulfill requirements for classes.

Kim Brandt, freshman in anthropology, said she needs to volunteer six hours this semester for her for University Experience class.

"I've found brochures for volunteering at elementary schools after school," Brandt said. "There's a latchkey program that deals with group participation that I could do for two hours a week."

Carl Hebert, sophomore in open-option, attended the volunteer fair with hopes of completing assignments for two classes. Hebert said he's required to volunteer eight hours this semester for a Parks and Recreation class.

"I'd really like to volunteer for a state park, but I'm not sure if there's someone here from any," Hebert said.

Hebert said he also was collecting brochures from booths, so he could write about volunteer options for his Career and Life Plan class.

Tracey Fraser, director of Career and Employment Services, said the feedback from the volunteer fair was extremely positive.

"The agencies were able to identify a slew of volunteers to rely on for programs," Fraser said.

She said that about a half dozen agencies asked if the fair could be put on again in the spring.

"It was really worthwhile and valuable to everyone," Fraser said. "Agencies were very impressed with the students and what they can give to the community."

Service organization sponsors drawing for bowl-game tickets

By JENNIFER O'NEILL
Kansas State Collegian

Football season might be just beginning, but Cat fans already can look forward to a bowl game.

The Junior League of the Flint Hills, a women's services organization designed to promote leadership and volunteerism, is having its second annual fund-raiser, Road to the Bowl. The league is trying to raise money to promote literacy in children.

By donating $5 to the Literacy for Life project, donors are entered into a drawing to win two K-State alumni travel packages to this year's bowl game.

"The Cats are doing well," said Michelle Chapman, fund-raiser chairwoman. "Each year we can increase our goals and keep helping kids in our community learn to read."

This particular project is funding programs that help area children and their parents in Manhattan, Wamego and Junction City, to understand the importance of reading.

Staci Stevens, Junior League member, said the drawing is a good incentive to get people to donate.

"Literacy is a major part of a child's life," Stevens said. "It's a part of everything they do."

People who donate money by Sept. 18 will be included in a separate drawing for the Sept. 23 game against North Texas.

The winner will receive passes to two press boxes courtesy of Sharon Snyder, football coach Bill Snyder's wife.

People can register on game days at booths in front of Varney's Book Store in Aggieville and near KSU Stadium.

"If you don't win, at least you'll remember the money went to a great cause," Stevens said. "You're helping kids to learn to read."

Laurie Koehn spent her summer sharpening her basketball skills as part of the USA Basketball Women's Junior World Championship Qualifying Team playing in Argentina, where the team finished first. Koehn was the team's third-leading scorer, averaging 12.4 points per game.

Basketball recruit plays in Argentina

Most 18-year-old basketball players might spend their summers playing ball on an AAU team or, if they're lucky, competing for a regional all-star team.

Most players are not Laurie Koehn.

A freshman Wildcat beginning this fall, the 5-foot, 8-inch Koehn spent her summer playing guard for the USA Basketball Women's Junior World Championship Qualifying Team in Argentina.

The United States went 5-0 and placed first in the July tournament; however, the preparation started six weeks earlier. First, Koehn had to survive a competitive three-day trial in Colorado Springs to make the 12-member team, she said.

"They picked 40 girls from around the country to try out for the team," Koehn said. "All the players were very good, so they had to cut it to 15, and then narrow it to 12. Then, the 12 stayed and practiced until Thursday, and the others went home."

The criteria to make the squad was not limited to just individual talent, however. The

When K-State women's basketball takes the court in November, it will do so with a wave of new, highly decorated players.

The six members of the 2000 signing class have had their names appear on nearly every award and honors list in their respective states, as well as across the country.

Leading the way for the newest Wildcats is Laurie Koehn, a 5-foot, 8-inch guard from Moundridge, Kan. In her four years at Moundridge High School, Koehn tallied 3,160 career points, second all-time in Kansas history. Koehn also was a two-time USA Today Kansas Player of the Year.

The sharpshooting guard did not end her domination on the court in high school, however. In July, Koehn traveled to Argentina as part of the USA Basketball Women's Junior World Qualifying Team. Against some of the best basketball players in North and South America, Koehn ranked third on the team in both scoring and three-point percentage.

Koehn's success at the international level should have been no surprise. In high school, she dominated whoever she played, Koehn's high school coach Sue Hetzky said.

"In high school, she could basically do whatever she wanted against anybody," Hetzky said.

The only other player signed from Kansas is 6-foot, 4-inch forward Nicole Ohlde. An All-State Class 4A player at Clay Center High School, Ohlde was also a USA Today honorable mention All-American from Kansas. During her senior year in high school, Ohlde used her towering frame to score 18 points and 12.9 rebounds per game.

While not from Kansas, 6-foot forward Amy Dutmer grew up in the relatively nearby town of York, Neb., In addition to scoring double-digit figures in high school, Dutmer once grabbed 24 rebounds in a single game. For her efforts, Dutmer was slated first team all-state as a senior and played in the 2000 Nebraska Coaches

Manhattan looks for volunteers to coach

By DAN SMITH
Kansas State Collegian

Volunteers interested in coaching a youth sports team this fall still are needed for the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department.

Recreation supervisor Mike Buchanan said coaching positions still are available for students in three sports: flag football, soccer and volleyball.

Buchanan said this is a good opportunity for students' with education majors to gain experience working with children.

INTERESTED?

Interested in coaching a youth sports team? Contact Mike Buchanan or Ivan Wilkinson by phone at 587-2757, by e-mail at either buchanan@ci.manhattan.ks.us or wilkinson@ci.manhattan.ks.us, or inquire in person at the Department's Office at 1101 Fremont St. in City Park.

Youth sports in Manhattan are divided into various age groups. Children as young as second grade (soccer) and as old as seventh grade (flag football) participate in the fall.

Time commitments are minimal, usually around three to five hours a week, Buchanan said, and practices generally are twice a week with one game scheduled on Sunday afternoon. Soccer teams also might have a game during the week on occasion.

The time commitment also can be shared between two or more students. Ivan

1st baseman gains summer experience

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

First baseman Mark English experienced one recurring theme during the summer months — baseball.

"We played 50 games, so I pretty much had one every day," English said. "By the end of that, it was nice to take a couple of days off."

English, after leading the Coastal Plain League in RBI (40) and runs scored (35), was selected the CPL's All-Star Bat Company Most Valuable Player, an Aug. 24 press release stated.

"I had a great time," English said, "playing against some of the top players from around the country. I think I started off pretty good in the league."

A second team Coaches All-Big 12 selection last season, English was among 14 players selected to the league's season-ending all-star team.

"I just relaxed, had fun and everything worked itself out for me," he said.

English led the Wilson, N.C., Tobs to a

Roberson not ready to play this season; Beasley to lead team to victory

MIKE VIETTI

Growing up, I was taught by my parents as well as the nuns at my Catholic school that saying "shut up" was a pretty bad thing.

I actually had to sit out a week's full of recesses simply for telling a classmate to shut up in the third grade.

But I've grown up now, and despite the frequent usage of even more colorful metaphors by my peers, I refrain from saying the simplistic, old-school phrase, "shut up."

Until now.

For the past year, anger has been brewing inside my simple, yet almost ready to explode cranium. It hurts so badly, I'd rather be subjected to an eternal debate concerning the meaning of life between Jeff Foxworthy and Pauly Shore than deal with it again.

It might surprise you all to know that the source of my bloated brain, the reason I can't concentrate in my classes and, at this moment in my life, the bane of my existence actually is K-State football fans.

Well, not all of you. But it sure seems like most of you. Any of you who screamed and shouted at Bill Snyder during the game last weekend to put in Ell Roberson, to you I say, "Shut up."

Any fans who jumped out of their seats to cheer on Roberson as he entered the game for the final play, to you I say, "Shut up."

To any fans who jeered Jonathan Beasley last season, or already this year for any reason, to you I say, "Shut up."

Yes, that's right. Waste your breath all you want, but the fact of the matter is that Ell Roberson isn't going to start against Louisiana Tech. In fact, he's not going to start against Ball State or North Texas or Colorado or ... see the trend developing this year?

Every time one of you stupid morons calls into the Campus Fourum decreeing that Beasley is terrible and Roberson should play — you're wasting your time and the Collegian's expensive ink.

Ell Roberson is not ready to be the starting quarterback at K-State. Don't believe me? Would you believe offensive coordinator Ron Hudson? Or how about the man at the top himself, Bill Snyder?

Apparently not. Why is it that these two football minds can repeatedly say week after week after week that Roberson is not ready to be the starting quarterback, yet ignorant fans, such as yourself, keep calling his name.

Think about it. Snyder analyzes absolutely everything. He probably knows whether wearing black socks as opposed to white socks produces any advantage to his football team.

Don't you think that he's calculated the benefits versus the risks of making Roberson the starting quarterback a thousand different times? I'm willing to bet all of my next loan refund check that he has and the result is obvious: Jonathan Beasley gives K-State the best chance to win football games.

What also boggles my mind is that mentally challenged fans can call for Beasley's head every single time he makes a mistake. Did anyone shout out that Quincy Morgan should have been replaced because he dropped a couple of passes against Iowa? I doubt it.

How about yelling to pull Aaron Lockett when he let a pass go through his hands? Probably not, either. Or did any of you scream for Jarrod Cooper to be benched last year on any of the occasions when he was beaten in coverage?

Of course not, and that's exactly the point. Each of those players makes up for their mistakes later on in the game. Lockett had a great catch over the middle against the Hawkeyes and Morgan came back to catch seven passes.

Yes, Beasley did throw a pair of stupid interceptions, but not one single fan can say that his touchdown run to the corner of the endzone in the fourth quarter was anything less than a great play.

So keep screaming for Roberson if you want to. It really doesn't matter, though. This isn't his year. It isn't now, it won't be next week and it surely won't be against Nebraska. This is Jonathan Beasley's year, his team and maybe, if you would just get off his back and let him play, he'd show you just how good he can be.

I know he's thinking it, but can't say it. So, Beasley, here's an early Christmas present from me to you.

"Fans, please shut up."

Wilkinson, director of flag football for Manhattan Parks and Recreation, said fraternities and sororities have fun coaching a team together in a group.

Fall youth leagues begin Monday and run through the end of October. Although the time commitment is minimal, Buchanan said it is necessary for a coach to put in the time at practice and in the game to make the experience worthwhile for both the coach and the youth involved.

Buchanan said student coaches are what make these leagues possible. He said that, without volunteers, Manhattan could not offer the types of youth sports programs that it does.

Necessary information, equipment, supplies and training are provided by the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department, and only a basic understanding of the sport is needed to teach these leagues, Buchanan said.

Interested volunteers are encouraged to call either Mike Buchanan or Ivan Wilkinson at 587-2757.

Buchanan and Wilkinson also can be reached by e-mail at buchanan.ci.manhattan.ks.us and wilkinson.ci.manhattan.ks.us., respectively.

Volunteers can inquire about the position in person at the Department's Office at 1101 Fremont St. in City Park.

coaches also had to consider how the players would gel as a team, Koehn said.

"They picked the team to be good as a team," Koehn said. "We didn't have a clue who made the team. When I found out that I didn't get cut, I was excited, surprised — just extremely excited."

That feeling of excitement soon would be replaced by the necessity to work for a gold medal. The players were not satisfied to merely be on the team, Koehn said.

"When we got to Argentina, we meant business," Koehn said. "We really felt like we put in the work to win the gold medal."

Koehn's hard work showed up in her statistics as well as her gold medal. Against some of the best basketball players from around the world, Koehn managed 12.4 points per game and shot nearly 39 percent from beyond the arc. Both statistics were third highest on the team.

Koehn's performance on the international level should not have been surprising, considering her statistics at Moundridge High School. For her career, she averaged 30.4 points per game and shot 49 percent from behind the three-point arc.

In addition to her strong shooting ability, Koehn also handles the ball well, her high school coach Sue Hetzky said.

"We had her at the point guard position, but she's really more of a '2' player," Hetzky said. "We just needed someone who could handle the ball."

Playing for the United States also helped prepare Koehn for her upcoming season at K-State, since one of the assistant U.S. coaches also happened to be Wildcat head coach Deb Patterson, Koehn said.

"A lot of times, the things the coaching staff was teaching is how she does stuff at K-State," Koehn said. "It was great having her down there."

Competing in the tournament meant more than winning a gold medal, Koehn said.

"I learned a lot on and off the court — just getting to play, the relationships you make, the friendships you make," Koehn said. "I got to compete and practice against the top players in the country and then go down there and play against the top players from other countries.

"It was by far the best experience I've had playing on a basketball team in the summer."

Association All-Star Girls' Basketball Game.

Next on the list for K-State is Kimmery Newsom, a 5-foot, 6-inch guard from Nashville, Tenn. Newsom started on varsity all four years at Pearl-Cohn High School and averaged 18.8 points, 7.2 rebounds and 7.2 assists per game as a senior.

At K-State, Newsom will help provide quickness to the guard position, head coach Deb Patterson said.

"Kimmery is a combination guard who brings good speed and athleticism to our program," Patterson said. "She has demonstrated an ability to rebound well as a guard, and right now, her greatest strengths lie in the intangibles that she brings to the floor."

The last incoming freshman for the Cats is 6-foot, 2-inch forward/center Andrea Armstrong. As a senior at North Bend High School in Lakeside, Ore., Armstrong led the state in scoring with a 21.5 points per game average. She also was a USA Today honorable mention All-American.

The final member of the K-State recruiting class hails from Detroit, Mich., but played the last two seasons at Coffeyville Community College. Shalondra Booker, a 5-foot, 4-inch guard, set the season and career steal records at Coffeyville with 135 and 210, respectively.

That ability to put pressure on opposing point guards is what made her attractive to K-State, Patterson said.

"Shalondra is a quick, aggressive on-the-ball defender," Patterson said. "She is the quickest player player we will have had in our gym."

second-place finish and 16-9 record in the Northern Division.

In addition to his league-leading marks in RBI and runs scored, English finished second in doubles (14), and third in slugging percentage (.438) and extra base hits (18).

His .290 average ranked him 10th in batting, as he tallied 51 hits in 176 at-bats, with four home runs and 12 stolen bases.

English's success earned him the starting position at first base in the second annual CPL All-Star Game in Wilson, N.C.

The CPL is an all-wood bat collegiate summer baseball league comprised of players across the country who wish to exhibit their talents to pro scouts.

In 2000, English was an offensive catalyst as he led the team in seven offensive categories to the Wildcats' 19-32 record and 5-24 mark in Big 12 play.

English said he is looking forward to getting this year's season started, with fall ball team practices beginning Sept. 24.

Eating well, exercise key to staying healthy

■ College students lacking nutritious foods, exercise risk chance of heart disease.

By AMBER CUNNINGHAM
Kansas State Collegian

A big concern for many college students is body image and feeling good. What some don't understand is that those things are lifestyle choices.

"If we start a healthy lifestyle now, the issues of high cholesterol and obesity won't be a problem," Brian Lehmann, senior in nutrition and exercise science, said.

Lehmann, a sports nutritionist for the K-State athletic training table, works daily trying to get K-State athletes to eat a more well-balanced diet.

"College students, especially athletes, eat a lot of fast food," he said.

Lehmann said meat products are where the cholesterol comes from. He gives the athletes recipes that have six ingredients or less, can be prepared in 15 minutes and are cheaper than fast food to help battle the cholesterol problem.

"I provide the athletes with fast and healthy recipes," Lehmann said. "Athletes are most concerned with how to better their performance."

Richard Baybutt, associate professor of human nutrition, said eating foods from the bottom of the food pyramid is beneficial. Whole grains, fruits and vegetables, low-fat dairy items such as yogurt and lower-fat cuts of meat are what he suggested.

"The dietary habits we develop now we keep for the rest of our life time," Baybutt said.

Baybutt said the main problem for students is that they don't want to cut junk food out of their diets. He said it is a matter of training yourself early to like healthy things and eat less fatty foods.

"If we modify what we eat now in college to a healthful diet, we'll learn to like what we eat," Baybutt said.

Lehmann agreed that the food students eat today might affect them later in life.

"Chest pains associated with heart attacks don't occur until the arteries are 75 percent blocked, which is later in life," Lehmann said. "Foods you eat now can start blocking arteries."

Baybutt said aerobic exercise and eating right are some of the main ways to increase levels of high density lipoprotein, the cholesterol that can help combat conditions such as heart disease. Swimming, biking and running are great examples of aerobic exercise.

Lehmann said he does a form of aerobic exercise four to five times a week. He said he also lifts weights three to four times a week.

"The first step is just to get people doing something," Lehmann said. "Get out of the dorm room and off the couch."

Baybutt said he agreed.

"The idea is to do anything to prolong activity that increases the heart rate," he said. "Taking the stairs instead of the elevator is a good example."

Miho Kataoka, junior in horticulture therapy, said she gets her exercise by walking on campus, but also tries to monitor her eating habits.

"Eating is very important to me," Kataoka said. "I think about what I have to eat."

The challenge to students is to make one meal a day a healthy one. Lehmann said breakfast is a good start for students who want to eat healthier.

"Replace the sausage biscuits and gravy with a piece of fruit, a bagel or a smoothie," Lehmann said. "Keep trying to set small goals, and they will establish a lifestyle."

Kelly Campbell, senior in interior design, said she doesn't have a lot of time to eat well in the morning.

"I just grab something like a cereal bar or a Pop Tart," Campbell said. "When I eat better I feel more energetic."

John Briden, one of the brewmasters at Little Apple Brewing Company, checks a vat for the break or residue left at the bottom after a batch of beer has been cycled through. The brewery produces about 14 kegs in a batch every eight to 10 hours.

Local brewery sells beer to go

By SARAH MCCAFFREY
Kansas State Collegian

Besides offering home-brewed ales, lagers and pilsners, the Little Apple Brewing Company offers another service that most area alcohol vendors can't provide.

Little Apple customers can purchase freshly brewed beer to take home with them on Sundays.

"We sell beer-to-go on Sundays from 12 to 6 p.m.," John Briden, brewer at Little Apple, said.

Briden said many people often want to buy microbrews for football games or they simply forget to purchase alcohol on Saturday night.

Little Apple has much more to offer than just carry-out beer on Sundays. The restaurant and brewery makes ales and lagers on-site Monday through Saturday.

Patrons can even catch a glimpse of the brewing process as they enjoy their meals. The brewing area is partially enclosed by glass, giving diners an instant mealtime conversation topic.

The actual brewing equipment is a two-vessel, seven-barrel system, one of the smaller commercial brewers. The system allows the brewery to produce seven barrels or about 14 kegs of alcohol at a time.

Briden said the process begins with malted barley, a type of grass seed. Depending on the type of brewery, different types of barley will be used. The barley also is the ingredient that gives the beer a light or dark appearance.

MICHAEL YOUNG/Collegian

John Briden takes a gravity reading of the latest batch of beer he has made at Little Apple Brewing Company. The reading allows him to determine the alcohol content for each brew.

The barley is then ground into a fine powder that undergoes several boiling and cooling phases. All of the machines at Little Apple are manually operated by the brewers.

Along the way, hops are added into the liquefied mixture. Hops contribute the bitter taste and aroma present in the end product.

After the final heating and cooling stages have occurred, the mixture, called wort, is sent to tanks to ferment. Briden said a basic Little Apple ale takes about five days to ferment, while lagers can take three weeks to a month to mature.

Having a brewery on-site provides a diverse drink menu for patrons.

"We have five to eight different styles of beer on tap everyday," Russ Loub, owner of Little Apple, said.

The most popular microbrew on tap is Wildcat Wheat Ale.

"We brew Wildcat Wheat about once a week," Lou Kaylor, brewer at Little Apple, said.

Briden said he thinks the ale's popularity probably stems from its pale color.

"Wildcat Wheat is popular because people think the lighter the color, the lighter the beer," he said.

Other micro-brew favorites include Prairie Pale Ale and Riley's Red Ale.

The brewery also offers seasonal and specialty beers throughout the year, such as Scottish Ale.

"People like to drink lighter beer during the summer and heavy beer during the winter," Kaylor said.

Although microbrews are the specialty at Little Apple, many patrons are accustomed to domestic beer rather than heavier lagers and pilsners.

"People are introduced to the beer world through domestic beers," Briden said. "It's an acquired taste."

Barbecue connoisseurs offer cook-out advice

By DUSTY THOMAS
Kansas State Collegian

Football season is in full swing, and with it comes the tailgate parties and barbecues.

But there is more to barbecuing than throwing some meat over an open flame. Cuts of meat, the type of fuel and barbecue sauces all need to be taken into consideration when starting the grill.

C.J. Wadsworth, junior in sociology, is one of the cooks at Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque in Aggieville, where the barbecue sauces are mixed from scratch and the ingredients are not given to the public. Wadsworth was unable to give the recipe for the sauces the business uses, but said he was willing to say what gave all his personal barbecue extra flavor.

"Beer. Just a little bit of beer over anything," Wadsworth said. "Take your beer, pour it on. It makes all the difference in the world."

Beer isn't the only key to a good barbecue. Many of the restaurants in the area smoke their barbecued meats instead of cooking them over an open-flame of propane or grilling over coals.

Nathan Nely, assistant manager at The Hibachi Hut, said the key to grilling is staying away from propane.

"If you have a smoker, use it. If not, use a non-propane burning grill," Nely said. "Charcoal is pretty good."

Brandon Pham, assistant kitchen manager at the Texas Star Cafe, said there are certain things to keep in mind if using charcoal.

"Don't use newspaper to start it. Everything that is in the fire will go into the food," Pham said. "You don't want the meat tasting like The Times. Use lighter fluid, clean your grill and no propane."

Nely said the length of time meat is cooked is also important to a successful barbecue. The Hibachi Hut and the Texas Star Cafe smoke the majority of their meat for more than two hours, but some cuts of meat, such as brisket and pork, can be smoked in excess of 24 hours.

"Longer is better. It keeps the meat tender," Nely said. "Know your temperatures, know what is rare and what is well-done."

Pham said that because grilling over coals uses a different type of heat than smoking, there are other things to look out for and be aware of.

"Watch for flare-ups, like when a hot spot develops or flame comes from the coals instead of just heat," Pham said. "Try to keep an even flame, keep an eye on your food and have a water spray-bottle handy."

Once the meat is done cooking and has been served, Pham said there is an important part of barbecuing that needs to be done.

"Let your coals die before you dump them," he said. "There are also specific barrels for coals. Don't use the trash cans."

RODEO

"When you're at a rodeo, you just enjoy the whole experience," Frazier said. "The show's good. The horses are good, whether they're bucking or riding. It's everything. I just enjoy it all."

Frazier, however, wasn't in the audience only as a spectator — he watched with the close eye of a coach, as well. Several rodeo team members competed in events at the Wednesday night event.

"We haven't started practice," he said. "This gives me an idea of what to expect and what to work on when we start."

He said it would be the first time he saw a couple of the freshman who would be competing as part of K-State's team.

"It's fun," Frazier said. "I get to watch them all before we even get started."

The Manhattan Open Rodeo is one of 25 put on by the Kraft Rodeo Series. The Manhattan Open Rodeo will conclude after tonight's performance at Wells Arena. Tickets can be purchased at the gate for the 8 p.m. rodeo. Junction City will be host to the Kraft Rodeo Series finals Sept. 30 and Oct. 1.

other organizations will receive offices.

The 120 cubicles would be divided among organizations on a first come first served basis, Walker said. If more than 120 groups desired space, Walker said applications would be used.

"We just want to give students access if they want it," he said. "We know there's interest, so we decided to go with the actual construction."

Mason Rankin, sophomore in secondary education, said the center could be used as an opportunity to attract students to various organizations. He said he wouldn't mind an increase in privilege fees.

"I think $5 million is pretty reasonable," he said. "If they build this and don't advertise it right, then I think it's a waste of money."

Work, computer and conference rooms would be features of the center. Walker said storage space for campus organizations also would be available.

Walker said the center will allow for communication to increase among various university entities and would also be a place where people easily could access information.

"If we can all meet in one room, it's a great way to network," he said.

Lorrel Kelley, senior in elementary education, said the center would be a way for organizations to reach out to students. She said she would be willing to contribute financially.

"It kind of seems like a lot, but a couple thousand dollars seems like a lot to me, too," she said.

ATO

administration, service, campus involvement, leadership and many others.

Ben Porter, junior in marketing and international business and the public relations officer for ATO, said Delta Theta was given the Anderson Gold Communication award for work on the Vintage, an alumni newsletter that they put out twice a year, as well as their Web site and public relations.

"We are going to build on the things we have already done," Porter said.

The Excellence in Scholarship award is given to chapters who have a cumulative grade point average of 3.0 or higher. Delta Theta achieved a 3.028 GPA for past school year.

Excellent community service work leads to the Good Samaritan award.

Josh Wedel, junior in architectural engineering, said the house received the award for work done in many organizations in Manhattan.

The Delta Theta chapter did work in the Adopt-a-Highway program, the Riley County mentor program, the Flinthills Breadbasket, Brothers Against Drunk Driving, March of Dimes walk, Wildcat Variety Show and Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Manhattan.

ATO is planning on working to create more community service chances for members of their house.

One opportunity in particular is the Homeless for Hungry event that the house has done twice. This is when men from the house live on the lawns of sororities and don't shower for a week and don't eat unless given food.

The house is planning on expanding to a campus wide event.

"We want to make it more of a campus wide event and try to include the whole campus," Russell said. "We want to get someone from each organization to spend a week so that everyone gets involved."

Russell said they are not focusing on winning awards, just improving their fraternity.

"We don't make an effort to win them. We just try to make ourselves better," Russell said.

that we're trying to do a good job."

The award was based on every facet of fraternity life that the fraternity had worked at — service, leadership, academics and participation. Sigma Nu ranked third for academic grades in fall 1999 and ranked seventh in intramural sports. With 24 other K-State fraternities to compete against, Fisher said their rankings were good.

K-State's chapter was one of four chapters recognized out of 204 chapters at Grand Chapter national conference in Phoenix, Ariz., in August. The award is given every two years, and Fisher said it is arguably one of the highest honors the chapter has received in its 87-year history.

The plaque Sigma Nu received is especially meaningful, Fisher said, because of its symbolism. When the fraternity was founded, it was founded on a large limestone rock at the Virginia Military Institute. For the award, a piece of that rock was placed in the plaque.

Fisher said receiving the award was not an accomplishment achieved by just one group in the house.

"The officers did a great job getting the guys organized and getting stuff done, but this is a credit to the whole house," he said. "The combined effort really worked together to get it all worked out."

Chris Neuer, senior in accounting and management information systems, said that when he heard the news that they received the award, he was excited but not too surprised since they'd known last winter that they were in the running.

"We're really going to try and use this as motivation to continue getting the award. It's the first one we've gotten, but hopefully we will continue to get it down the road."

Kevin Devore, Sigma Nu vice president

"I wasn't overly surprised," he said. "But it was nice to get and it was nice to get that national recognition by our fraternity."

He said it was gratifying to receive the award not only for the national recognition, but because everyone achieved it.

"Everybody participates," Neuer said. "Everyone chips in one way or another. We all do community service, and we all do our different sports."

Other members, he said, shared his feelings of pride.

"They were all glad to see the recognition," he said. "Especially from hearing about other chapters, we kind of knew who else was in the running. It was kind of flattering to beat out some of the other chapters we'd heard about."

Kevin Devore, vice president of Sigma Nu, said not only is the award an accomplishment for all current members, but for alumni as well. He said many alumni were involved in the beginning stages of forming their goal three years ago, and would smile upon the final achievement.

When Devore attended the national conference, he said he was nervous, but felt they had done everything possible to put themselves in position for the award.

"Just reaching the level of success needed to be recognized by the award was what was important to us," he said.

Even with the award in their possession, Sigma Nu members' goals haven't changed.

"We're really going to try and use this as motivation to continue getting the award. It's the first one we've gotten, but hopefully we will continue to get it down the road," Devore said. "It's important for us to remember what it took for us to arts exhibition sponsored by ATA Black Belt Academy, a concert by Dustin Evans, a magician, and the "Lace 'em Up" 3-on-3 Basketball Tournament winners will be announced.

Another pep rally featuring the K-State men's and women's basketball teams will precede the finale of the event, a fireworks display.

"The company doing the pyrotechnics did the Super Bowl two years ago in Miami," Crow said. "It's really very impressive."

Michele Jones, executive director of Manhattan Main Street, an organization of downtown Manhattan businesses has seen the growth of Purple Power Play on Poyntz.

"It started 15 years ago, and since then it's taken on its own life," Jones said.

Crow said the event began during the 1980s as a back-to-school event, and began to parallel the success of the Wildcat football team after Snyder's arrival. One of the best things about the Purple Power Play is the closeness shared between the football team and the K-State fans, he said.

Blake Chaffin, junior in marketing and international business, plays bass guitar with Sharkey's Little Groove Box on Tuesday at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant and Saloon. The Habit, another Manhattan-based band, also played. Sharkey's Little Groove Box will perform Friday at the Purple Power Play on Poyntz.

CLIF PALMBERG/ Collegian

"The personal exposure the fans have to the players is wonderful," Crow said. "The players will usually sign autographs for kids — it's just a great part of the event."

Fraternity fire causes damage, no injuries

By JENN DAVOREN
Kansas State Collegian

An early morning fire woke members of Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity early Thursday morning as flames destroyed a third-floor room.

The fire, reported at 4:44 a.m., led to an evacuation at 1516 N. Manhattan Ave., but no injuries.

Residents first noticed the fire a little after 4:30 a.m., when a fraternity member left his room for a drink of water and returned to find it smelling of smoke. However, Manhattan Fire Department Chief Chuck Tannehill said the building's smoke alarms sounded just after fraternity members went to bed around 3 a.m.

The alarms were turned off by TKE President John Muehring due to frequent false alarms, Tannehill said, and smoke alarms in the room itself were not operational.

Although the fire did not spread far, total damage was estimated at $55,300, Tannehill said.

"The room was gutted," he said. "There was considerable smoke damage to the third floor, and water damage on the second floor."

A group of fraternity members, TKE alumni and fire department officials inspected the damage, Tannehill said. Certain areas of the house were designated as safe for residents, while the third floor was determined to be off-limits.

"We went ahead and worked with electricians and got that area isolated," Tannehill said.

As of Thursday evening, the cause of the blaze was undetermined. Tannehill said firefighters checked for evidence of candles, incense, cigarettes and faulty wiring, but turned up little evidence.

"We're calling this fire 'unknown,'" he said.

Tannehill said that not only were the fraternity members lucky to have escaped without injury, but they also were given the chance to teach others about the importance of fire safety.

"This is an excellent opportunity to provide education to them," he said.

The fire chief said many people share the common misconception that the smell of smoke would wake them from sleep and allow them to avoid harm.

"People think, 'I'll smell it and wake up.' That's not the case, generally," Tannehill said. "As the oxygen level decreases, you'll go into a deeper sleep."

Scott Jones, assistant dean of student life, said TKE members displaced by the fire would recieve help from other campus living groups in handling sleeping arrangements. An open letter written to K-State instructors also excuses fraternity members missing out on classwork.

A third-floor room of the Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity house caught fire early Thursday morning. The blaze started between 4:15 and 4:30 a.m. in a single room. No one was injured in the blaze.

Lecture series picks speakers

By JIM REINTJES
Kansas State Collegian

The next two speakers in K-State's Landon Lecture Series were announced Wednesday.

Donna Shalala, U.S. secretary of health and human services, and Stephen Ambrose, a prominent U.S. historian, will take the stage within the next year.

Shalala was appointed to her position by President Clinton in 1993. She is the longest-serving secretary of the department, which administers many federal programs, including Medicare, Medicaid and welfare.

Prior to her appointment on Clinton's cabinet, Shalala was the first woman to lead a Big Ten university, serving as chancellor of the University of Wisconsin at Madison from 1987 to 1993.

Edward Seaton, chairman of the patrons of the Landon Lecture Series, said a date has not yet been determined for Shalala's speech.

"We agreed to do it in November, but no date

Kansas leaders discuss research

By BRYAN MURPHY
Kansas State Collegian

Leaders of three Kansas universities lent their support to U.S. Sen. Pat Roberts on Thursday during a press conference supporting university-based scientific research.

K-State President Jon Wefald, University of Kansas Chancellor Robert Hemenway and Wichita State University President Donald Beggs met Roberts, R-Kan., in Topeka on Thursday morning in an effort to place more emphasis on research conducted at the three state universities.

Throughout the conference Roberts focused on many issues, but the central theme involved an increase in funding for research conducted at state universities and the overall positive effects that such research would have on the Kansas economy.

"It is critical to the Kansas economy that the state position itself as a leader in science and technology research," Roberts said.

According to a recent study of 800 Kansas

K-State fans gather for Watermelon Bash, pep rally

Classy Cats and smashed watermelons were just a part of the activities that took place on Poyntz Avenue last night.

The annual Purple Power Play on Poyntz had everything from a pep rally featuring football coach Bill Snyder, the K-State Marching Band and the Classy Cats to a watermelon bash and an inflatable carnival.

"There is a lot of people and things to do," Sheila Prockish, freshman in advertising, said. "The little kids dressed in Velcro suits at the carnival are cool."

Michelle Jones, executive director for Manhattan Main Street, said the event was estimated to have had 25,000 people last year and said she did not expect to have any less this year.

"Every year, we just get more and more sponsors and activities to do," Jones said. "It was begun by Manhattan Main Street about 15 years ago, but it has now become its own entity."

Vendors, representatives from Manhattan businesses, activities such as dunk tanks and tae kwon do demonstrations were some of the many things lining Poyntz Avenue. Sharkey's Little Groove Box, Ruskabank,and the Dave Stephens Swing Band performed on a stage in front of the Riley County Courthouse as well.

"The Purple Power Play has taken on its own life and just keeps growing," Jones said. "I think the heat is the only thing that may keep people home, but we always have a good turnout."

Carrie Kafka, junior in secondary education, said she was impressed by the ambiance of the Purple Power Play.

"I just love the area they had it in," Kafka said. "The downtown area gives it a small-town atmosphere, and it is just a neat environment."

One of the big activities of the evening was the Watermelon Bust sponsored by Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity.

Andy DiOrio, senior in public relations and Lambda Chi member, said the Watermelon Bust is a tradition for them.

"This is one of our big philanthropies," DiOrio said. "We have five sororities come and participate in things like watermelon twister, watermelon makeovers,watermelon tosses and watermelon chariot relays."

Beth Dover, freshman in pre-nursing, said she came to support her sorority sisters in the Watermelon Bust but ended up participating and winning the watermelon twister event.

"I was just going to watch, but then while I was here I figured I might as well get dirty," Dover said.

Abby Dotson, sophomore in microbiology, won the watermelon toss and said she was surprised, but had fun at the same time.

"I guess that playing soccer pays off," Dotson said.

KELLY GLASSCOCK/Collegian

Jennifer Rodina, freshman in graphic design, places her foot on the red dot during a game of watermelon twister at the Purple Power Play on Poyntz.

"Everyone else threw underhanded, and I threw overhanded because that is what I was used to."

The Purple Power Play also will take place tonight with a fireworks show, vendors and many more activities for families and students to participate in.

Prockish said she had never attended the Purple Power Play before, but was glad that her friends convinced her to come.

"I think this whole thing really shows that Manhattan has a lot of spirit," Prockish said. "I love all the activities and seeing everyone."

Kansas legislator dies after bout with cancer

HADDAM, Kan. — Sen. Janice Hardenburger died Thursday, four weeks after announcing she was withdrawing from her re-election campaign to fight a recurrence of lung cancer.

Her death was announced by the office of Senate President Dick Bond in Topeka.

The 68-year-old Republican lawmaker was chairwoman of the Senate Elections and Local Government Committee. She was first elected to the Senate in 1992 and won re-election in 1996.

During the 2000 Legislature, she was instrumental in crafting legislation to strengthen the Kansas Open Records Act. She also helped shape the legislation requiring more disclosure of lobbyist freebies to lawmakers.

Hardenburger was diagnosed with cancer last year and underwent treatment at the time. She was able to serve in the Senate throughout this year's session.

On Aug. 2, she issued a statement saying she would request her name be withdrawn from the Nov. 7 general election ballot.

"All my energies must be focused on fighting by personal battle against cancer. I owe that to my family and to my constituents," she said in the statement.

In Topeka, Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, expressed sadness at Hardenburger's death. He sat next to her in the Senate and survived two bouts with cancer himself.

Deaf man's death draws criticism from NAACP

DETROIT — A deaf and mute man brandishing a metal-toothed rake was shot to death by a police officer unaware that the man could not hear his calls to halt.

The local NAACP criticized the shooting Tuesday of 39-year-old Errol Shaw Jr., calling it horrifying and sickening.

Police Chief Benny Napoleon promised the family a thorough investigation.

"Certainly, I can commit to them that we will do a through, impartial and objective investigation," Napoleon said. "It is too early for me to either condemn this officer's actions or to defend them."

The Detroit chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People described Shaw, who was black, as another victim of deadly force.

"The fact that a rake in the hand can be equated at the same level as a pistol threatening to kill a man calls into judgment the training, patience and sensitivity of the police department," said the Rev. Wendell Anthony, chapter president.

A family member who called 911 about Shaw allegedly threatening his parents with a knife did not tell the dispatcher that Shaw was deaf, Napoleon said.

Napoleon said the 4-foot rake was a dangerous weapon, and officers are trained to shoot to kill when threatened with deadly force.

He said pepper spray is not intended for use against people who present a threat to life.

Community groups told to return tobacco cash

LOS ANGELES — The American Lung Association and other smoking opponents called on California community groups to reject donations from Philip Morris, accusing the tobacco company of using charity to deceive the public and curry favor with politicians.

The health advocates and private citizens said at a news conference Wednesday that they were outraged by Philip Morris advertisements highlighting its philanthropy.

"The tobacco industry is using charitable donations to buy the good name and support of community organizations," said Pat Etem, spokeswoman for L.A. Link, an umbrella organization for anti-tobacco groups.

"By aggressively publicizing these donations, big tobacco is trying to convince the public they're now good corporate citizens, even though their product continues to spread disease and death."

Philip Morris, the nation's biggest cigarette maker with the Marlboro, Benson & Hedges and Virginia Slims brands, has been an active donor for 40 years but has not been public about it, spokeswoman Peggy Roberts said.

Roberts said the company wants to better inform people about its philanthropy, promote awareness of causes such as domestic violence and let people know that Philip Morris, which includes Kraft Foods and Miller Brewing Co., is more than just tobacco.

She chastised the groups for asking organizations to refuse Philip Morris' charity when they often already have little.

Requests for assistance far exceed what the company doles out, Roberts said, so Philip Morris likely will be unaffected by any groups that choose to follow the American Lung Association's request.

6-acre PowerCat corn maze opens to public

By SARAH BAHARI
Kansas State Collegian

Danny Rogers had a slightly far-fetched idea after reading an issue of National Geographic eight years ago.

Today, his once-passing thought has become a reality in which Manhattan residents and visitors can take part.

The PowerCat Corn Maze, located off of Fort Riley Boulevard and Stagg Hill Road, opens to the public today.

Rogers, of biological and agricultural engineering, helped plant the corn and maintain the land over the summer.

The maze, which covers six acres, equivalent to six football fields, can be quite a challenge for visitors, Rogers said.

"The corn reaches about 7 feet high," Rogers said. "You're pretty well visually impaired when you're in the maze," he said.

Rogers decided to put his plan into action last spring after he talked with a friend who had worked on a similar maze in Buhler, Kan. Finding land was one of the first steps.

"We needed a location visitors could find," he said. "We needed a willing landowner or tenant."

Rogers found local farmers Frank and Winifred Miller, who were looking to make some extra money off of their land and thought this would be a fun way of doing it.

"It's very exciting," Rogers said. "They thought it sounded like a great idea right off the bat."

While searching for land, Rogers talked to a local farmer about possibilities.

The farmer's daughter, Mandy Kramer, is a member of Students in Free Enterprise. When she heard about the maze, she thought it would make a good project.

"I talked with Donita, the adviser, about it and thought it would be something good for us to get involved with," she said.

Donita Whitney-Bammerlin, faculty adviser for SIFE, said she thinks the maze will attract a variety of people.

"We hope football game spectators want to do this," she said. "It's geared for families as well as students."

Members of SIFE will be on-site to help the tourists, Rogers said.

"SIFE students will be on hand to assist visitors in case they need help," he said. "Their job is really twofold — to help the people and to protect the land."

Their assistance will most likely be needed by the people who choose to try the maze, Rogers said, since the maze can be challenging even for him. Rogers said he spent hours in it this summer.

"It's challenging. You can easily get confused.

"I kept a map, but if you don't pay attention, you think you're going toward an exit, and you hit a dead end."

The maze was intended to stay open until Oct. 29, but with the heat, the corn might dry out sooner, Rogers said.

"The hot weather has just moved everything up earlier. It's about a month ahead of schedule."

Rogers said he encourages people to visit the attraction.

"It's a unique experience," he said. "It's totally different to be engulfed in an actual maze than just visually go through one on paper."

Manhattan's Job Corps alumni chapter receives charter

By JENNIFER O'NEILL
Kansas State Collegian

Mayor Karen McCulloh declared Aug. 31 as Job Corps Alumni Day in Manhattan during her proclamation at the chartering ceremony Thursday.

The National Job Corps Alumni Association has added Manhattan to its list, making it the 61st chapter of the NJCAA.

"I'm a long time supporter of Job Corps," McCulloh said. "I think they bring a lot of enthusiasm to the kids here."

Job Corps is an organization that provides at-risk teen-agers and adults between the ages of 16 and 24 with the opportunity to have a career with a future.

The alumni association is a network for former Job Corps students who meet to contribute ideas about employment and education and spread the word about Job Corps throughout the community.

Johnny Byrd, president of the Manhattan chapter of the NJCAA, said Job Corps gives youths the chance to earn their GED and learn a new trade so they will be accepted in the community.

"My life was no different than from these kids," Byrd said. "Now I can be there to listen and encourage them to put their backgrounds aside and focus on what's in front of them now."

With the establishment of this alumni chapter in Manhattan, former Job Corps students can provide the much-needed support to current students. They help to inform as well as mentor young men and women who take advantage of Job Corps.

The chapter is brainstorming on programs the alumni will introduce to students.

One of the goals of the chartering ceremony was to gain community support for the alumni chapter. Byrd said that, with this charter, it's easier for alumni to spread awareness in the community about Job Corps.

"The first thing people think when they hear about us is negativity," he said. "Society depicts at-risk kids as outcasts, and as alumni, we want to change that perspective."

Paulicia Gamble, vice president of the NJCAA in Manhattan, was only 17 years old when she was a student with Job Corps, and said she didn't have a lot of support from the outside world.

The alumni board will work closely with the students helping them in many ways, including job connections once they're out on their own.

"As an alumni of Job Corps, I can offer them someone to look up to and show them that you can do something good with your life," Gamble said. "I don't know where I'd be without Job Corps."

Gamble said that as vice president, she has a lot of ideas she'd like to see put into action, including programs that educate teen mothers.

McCulloh said the alumni of Job Corps are a testament to the organization's success.

"When you have alumni, you can see people's success," she said. "They bring a feeling of achievement and pride to an organization."

Fraternity fire proves smoke alarms needed

Early Thursday morning, the Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity house was damaged by fire. Fortunately, no one was injured.

The members of the fraternity are fortunate because their actions could have led to more than materialistic damages. They could have lost things that money can't buy.

However, their actions prior to the blaze were not determined by thoughts of safety measures. It appears they were just concerned with getting a good night's sleep.

A mistake was made — one that could have been much more costly.

The president of TKE turned off the house's smoke alarm as members prepared for bed. No matter how annoying a smoke alarm can be, there is a reason for it: to protect those living in the house.

According to the Web site www.firstalert.com, residential fires occur at an estimated rate of 2.6 million per year. Think of how many of those could have been prevented.

This serves as a reminder to all K-State students to have their smoke alarms checked to make sure they are working.

There is another, even more important element after you check your residence for fire safety. Once you have your smoke alarms checked, don't turn them off.

Wedding details overshadow true meaning of marriage

ERIN SCHNEWEIS

In eighth grade, I decided on two choices for my future in terms of relationships.

The first option was to be a nun. The following year I realized that was not going to work, since I liked the members of the opposite sex too much.

My second option was to become a hermit and marry a chef. The only time I would even kiss my husband would be when he brought me my daily amount of food.

It is a shame that the latter contained no substance during my recent questioning at my cousin's wedding.

At least 20 times I was asked when my big day was.

And at least 20 times my answer was the same: not for a long time.

It's not that I haven't had the opportunity to walk down the flower-filled aisle. It's just the fact that I have never wanted to spend the rest of my life with the person at the end.

Way too much emphasis is put on the wedding day, and not nearly enough is put on married life.

The focus is on the ceremony, the quality of the flower arrangements, the cake, the invitations, the dance and the honeymoon. Yet all too often there is not enough focus on the bride and groom as a couple.

It is a shame that the focus is on the six-hour event and not on the 60 years after that.

Far too many people overlook what the wedding signifies and don't think about their life once the china and three matching toasters are put away, the part where the compromise, unconditional love and working things out come into play.

Of course, I hope the day I have been dreaming of since I was a child will become a reality. It will be the day when I care for someone so much that I still would want to be with him when his hair is falling out, his hearing is no longer the best and his six-pack stomach has become a full-grown keg. It will be the day when his teeth no longer reside in his mouth, but instead soak in a jar overnight and I will still think he is the most attractive man in the world.

If I wanted to get married in the near future, I'm sure I could rig up something. There always is the possibility of becoming something as romantic as a mail-order bride. Or maybe my parents could purchase a huge quantity of land and animals to use as a dowry.

But the thought of being traded for an acre of land, six sheep and some weird animal like a goat with stomach problems and an udderless cow doesn't sound too appealing, especially if my future husband would think the animals and land were a better deal than the woman who accompanied them.

There always is the other choice. I could wait to marry someone because there is no doubt in my mind he is the person I was destined to be with: the man whose idiosyncrasies I find adorable, the person who seems to light up a room with his mere presence, the man whom I care for so much that I don't think it would be possible that anyone could have ever loved this much or will ever love again to the extent that I do.

After all, I don't think anyone could afford the postage rate if I was a mail-order bride. And the thought of searching for a goat with stomach problems and an udderless cow sounds too complicated.

Fans could learn respect lesson from Nebraska

JOSEPH HURLA

The fingers are what got to me.

When fans of the eighth-ranked K-State Wildcats cascaded the Iowa Hawkeyes — a team that went 1-10 last season — with boos, I let it slide.

When the drunken guys behind me shouted rude comments at the opposing players and fans of a team struggling to stay ranked in the top 100 in the nation, I ignored it.

When boos rained down on the referees for another questionable call, I booed, too.

But when a play on the field or the introduction of an opposing player elicited a sea of middle fingers — all attached to arms covered in purple — I realized that many K-State fans have no class.

Granted, thousands of them will travel across the country to Tempe, Ariz., or San Diego to watch their team take the field. For this dedication, I respect them.

Many of these fans then go to the game and serve as excellent representatives of the university, cheering for their team and treating the opposition with respect and dignity

Many others, however, do not. These are the fans who prove dedication and class are mutually exclusive.

Thousands of fans traveled to Kansas City, Mo., to support their team. Many arrived early, braved the heat and enjoyed the day, knowing their Cats soon would trounce the Hawkeyes.

And trounce them we did. Iowa could do little more than hope to slow the Cats down. The Wildcats proved why they are vying, year-after-year, for Bowl Championship Series games — even with a performance that was, for them, sub-par. They showed why they are one of the top teams in the nation. They showed that they are, indeed, the class of the Big 12 Conference.

The fans, however, proved themselves to be otherwise.

Few teams in the Big 12 — or in the nation — are as inhospitable as K-State fans. Most fans, while not giving the opposition a rousing ovation, will offer at least a smattering of applause. K-State fans offer only boos, shouts, jeers and fingers.

On the field, K-State is trying to lift itself into the same realm as its nemesis, Nebraska. In the stands, the fans could not seem to care less.

Watch a Nebraska game. See how their fans respond to the opposition. They know they are going to annihilate whoever comes into their house. They don't have to taunt them, too.

That is why Nebraska still is more well-respected than K-State. Most teams know they will lose to both Nebraska and K-State. However, besides being physically beaten against the Cats, they also must endure a verbal and gestural barrage from the 12th man.

Everyone else in the country can see this. That is part of the reason most people across the country still view Nebraska in higher regard than K-State. And as long as people prefer the Huskers to the Cats, K-State will lose prized recruits to our northern archenemy.

Under the direction of Bill Snyder, the K-State football program has taken astronomical strides toward greatness.

But Snyder alone cannot make the K-State football program great. He can make the team great, but as long as fans continue to show that they are not prepared for greatness, the entire program will be unable to take that final step.

So go ahead — give me the finger.

has been set," Seaton said.

Ambrose, a former K-State faculty member, is scheduled to speak April 19. The author of more than 20 books, Ambrose served as K-State's Dwight D. Eisenhower professor from 1970 to 1971.

Besides writing, Ambrose has served as a historical consultant for several films, including "Saving Private Ryan."

Seaton said he expected most people to be familiar with the two lecturers.

"In general, we hope that when a speaker is announced that people will know who the speaker is," Seaton said.

"If you are an informed citizen, you will know who that speaker is. We try to get a figures in public affairs that are extremely prominent."

Among the prominent figures who have been part of the lecture series in the past are Ronald Reagan, Robert Kennedy, Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford, Ross Perot and Jesse Jackson.

Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture series, said in a press release that he expects to announce more speakers for this school year as far as invitations are concerned.

Seaton, however, said scheduling the speakers is the hardest part to do.

"Getting a date can be problamatic," Seaton said. "There is a limited amount of time we can schedule people. We try to get prominent figures in public affairs. Both of them are extremely prominent."

WEFALD

adults commissioned by a nonpartisan organization, Kansas residents seem to emphasize the importance of health and medical research, with 96 percent saying it is very important that Kansas become a leader in that particular research field.

Wefald said this conference focused on prioritizing an increase in applied research at state universities.

"There is a need to increase funding for the research infrastructure, and the level of funding needs to be upgraded because right now it's rather low," Wefald said.

When asked about how crucial the issue of research overall has been for the state of Kansas, Wefald said all research performed at state universities always has been of the utmost importance, especially with increases in technology.

"In particular, the Department of Veterinary Medicine has played a role in promoting food safety, but the effects can really be felt all across the board," Wefald said.

As far as benefits for the state of Kansas itself, there can only be an increase to what university research already offers the state. K-State receives about $160 million from the state of Kansas each year to conduct its research, but the monetary benefits of that research is an estimated $2.5 billion per year.

"Basically, for every dollar that the state puts into research, K-State puts out $17," Wefald said. "With increased funding, this could only lead to a multiplier effect."

Some of the greatest contributions that K-State research has given to the state include agents that are used to destroy E. coli in meat products and a majority of the wheat grown in the state of Kansas, which comes from K-State wheat varieties.

If the three universities are given additional funding to increase research, the possibilities for the universities themselves are manifest in the attraction of new researchers, the retention of faculty members, and an overall increase in the excellence of the university, Wefald said.

Ron Trewyn, vice provost for research, said K-State conducts research in many fields of scientific interest including biology, physics and chemistry.

Also, in the Department of Anatomy and Physiology, Trewyn said a number of big projects are under way. Another area of great research significance is handled by the College of Agriculture, which has conducted a large amount of research in the areas of plant biotechnology and the food safety program in the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry.

Trewyn said any money to be spent on research funding would be well spent.

"The infrastructure for state of the art research is expensive, but we need to have a good infrastructure in place so that research can be conducted correctly and well," Trewyn said. "The inputs may be expensive, but the outcome will be of great significance."

for debate during Senate's next meeting. Worcester said further information requested by student senators would be provided at this meeting.

"I appreciate the concerns everyone had," he said. "The only reason I wanted to push it through tonight was to take it to City Commission."

Graduate School Sen. Ryan Evans said the legislation's intent was good, but he said more information was needed.

He said the proposal would benefit from statistics indicating the number of students living in rental housing.

Although the resolution was not approved, Evans said more information will improve the legislation.

He said he didn't want it to be adopted without proper discussion.

"This is going to make his resolution stronger," he said. "We want to do what's best for students out there."

The Manhattan Fire Department inspects all rental housing containing three or more units annually for fire and life-safety violations.

Worcester said the city, though, does not require mandatory inspections for all other properties.

The rental inspections would be in compliance with the Board of Code Administrators' Code. Students throughout Manhattan are living in unsafe conditions, Worcester said.

Most K-State students, Worcester said, reside in rental housing.

He said these students might not know if codes are being violated.

Senators were also concerned with the affordability of property. Worcester said the cost of inspections could be $36 per rental unit, which could raise rental rates by $1 per month.

Worcester said affordability is necessary for K-State students, but it should not be an excuse to risk safety.

Going for the gold

Shelia Burrell, heptathlete, has been training in Manhattan for the Sydney 2000 Olympic Games.

STEVEN DEARINGER/ Collegian

Heptathlete spends time in Manhattan preparing for Olympics

By JASON ARY
Kansas State Collegian

It takes a lot to be a heptathlete. Just ask Shelia Burrell.

While most sporting events focus on the logistics of one particular event, a heptathlon consists of seven different track and field events, each of which an athlete has to spend months of training on to reach a competitive level.

The 28 year-old now is training in Manhattan for the 2000 Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia.

Burrell, a former UCLA track and field member, has been competing in and training for the heptathlon for nearly 10 years.

Burrell's athletic abilities were obvious far before college when she was a New Mexico all-state athlete in basketball, track and volleyball while in high school.

Burrell also won state titles in track in the 100-, 200- and 400-meter events, while taking home the title in the long jump and high jump competitions during her senior year alone.

Seeing this diverse ability, UCLA began recruiting Burrell as a heptathlete, something that was quite new to her.

"I was being recruited by several major universities, but UCLA was the only one that recruited me as a heptathlete," Burrell said.

Focusing largely on being a sprinter, Burrell never had been approached about a career change. After visiting the UCLA campus and the L.A. area, Burrell decided to give it a try, enrolling in the university in 1990.

"The actual city of L.A. and ... the great tradition at UCLA appealed to me," Burrell said.

UCLA has been known for its elite track and field program, and Burrell got the opportunity to learn firsthand from two of its most well-known and recognized coaches.

Former Olympic star and heptathlete Jackie Joyner-Kersee and Olympian Gayle Devers helped coach Burrell in the javelin, long jump, high jump, shot put, hurdles and the two running events that compose the heptathlon.

Burrell said the advice from the experienced Olympians helped her become a top-notch athlete.

"I'm really inspired by Jackie Joyner-Kersee," Burrell said in a previous interview with the USA Track and Field Organization. "Whatever problem I run into, she's been through it and I can call her and ask her."

For nearly four years, Burrell trained and continued to improve as a heptathlete. Even with her gifted athletic abilities, however, Burrell considered herself anything but a standout.

"There were so many good athletes at UCLA with me," Burrell said. "I never considered myself a star."

Burrell wasn't discouraged being in such a competitive atmosphere. Through hard work and practice, she quickly rose in status and began to attract national attention.

"I realized that nobody cared about my goals more than I do," Burrell said. "I just had to go out and do it."

After a successful career at UCLA, Burrell continued her upward trend as her national ranking escalated.

"I'm really inspired by Jackie Joyner-Kersee. Whatever problem I run into, she's been through it and I can call her and ask her."

Shelia Burrell, heptathlete

In 1998, Burrell placed seventh in the Goodwill Games, and she went on to take first place in the USA Outdoor Championships the following year.

Her string of successes placed her as one of the top track and field athletes in the nation, and by 1999, she was ranked as the second-best heptathlete in the country according to the U.S. Track and Field News.

Last January, Burrell decided that she needed to make a move in her career — and life. After getting in touch with K-State track and field coach Cliff Rovelto, Burrell decided to relocate to Manhattan to focus on the only heptathlon event in which she wasn't ranked among the top in the nation — the high jump.

"Coach Rovelto is an incredible high-jump coach," Burrell said.

"His reputation, I'm convinced, is truly world-renowned."

Rovelto has coached many top-ranked high jumpers in recent years, including former Olympian Ed Broxterman, current Olympian Nathan Leeper and Israel's top-ranked high jumper, Itali Margalit.

While training has been intense for months, Burrell's daily regiment has been altered due to the Kansas heat, and the fact that the Olympic games are less than a month away.

"As hot as it's been, I have to either run early in the morning or at night," Burrell said. "The other night, I found myself running in the dark."

In addition to the harsh weather, Burrell is fine-tuning her skills to replicate the heptathlon procedure that will take place in Sydney.

"I'll do a mock-competition," Burrell said. "I'll do the 200, the hurdles, high jump and shot put, and then take a break. Then I'll go do the long jump, javelin and the 800."

This will be the order of events for the heptathlon in Sydney, with the only difference being an overnight break taking place between the two main blocks of competition.

Burrell will be packing her bags to leave soon. This Sunday, she will begin her long trek to Sydney, with several extended stops along the way.

Along with heptathlon teammates DeDee Nathan and Kelly Blair, Burrell will arrive in Sydney's Olympic Village by mid-September.

Not only will Burrell's teammates be there to provide support and praise, several relatives will witness her competition as well, as recent fund-raisers gathered the necessary funds to fly seven of her closest family members down for the games.

Burrell is touted as one of the favorite's in the woman's heptathlon, and according to her, she finally is prepared to go out and do it.

"When you're a track and field athlete, the highest level of competition is the Olympics," said Steve Fritz, former Olympic decathlete and current K-State assistant track and field coach. "People who work hard — it's nice to see them get the rewarded.

"She's worked hard, she's had a great year, and now she's put in the position to enjoy the successes the come with working hard."

No matter where Burrell finishes in the pack, she said she will consider herself a winner.

"Even if I don't win, I can't fail," Burrell said. "I'm getting better, and eventually, I'll get there. All I can do is get better."

Volleyball team to open with quality opponents

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

Unlike football, the K-State volleyball team won't be criticized for its non-conference scheduling.

The Cats' volleyball squad will be forced to prove itself immediately when it plays its first and second games today in the Washington State Cougar Challenge in Pullman, Wash.

In addition to the rigors of playing twice on their first day, both teams the Cats will face are quality opponents. K-State first must match up with Utah State at noon. Although unranked, the Aggies have been named a "Team to Watch" by Volleyball magazine. At 7 p.m., the Cats will face Gonzaga.

The next day, K-State will play two more matches, against Rhode Island at 5 p.m.,, and against Washington State at 9 p.m. to conclude the Cougar Challenge. The Cats will be tested early by the tournament, but the players appreciate the challenge, setter Disney Bronnenberg said.

"What I like about the way (head coach) Jim (McLaughlin) schedules our preseason," Bronnenberg said, "is the fact that it's very tough, and the fact that we travel everywhere and we don't get much of a break.

"I think we have to battle adversity all through the season, so why not start out at the beginning and really test our ability?"

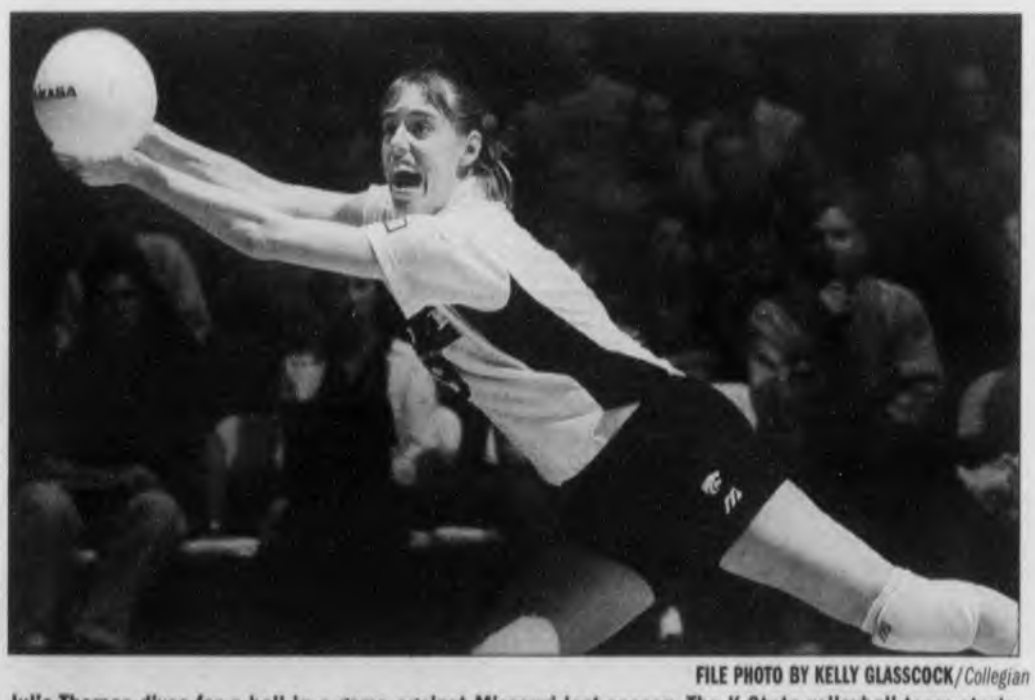
That ability will be tested not only at the Cougar Challenge, but three days afterward when K-State will resume its road trip by playing No. 13 BYU in Salt Lake City.

Despite the difficult early season challenges, the Cats are ready to play, Bronnenberg said.

"I think all of us are very hungry to get out and play another team," Bronnenberg said. "I think what we need to do is progress through the season. So, we're maybe not ready to play a championship match, but at the same time we're so hungry to play volleyball in another setting."

To prepare to play in a volleyball setting other than Ahearn Field House, the team traveled around the state playing volleyball, most recently in Marysville, Kan., Bronnenberg said.

"Jim mainly sets those up so we can scrimmage each other," Bronnenberg said, "and because of the different environments we play in during the season — Washington State, BYU, Nebraska — he takes us to different places in Kansas, someplace different than our own gym."



When the Cats' first match begins, it will be without outside hitter Lisa Mimick. The junior began preseason workouts with a stress fracture in her right foot, but it eventually broke and required screws.

Mimick hopes to be back on the court, but until then, freshman Kari Jensen will see the majority of the action.

Despite her inexperience, Jensen has played well, but she also said Mimick would have no problem earning her position back when she is ready.

"I'm sure she can step right in," Jensen said. "I hope I can do all right and help the team as much as I can.

"She'll be fighting to get back, though. I know she wants it."

Basketball team loses recruit on scholarship

By NICK BRATKOVIC
Kansas State Collegian

K-State men's basketball recruit Daryl Williams did not enroll for the fall semester and will not be a part of the Wildcat squad this season, sports information officials said.

Williams, as reported in the Aug. 29 Collegian, is a 6-foot, 5-inch, 195-pound guard who averaged 17.2 points per game at Pasco-Hernando Community College.

He was the Suncoast Conference Player of the Year and originally had signed with K-State last spring, but is not a member of the team.

The basketball program now has one scholarship open for the year, but has no plans to offer it.

Annual musical festival expands from traditional jazz showcase

By DAVID LAUNDER
Kansas State Collegian

With a wider variety of music taking center stage, this weekend's Cool Cats Music Festival promises to entertain people of all ages.

The annual festival, scheduled for Sunday afternoon at the Sunset Zoological Park, traditionally has been a showcase for jazz music. This year, however, some changes are being made.

"We've found that jazz has been successful in the past, but we want to incorporate different kinds of music this year," said Eileen Bauer, zoo marketing development director.

Bauer said the variety of music will be provided by three local bands: The Others, a modern rock band; Claddagh Ring, an Irish Celtic band; and Standard Time, a jazz band.

Between band performances, Bauer said storyteller Rosemary Cutrer will be entertaining the crowd.

"This will give people with families something to do in between acts while the bands are getting ready," she said.

Cutrer is not the only family-oriented attraction being added to this year's venue. Bauer said face-painting booths will be set up throughout the day.

"We're trying to make this year's festival more family-friendly," she said.

Dennis Wilson, left, K-State jazz director, leads select jazz orchestra members Clark Terry, center, and Angela Hagenbach, left, for the finale of the Cool Cats Jazz festival last year at Sunset Zoological Park.

Everything will start at 1 p.m. when The Others perform in the newly opened Chautauqua Ampitheatre. Cutrer then will perform at 2 p.m. in the Wildlife Theatre when The Others wraps up its performance, followed by Standard Time at 3 p.m. back at Chautauqua.

Cutrer will perform again at 4 p.m. at the Wildlife Theatre, and Claddagh Ring will end the music festival with a performance at 5 p.m. at Chautauqua.

Bauer said the zoo is expecting between 2,000 and 3,000 people, but is concerned the recent surge of hot weather could affect the attendance.

"We're hoping it cools down," she said, "otherwise, we may not get as big of a crowd as we would like."

Pat Weaver, sophomore in mechanical engineering, said the Cool Cats Music Festival is a great opportunity for people to take advantage of what the zoo has to offer.

"It's fun," he said. "It's a good chance for the people of Manhattan to get out to the zoo and hear some great music."

Weaver, who attended the event last year, said it was a stress-free way to spend the day.

"It's relaxing to just go out there and unwind and listen to some music," he said.

Kansas City Renaissance Festival to bring 16th century to life beginning Saturday

By CORBIN H. CRABLE
Kansas State Collegian

The 16th century has been brought alive by the Kansas City Renaissance Festival for the past 24 years with period shows, food, crafts and rides.

This weekend, the tradition continues.

The festival, which takes place in Bonner Springs, begins Saturday and runs weekends, Labor Day and Columbus Day through Oct. 15.

The grounds are open from 10 a.m. to 6:30 p.m.

Amy Davis, marketing director for the Renaissance Festival, said the festival will have some noticeable changes taking place this year.

"One of our biggest changes is that we're returning to the reign of King Henry VIII. This is the first time we've had a king in four years," Davis said.

Previously, Queen Elizabeth I presided over the festival. Elizabeth was the daughter of Henry VIII, so Davis said the festival is a step even further back in time; Henry reigned from 1509 to 1547, while Elizabeth reigned from 1558 until her death in 1603.

"This year, Henry VIII is honeymooning with Anne Boleyn, who is Elizabeth's mother," Davis said. "We chose Queen Anne because she is one of the most well-known of Henry's wives. This festival will highlight the seven happy weeks of their marriage."

Weekend themes

Every weekend, the Rennaissance Festival will have a different theme. Here is a schedule of those weekends.

Saturday, Sunday and Monday
Irish Blarney

Sept. 9,10
Vintage Italy

Sept. 16,17
Eastern Escapades

Sept. 23,24
Mighty Scottish Games

Sept. 30, Oct. 1
Carnivale de France

Oct. 7,8,9
Spanish Armada

Oct. 14, 15
Oktoberfest Celebration

For more information, call 1-800-373-0357 or visit the Renaissance Festival online at www.kcrenfest.com. To purchase tickets, go to the UPC office on the third floor of the Union or call 532-6571.

Anne Boleyn, the second of Henry's six wives, was beheaded by her husband in 1536 for not bearing him a son.

Davis said nearly all of the old favorites that festival-goers enjoy year after year will still be present, complete with actors and actresses in period costume.

"We still have 'Get Shrewed,' which is a comedy show involving the battle of the sexes," she said. We also have a juggler school, where children and adults can learn to juggle, and actually get onstage and perform. It's a really active show.

"The most popular food item we've had are the turkey legs. Most people tend to enjoy the stage shows, but with some people, the one thing they look forward to is eating a turkey leg at the festival," Davis said. "Our crafts, from 160 vendors, also are a very popular draw."

Another returning feature to the Renaissance Festival is the Braiden Maidens, a group of women who braid hair on the festival grounds.

Last year, the Braiden Maidens were banned by state law from returning to the festival; the law since has been amended.

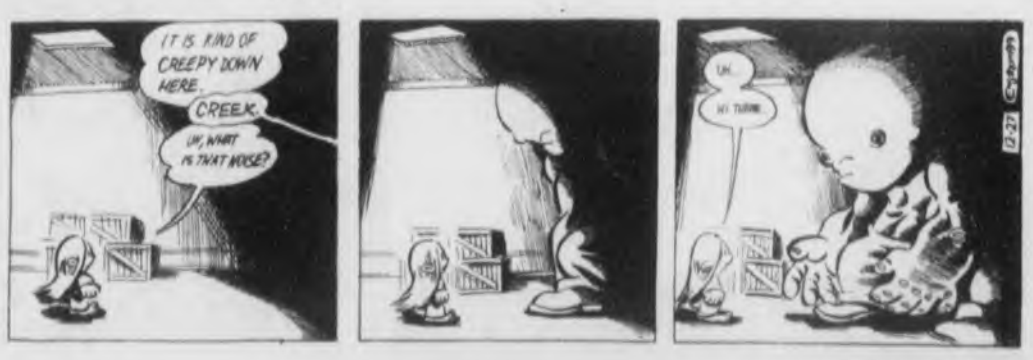
"They were banned because they weren't licensed cosmetologists, but now they're returning," Davis said.

To make ticket-purchasing easier for K-State students, Union Program Council, on the third floor of the K-State Student Union, is selling tickets to the festival at $11.50 for students and $4.50 for children, said Gina Kimble, UPC adviser.

While Kimble hasn't had a chance to visit the Renaissance Festival, she said she knows it is a popular event.

"I've never actually gone, but I've heard so many positive things about it," Kimble said. "Last year, we sold out of tickets, so they usually go pretty quickly."

Rachel Akins, senior in elementary education, said she has traveled to the festival year after year, and got to perform in it with her high school choir, singing madrigals.



"The first time I went was in third grade, and I've been back several times since then," Akins said. "I love to see all the people in costume."

Recreational Services' Office Located in Peters Recreation Complex

Recreation Complex

Some call it "the Rec" and others call it "the Plex", but the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex is the "hub" for campus intramural/recreational sport and fitness/wellness activity. Nationally recognized in facility design, the Peters Recreation Complex is air conditioned and jam packed with all kinds of cardiovascular and weight lifting equipment, plus gyms, racquetball courts, and other exercise areas. It also is the home to Recreational Services, the department responsible for administering all the programs and facilities. The Rec Complex is the place where everyone is going - give or take a few. Check it out!!

Get Involved - Participate!

Eighty-eight percent of the students on this campus and over one-third of the faculty/staff participate in Rec Services programs. Taking part and getting involved is up to you. Bring a friend or come and meet new friends. Bring a frown and leave with a smile. We have something for you! Plan to spend time with us every other day this school year and you'll be better because of it! Check us out:

Chris Claybon runs the ball in K-State's season-opening win against Iowa. Claybon had 10 rushing attempts for 60 yards.

WITH DAVID ALLEN ON THE SIDELINE, THE CATS ARE RUNNING

BY COMMITTEE

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

Chris Claybon hasn't finally arrived. He's always been here.

"Everyone's trying to get that 'finally arrived' speech out of me, and I don't feel that way," the fifth-year senior running back said. "I feel like I've come to contribute, and if my role to contribute is going to be starting on Saturday, then that's what it's going to be.

"I don't get paid to make those calls. I do what I can when they tell me to do it."

If Claybon doesn't sound like the usual athlete, it's because he isn't. For instance, he often calls reporters "sir," and he says he loves his father, whose analysis he awaits before passing judgment on his own performance.

"He's a wonderful guy — he shoots at me straight," Claybon said. "He was pleased with my performance against Iowa, but there were some things he thought I could have done better."

However, Claybon said his father sometimes needs to be reminded about how tough it is to play at the Division I level.

"That's what I've been trying to explain to my father," Claybon said. "In some cases, he thinks I should have been gone, and I tell him the guys are a lot faster, and some of the arm tackles you could run through in high school, you can't do it anymore."

That distinctive personality doesn't end with the relationship with his father, though.

After being pushed down on the depth chart by other running backs, senior David Allen's injury has given Claybon the chance to be K-State's marquee back.

Instead of jumping at the chance to prove himself, however, Claybon said he would prefer to remain in a supporting role.

"David going down is a terrible blow to Kansas State football because he's such a fantastic player," Claybon said. "As far as the doors that open up, that's going to be my role to fill in until he gets back."

Part of the reason that Claybon enjoys seeing limited action is because of his running style, he said.

"I'm a change-of-pace guy," Claybon said. "I'm almost better spelling another back, or having someone come in and spell me for 10 to 15 carries a game."

Claybon might not care to see more playing time, but the men who block for him couldn't be happier, offensive guard Andy Eby said.

"It's really cool to see a fifth-year senior get some playing time," Eby said. "When he came into the huddle, I was real excited and hoped he'd do well. I like Chris, he's an interesting character."

Although Claybon now has the luxury to wish for less playing time, when he first arrived at K-State, he didn't see any action at all. But he endured and waited for his chance, Claybon said.

"It hurt a little bit when they bring in some guys, but I wasn't always in a position to contribute," Claybon said. "I had some injuries to overcome and a couple attitude adjustments, but it wasn't difficult, because quitting was never an option for me. I was just biding my time and contributing in any way I could."

Claybon might not have received the playing time in the past, but he was still preparing for the time when he would see action. As a result, it wasn't a tough decision penciling Claybon in as a starter, head coach Bill Snyder said.

"I think what Chris has done is displayed patience and displayed a kind of deep-seated understanding that he's been here long enough to realize that things change in a heartbeat," Snyder said. "I am pleased with Chris because he had himself prepared."

Claybon might be prepared mentally, but that mental toughness must translate into yards for the K-State back.

His smaller, quicker running style worked against the bigger Iowa defense, but he could be tested by Louisiana Tech, whose defenders sacrifice size for speed, Claybon said.

"I'd rather have a big defense with guys that don't move so well, because the smaller moving guys usually present a lot of trouble for me," Claybon said.

But it really makes no difference to Claybon who lines up against him — he will just do what he's told.

"I don't game plan. I just run the ball," Claybon said.

Running back to gain opportunity on field

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

Josh Scobey is just awaiting his chance.

"I've been waiting on an opportunity," he said, "and whenever it comes, I'm going to take it, and I'm going to do all the things that I know I can do. It'll be really interesting to see when I get my chance."

That chance will likely come this weekend against Louisiana Tech, K-State running backs coach Michael Smith said.

"On the little run that he had (against Iowa), he showed some explosiveness," Smith said. "Josh adds a lot of bulk to his speed — his body's cut out of stone. He'll have an opportunity this weekend to show some people what he can do."

That opportunity, Scobey said, is viewed with high expectation.

"I'm a little anxious to get out there and get it kicked off here," he said. "I didn't get to do it like I wanted to, but it was just week one. "We're still preparing, and I'm still getting ready. We've got a long season ahead of us."

Scobey's preparation is one area of emphasis for head coach Bill Snyder.

"He's worked extremely hard at being focused," Snyder said. "Josh is right on the verge. It's just a matter of trying to clean up a few things in regards to assignments and understanding."

Scobey, a transfer from Northeastern A&M Oklahoma Community College, said he has some tweaks in his game that he needs to adhere to.

"I haven't been executing the way I should, and I'm getting that taken care

Injuries main concern for K-State

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

Injuries will be one of many concerns for the eighth-ranked K-State football squad this Saturday as it takes on Louisiana Tech at KSU Stadium.

Two seniors, tailback David Allen and strong safety Jarrod Cooper, are both improbable to play this weekend against the Bulldogs.

"With (Jarrod) and David, we're just uncertain in regards to the length of time that will be missed," head coach Bill Snyder said Tuesday. "We're pretty confident neither one of them will play this weekend. How far this is going to take, I'm not altogether certain."

Allen suffered a left ankle injury in the Cats' 27-7 victory over Iowa last Saturday on a punt return to start fourth-quarter action

Meanwhile, Cooper experienced a strained pectoral muscle during the third period of play.

Regardless of the injury situation at running back, Snyder said he will start fifth-year senior Chris Claybon at tailback for the Wildcats.

On the other side of the ball defensive coordinator Phil Bennett remains optimistic for Cooper's return Saturday.

"I'm holding out. Coop's a quick healer," Bennett said, "and he always feels a lot better than they ever project. He still thinks he can play this weekend, and I tend to believe Coop.

"He's just a tough kid, and he loves playing football, but at the same time, we're not going to put him out there if he's not well."

The Wildcats (1-0) could use Cooper's play in the secondary against the high-powered passing offense of Louisiana Tech (1-0).

However, Bennett said he's comfortable relying on juniors Milton Proctor and DeMarcus Faggins and sophomore Terence Newman to provide valuable minutes for the Cats.

Snyder said the Bulldogs can expect to see extra defensive backs in the game, especially during passing situations.

"Without divulging everything that we would do, you can rest assured that we'll have more than four (defensive backs) in the ball game from time to time — and I think we have enough depth to be able to do that," Snyder said.

Offensively, Tech is led by junior quarterback Brian Stallworth, who's remembered best for his heroics against top-10 ranked Alabama last season.

"The first thing in looking at Stallworth," Snyder said, "I look back at the Alabama game last year. He's the guy that comes in and throws the touchdown pass to win the ball game.

"Now, for a guy who's been sitting the bench most of the season and gets introduced in Alabama's home stadium with two seconds to go on the clock, and jumps in and beats what potentially become the No. 6 team in the United States — that tells me a lot about him."

Last weekend, Stallworth passed for 332 yards and four touchdowns in the Bulldogs' 63-10 victory over Mississippi Valley State.

"Brian is a very mobile young guy, and he moves around in the pocket well," Snyder said, "but even more than that, he has the ability to run the draw play. He's a pretty accurate passer, which is evidenced from last weekend.

"He's got a lot of positives going for him. That offense is one that a quarterback is going to flourish in."

That offense features a multi-playereceiver set, a scheme that is becoming visible in several other football programs across the country and in the Big 12 Conference as well.

"I really think Oklahoma kind of runs, basically, the same offense with a one-backfield/empty backfield set and a four or five receiver set," junior cornerback Jerametrius Butler said. "So the game right here is probably a preview of the Oklahoma game."

Second-year Bulldog head coach Jack Bicknell's offense utilizes a highly touted receiving corps led by senior wideout Sean Cangelosi, who caught Stallworth's last-second pass a year ago to top the Crimson Tide.

"They've got some extremely fine wide receivers," Snyder said. "That's where I think most people will tell you the strength of their football team probably lies."

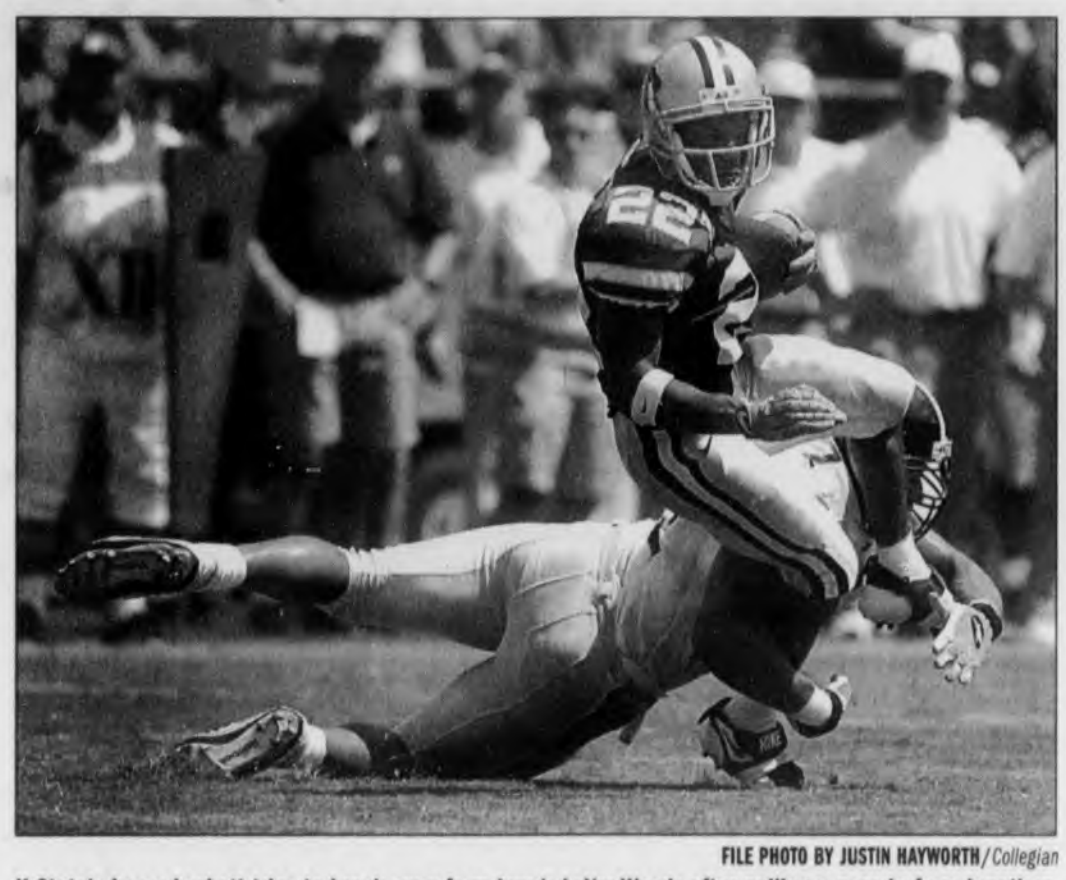
Snyder said the Bulldog receivers' speed, size and ability to advance the ball when they catch it will make for a formidable challenge this weekend.

Senior linebacker Jason Kazar said he agrees.

"I think their passing game is really explosive," Kazar said. "They can break a pass at any time."

That ability, along with a swarming defensive unit, has given Tech the ability to play tough against quality opponents in the past.

"I think they get up for games like that," Snyder said. "Jack's done a nice job in convincing his youngsters that they can play and compete in those ball games."



Although the Bulldog defense consists of a considerably smaller front seven than a typical Big 12 Conference opponent, Snyder is quick to herald the other skills that the unit exhibits.

"That is their philosophy," Snyder said. "They will give up a little on the size and strength side of the coin for mobility, speed, quickness and change of direction. That's the nature and the structure of their defense.

"It will affect how we'll approach our preparation for them, but it isn't to say that we see that as a weakness. Their philosophy is what impacts our preparation for them."

K-State will have both a 22-game winning streak at KSU Stadium and 53 consecutive wins against non-conference opponents during the regular season on the line against Louisiana Tech.

Kick-off is set for 6:07 p.m. CDT.

Lineman changes outlook on career after controversy

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

Thomas Barnett calls himself a changed man.

Ever since Riley County prosecutors dismissed kidnapping charges against Barnett on May 2, he said he has a completely different outlook on life and the game of football.

"I really appreciate everything a lot more now," he said. "I take it a lot more serious in trying to be the best player that I can be."

Barnett's charges were dropped after the alleged victim, former K-State running back Leon Edwards, failed to appear at Barnett's preliminary hearing in Riley County District Court.

The 6-foot, 5-inch, 290-pound offensive lineman was arrested March 3 in Wichita after Edwards told police that Barnett had forced him to drive from a bar in Manhattan to Wichita to reclaim a shotgun that Edwards had won in a bet.

Since the positive legal outcome, Barnett has not only worked his way back onto the football team at K-State, but into the starting job at right tackle for the Wildcats.

"He has, since that time during the two-a-day period, started off at number three on the depth chart and just worked hard with a positive attitude and gradually worked himself back into the lineup," head coach Bill Snyder said. "He has improved and has become a better player."

Barnett said he's not at all surprised he could earn one of the starting positions on the offensive line this season.

"I felt like I could," he said, "and that's the type of attitude I had to take going into it — to push myself to be able to do the little things."

The junior said he credits much of that improvement to the backing of his teammates during his difficult situation.

"They've been supportive through the whole thing," Barnett said. "When I was off the team, they came to me and showed me that they were supportive for me coming back and being a part of the team.

"That's been something good for me, to know that my teammates really are in my corner."

Although Barnett said his ordeal was quite frustrating at times, he said the entire Manhattan community remained very supportive toward him.

"You just kind of hope the fans and the people who appreciate the program would kind of understand you, kind of like your teammates," Barnett said, "and kind of be in your corner for you, too. And I felt that from the people of Manhattan and the Kansas State Wildcat fans.

"I felt nothing but support, so it wasn't as uncomfortable as it could have been, because I felt family support from the people around the community."

Snyder said Barnett did all that was required of him to return as a member of the K-State football team.

"Thomas did all the things he was asked to do off the field," Snyder said. "He took care of himself, did what we asked of him and worked extremely hard in summer program, the conditioning program and the strength program.

"He was reliable and dependable and was here working to try and put himself back in good graces."

Now that those good graces have been re-established, Barnett said he is relieved to put the entire escapade behind him.

Barnett said he hasn't seen Edwards since the incident, but has no hard feelings toward anyone.

"If I were to see (Edwards) and he had a positive attitude, I would have no negative attitude towards him, and that's how I would handle it."

Louisiana Tech's improvements lead to more national attention

DEREK BOSS

Looks can be deceiving.

Sure, an Independent team doesn't exactly instill fear in an opposing team's eyes, but Louisiana Tech could be a better football team than many have projected.

Although the Bulldogs have only been a Division I program since 1989, in that short period of time their development has been quite evident.

Granted, that development is only a fraction (a small fraction) of what the K-State football program has accomplished during that timespan under head coach Bill Snyder, but they are improving.

We're talking about a Louisiana Tech team that posted an 8-3 record last season and cracked into the AP Top 25 poll for the first time in school history.

It now is ranked No. 37 in the country with 15 votes, the earliest any Tech squad has received votes in more than a decade.

The 6:07 p.m. contest with K-State will also mark the fourth time in the past three seasons the Bulldogs will play in front of a national audience, as the game will be aired nationwide by Fox Sports Net.

"It's nice to see that we are starting to receive more national recognition," first-year head coach Jack Bicknell said, according to Louisiana Tech sports information. "But the bottom line is the polls don't mean anything when we step on the field Saturday against Kansas State.

"Our program deserves the recognition, but we still have to continue to get better."

Hey, at least it's nice to know they're modest down in the bayou instead of getting a big head from their "immensely high ranking" in the polls.

Regardless, Tech should put up a good fight this weekend.

The Bulldogs are amid an emotional high, if I can call it that, after their 63-10 season-opening romp over Mississippi Valley State on Saturday.

Not to say that Tech's last opponent was a quality program by any means, but I'm sure the 18,656 fans in attendance didn't mind seeing their team on the winning side of a blowout.

Especially considering the quality of opposition the Bulldogs have faced in the past few years, their non-conference foes put a lot of universities to shame.

After Tech plays K-State on Saturday, it'll travel to Penn State to face the Big Ten's Nittany Lions. But it doesn't stop there. The Bulldogs also have road games later in the season against the likes of Tulsa, Auburn and Miami (Fla.).

Then when you look at last year, Tech opened its season at Florida State. Enough said — it doesn't get much tougher than that on the road.

The Bulldogs did get spanked 41-7 in the contest, but I've got to give their program credit for at least scoring on the eventual national champion Seminoles.

That game was followed by a tangle with Texas A&M in Shreveport. It wasn't quite as ugly, but Tech still fell 37-17.

However, the Bulldogs' only other loss would come in the final game of the season, a 45-19 defeat at the hands of USC.

In between the Aggie and Trojan contests, Tech reeled off eight straight victories, including a memorable one in Birmingham, Ala., on Sept. 18.

Here's a quick flashback:

The Bulldogs trail by six with only two seconds remaining, their star quarterback Tim Rattay is out of the game, and they're facing fourth-and-26.

It all comes down to back-up quarterback Brian Stallworth.

A desperation heave to the end zone finds the hands of wideout Sean Cangelost to stun the Crimson Tide, 29-28, in the final game of the century in historic Legion Field.

Let's just hope Tech's Bicknell doesn't have any more of that kind of magic up his sleeve this weekend.

My guess is he won't.

K-State, despite its shaky performance against unranked Iowa last weekend, should be in near-season form when it kicks off with the Bulldogs. Expect Tech to play tough in the first quarter, but the Cats' depth on both sides of the football should prove the difference.

As for the Bulldogs' heralded Multiple I offense featuring multiple receiver sets, K-State's secondary should be up to the challenge, even if the Cats are without senior strong safety Jarrod Cooper.

If anything, Louisiana Tech's offensive sets should be a nice preview of other Big 12 teams, such as Oklahoma and Texas Tech, which K-State will face in October.

So even though Cat fans might be looking past the Bulldogs this weekend, let me assure you that Snyder and K-State won't make that mistake.

La Tech has potential; it'll just be a matter of the Cats not letting that potential develop itself on the field.

McGraw adds skill, agility to football team

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

If Jon McGraw had a theme song, it might be the music from "Jaws."

Like his biting, bloodletting counterpart, McGraw, a junior free safety, has been known to sneak up on opponents and take them down hard.

"He likes to hit, and he's a real big safety," cornerback Jerametrius Butler said, laughing.

The same words were quite applicable in Kansas City, Mo., on Saturday. One play against Iowa with running back Kahlil Hill typified the kind of attitude that McGraw brings to the game, defensive coordinator Phil Bennett said.

"At one point, when they got the ball after a turnover, we ran a blitz, and Hill ran a quick slant and Jon really did a nice job," Bennett said. "He dug him up and got the ball out — on a crucial third down, too."

In addition to his brawn, McGraw also adds brains to the defensive unit, Butler said.

"He's real smart back there, too," Butler said. "He knows a lot of offense because he played receiver. He knows a lot of offensive schemes."

That talent and attitude will be in demand Saturday when a gunslinging Louisiana Tech team comes to town. Their five receiver sets are sure to test any defensive secondary, but K-State's defensive backs aren't nervous, McGraw said.

"Defensive backs kind of take it personal when a team comes in thinking they can throw it around wherever they want to," McGraw said. "It makes us get up for it."

The Cats will have to be up for Louisiana Tech, which has faced tough defenses before.

Last year, the Bulldogs went on the road to top-10 Alabama and came back with a 29-28 victory. Last week, Tech racked up 552 yards of total offense and 63 points on Mississippi Valley State.

The K-State secondary will have its hands full, McGraw said.

Jon McGraw comes to assist Monty Beisel on a tackle during the Eddie Robinson Classic in Kansas City, Mo., last week. The secondary should see more action this weekend with the pass-prone Louisiana Tech coming into town. "I think it's a great opportunity for our defense to show off what we're all about," McGraw said.

FILE PHOTO BY JUSTIN HAYWORTH/ Collegian

"They have just a great receiving corps, really good size, and pretty good speed for that size as well," McGraw said. "When a team throws that much, probability says they're going to complete more passes."

More passing attempts is good for K-State, however, he said.

"I think it's a great opportunity for our defense to show off what we're all about," McGraw said. "We're going to get a lot of opportunities to make big plays."

In effect, McGraw will be a busy man in what is just his second collegiate start. McGraw and the entire defensive backfield will be under even more pressure from the uncertain status of Jarrod Cooper. The senior strong safety strained a pectoral muscle against Iowa and is questionable against Louisiana Tech.

The possible loss of Cooper is tough, but so is the entire secondary, which seems to have adopted the same attitude as McGraw.

This year's backfield is at least as good, if not better, than last year's squad which helped make K-State first in the nation in pass efficiency defense, McGraw said.

"We're a little more aggressive as far as getting to the ball," McGraw said. "I really don't see a huge difference from last year's secondary. I think we're going to be right where we were last year."

Actually, the only difference between this year and last is McGraw, who replaced the graduated Lamar Chapman. Even though Chapman was first team All-Big 12, McGraw filled the position well against Iowa, doing so with his own brand of football, Bennett said.

"He's probably more physical than Lamar is," he said. "I thought he played with confidence."

of," Scobey said. "Coach Snyder evidently didn't think it was the right time to put me out there in those types of situations (against Iowa), so I'm getting myself ready, I'm focused and I will be ready."

Scobey saw limited action in the Wildcats' 27-7 victory over the Hawkeyes last Saturday, rushing three times for five yards in the contest.

However, the 6-foot, 205-pound tailback will be relied on this weekend, Smith said, to help fill the void left by senior starter David Allen, who is expected to be sidelined after suffering an ankle injury against Iowa.

"Unfortunately, it's a bad thing that David had to start the season off like that," Scobey said, "but me and Chris (Claybon) and some of the younger guys are going to pick up the slack. We're going to really get it going."

Claybon, Saturday's starting tailback against Louisiana Tech, has no doubt Scobey can provide a spark in the Wildcat rushing attack.

"He's a smart kid, and he's a great athlete," Claybon said. "That also can make up for some of the mistakes, being such an athlete like that, and he's going to do some things for this Wildcat football team."

That kind of steady contribution is what Scobey said he hopes to bring to the Cat offense while completing his transition to the Division I level.

Nevertheless, with his limited playing time against Iowa, the Oklahoma City native said he had mixed feelings about his season opener as a Wildcat.

"I can't really say that it was so bad that I got to 'watch' my first game," Scobey said, "but I can't really say that it was good, because I think I needed some game experience. But like I said, we've got a long season ahead of us and I think I'll have all the opportunities I want."

Those opportunities originated last weekend in Arrowhead Stadium, as Scobey got his first taste of the atmosphere surrounding K-State football.

"I was really pumped. It was beautiful out there to see the sea of purple and what everybody always talked about," he said. "It's just a dream come true. It's something I've always been dreaming about — being a Wildcat, having a Wildcat helmet on, and being out there in front of all those fans.

"I truly, truly feel fortunate to just be able to be on this team, to be out there and to experience and be able to play the first game in the new millennium."

Josh Scobey tries to break away from the grasp of Iowa's Ryan Hansen during the Eddie Robinson Classic in Kansas City, Mo. Scobey, with Chris Claybon, will be in the backfield filling in for the injured David Allen.

Scobey said transferring to K-State was a decision he'll never regret.

"I've had some ups and downs since I've been here," he said. "Everything is not always going to go smoothly as you always plan it be, but I've never ever looked back and said, 'Hey, man, I shouldn't have came here.'

"I still believe my future's here. I want to be a part of this program. I want to do great things for this program, and I'm going to do great things. I've never second-questioned myself about coming here — never."

Football pregame excites Wildcats

Those beaming with purple pride have a chance to socialize before the football home opener this Saturday at the annual Catbacker tailgate party.

Dianna Philippi, office specialist for development, said the atmosphere is what makes the event a success and gets fans ready for the game.

"It just gets people kind of in the game mode," Philippi said.

The festivities will be from 2 to 5 p.m. in Cat Town, the area between the reserved parking lot and the baseball field. The event is free, but for the buffet line there is a $10 fee. There is a beer garden for adults and a separate area filled with games and prizes set aside for children.

From 3 to 4 p.m., Willie the Wildcat will be there to pump up the crowd.

Performing at the event is Drive South, a band from Wamego.

Lon Floyd, director of Catbacker club, said people can have their picture taken in a 1934 purple and white Roadster.

Bill Roenne, owner of Monarch Portraits, said his staff will be on hand to take professional pictures.

"This is the first year for us to do this. We are going to play it by ear," [illegible]ne said. "We are very excited about this."

There will be inexpensive photo packages for people to chose from, he said. The pictures will be available at the ticket office in two to three weeks.

There also will be a donation drawing at the event.

Some of the prizes from the drawing include two season east side chairbacks for the game that day; two season chair backs for basketball; round-trip airfare, motel and game tickets to the Colorado game; three days and two nights in Las Vegas, complete with round trip airfare and motel; a solid oak football autographed by Coach Bill Snyder; and two east-side chairs for the Nebraska game, complete with an overnight stay at the Holiday Inn with breakfast buffet.

Also up for the drawing is a 360-degree picture of the stadium before the K-State vs. Kansas football game last year, autographed by Snyder.

Amid corn stalks more than seven feet high, Jill Szynskie eventually found her way. Not before running into a few obstacles, of course.

"We hit a couple dead ends — we had to backtrack a few times," she said. "You think you're in one place, and then you realize, 'Oh, wait, you're really over here.'"

Szynskie, junior in public relations, said it took her about 45 minutes to complete the Powercat Corn Maze, located west of town on Fort Riley Boulevard and Stagg Hill Road.

The corn maze opened over the weekend to crowds slightly lower than expected, most likely due to the heat, Brent Martisko, co-owner of the maze, said.

"We've had about 300 out here," he said. "The heat's definitely affecting us."

Martisko, who owns an eagle corn maze in Buhler, Kan., said it attracted 4,000 visitors in only five weekends last year.

Manhattan's maze should get busier within the next couple of weeks, he said.

"The people who've been out here said they really enjoyed it," he said. "Other people have said as soon as it's not 110 degrees they'll come out."

Martisko, along with Danny Rogers, K-State professor of biological and agricultural engineering, owns the maze. The two began working together last spring when Rogers mentioned he had wanted to start a maze in the area. Martisko decided to begin work on his second maze.

KEEPING COOL

Manhattan residents relax to live performances

■ Sunset Zoological Park site of Cool Cats Music Festival Sunday.

By JJ DUNCAN
Kansas State Collegian

With jazz in the air and the hot sun on her reclined body, Adrienne Leslie-Toogood was just one person who could tell you not to be fooled by the name of the Cool Cats Music Festival.

No one who attended Sunday knew if the bands or the weather were hotter.

"Being able to listen to jazz music on a day when it's sunny out with a beautiful background, you couldn't ask for much more," Leslie-Toogood, intern in psychology, said.

Sunset Zoological Park was filled with families, music and cold drinks as the festival progressed throughout the day. Temperatures that climbed above 100 degrees might have made the make-up on the children's painted faces run, but bands such as The Others, Standard Time and Claddagh Ring performed for those willing to brave the heat.

Jazz wasn't the only type of music available for the audience, though, which made this year's festival a landmark. This was the first year it hadn't been an all-jazz show. Claddagh Ring was an attraction for the end of the day with its Celtic music style, Eileen Bauer, zoo marketing director, said.

The Others, an alternative rock band, kicked off the event. Ben Schardein, guitarist and singer, said The Others had been looking forward to performing at the music festival.

Seth Bitikofer watches Rosemary Cutrer, a professional storyteller, Sunday afternoon at Sunset Zoological Park. Cutrer performed for the children twice during the Cool Cats Jazz Festival.

"It's fun to come out to the zoo and play because it's a good cause and it's a unique setting," he said.

The festival, sponsored by KBLS-FM 102.5 and Cox Communications, had different types of music this year to appeal to more of a family audience, Bauer said, and it is planning to stay that way for at least a couple of years.

To continue the tradition of jazz at the festival, the group Standard Time laid down some lazy-day jazz tunes with plenty of solo time for each musician to show off their prowess. Guitarist Wayne Goins, director of K-State's jazz program, said the group mainly plays campus functions, so the music festival was a welcome change of pace.

"What's nice about this is that we get a chance to perform publicly for the Manhattan community, which we always enjoy," Goins said. "We look forward to doing it again next year."

Between bands, children could have their face painted like their favorite zoo animal, and families could take in the performance of storyteller Rosemary Cutrer. Cutrer, who has a degree in theater, said this was an enjoyable first time performing at the festival.

"Getting ready for this kind of festival is more fun than some other events because I already have a wide repertoire of animal stories that I love telling," Cutrer said.

The storyteller was just one of the ways the festival was aiming toward the family audience. The changes to the festival made it an exciting year, Bauer said.

Even though a mist tent was provided throughout the day for the heated attendees, Lisa Riecker, senior in geography, said it appeared that attendance may have been hurt by the high temperatures.

Riecker, a volunteer for the zoo, said it was too bad the heat affected the attendance because the festival boasted quality entertainment.

"People don't often get to hear such a variety of music in one setting. You can please a lot of people at once and people get to experience more color in the music," she said.

Workshop helps create résumés

By MAGGIE BLUNK

Trying to look attractive on a piece of paper can be a struggle, especially if you want to impress a future employer.

Career and Employment Services will be teaching students how to build an impressive resume at 5 p.m. today in Union 212.

Tim Henderson, assistant director of Career and Employment Services, said the résumé-building workshop gives students a good sense of how to start and develop their resume.

"The workshop is a great introduction for students to know how to produce and write their résumé and inventory their skills," he said. "We help students figure out the best format and content to use."

Henderson said Career and Employment Services receives feedback from employers about what they like to see on a resume. He said they also receive survey data from the National Association of Colleges and Employers.

"Employers say students are usually well-prepared. I think that says a lot for our university," he said. "A well-written résumé gives the employer a quick perspective of the student right away."

Heidi Wade, student assistant at Career and Employment Services, said it would be beneficial for freshmen and sophomores to attend, but most of the time upperclassmen come when they begin looking for internships.

INFO
The workshop is at 5 p.m. today in Union 212.

The next session will be Oct. 3.

"The workshop helps for future employment," Wade said. "It makes students more attractive to the employer and more comfortable looking for a job and talking to employers."

The first résumé building workshop was Wednesday. Lesley Adams, sophomore in restaurant and hotel management, and her sister, Allison, senior in marketing, attended the workshop, and said their experience was beneficial.

"I learned how to improve my resume and specialize it to the employer," Lesley Adams said. "I am hoping to perfect it as the years go on and use it to find an internship."

Allison Adams said she is planning to graduate in May but has never written a résumé.

"It's one of those things you don't do until you have to," she said.

She said the workshop showed her how to emphasize her skills. It also gave examples of different types of résumés and which one would be the most useful for her job search.

Union computer lab adds convenience

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

A new computer lab in the K-State Student Union is a welcome convenience for many students.

"I use the lab because it is in a central area," Dale Staten, senior in agriculture, said. "It is convenient to come to the Union and be able to go to a computer lab at the same time."

The lab, on the first floor of the Union in the Union Copy Center, officially opened the first week of August as a university computing lab. This means it is free for K-State students, faculty and staff and is maintained by Computing and Network Services.

"We are pleased with the success of the new lab," said Bernard Pitts, executive director of the Union. "We want students to know that we support their academic pursuit, and I think the convenience and features the lab offers shows that."

Prior to the opening of the new lab, the Copy Center charged a usage fee for for using two older PCs and two Macintoshes. Those machines were replaced with 10 new Gateway PCs and the use is free, due to K-State's student technology fee.

"Besides the convenience, I use the lab because it is free. It is easy to go and eat in the Union and then come in here and work," Amanda Pena, freshman in open-option, said.

The new computers are Gateway E4200 series, with 550 MHz Intel Pentium III processors, 128 megabytes of memory, 19-inch color monitors, 40-speed CD-ROMS and 250-MB Iomega Zip Drives.

"The students seem impressed with the new computer lab," said Courtney Oswald, sophomore in advertising and Copy Center employee. "The lab is usually busy because it is in a very convenient location. It is really a true success."

Also available at the lab is on-site laser printing, with both color and black and white available, and printouts must be paid for when they are picked up at the front desk.

The lab's hours are 7:45 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and 7:45 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday.

Mentally disabled men die from intense heat

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Johnson County authorities are investigating an unauthorized trip on the hottest day of the year that led to Saturday's death of two developmentally disabled men.

The men, Steven Warren, 34, and Michael O'Neal, 55, were supposed to be on a short trip with a 26-year-old caregiver from Community Living Opportunities. Instead of going to a fast-food restaurant, they went to Swope Park, where the men died in a sweltering station wagon.

"The trip to that area was unauthorized," said Michael Strouse, executive director of Community Living Opportunities, where the men had lived for nearly a decade. "The driver was acting independently."

Autopsy results Sunday showed the two died of heat-related causes. No charges had been filed, but the case is being investigated by the Johnson County District Attorney's office.

"There's a lot of work to do in this case, a lot of interviews to do," District Attorney Paul Morrison said. "We're going to check out the caregiver's story. We're going to be waiting on lab results for a while. Both of the gentlemen were on medication because of their physical problems, which can become a factor in this kind of death."

Professor to work with traumatized families, children in Bosnia-Herzegovina

KAREN MIKOLS/Collegian

Briana Nelson, professor of family studies and human services, specializes in marriage and family therapy. She will travel to Bosnia with other researchers to work with war victims and their families.

By MICHELLE BERTUGLIA
Kansas State Collegian

Going to Bosnia-Herzegovina to work with people traumatized by war was never out of the question for K-State professor Briana Nelson.

It began spring 1999 when Nelson, a marriage and family therapist and associate professor of family studies and human services, read a weekly announcement of grants for faculty. Nelson noticed an announcement titled "Trauma and Reconciliation in Bosnia-Herzegovina." At that moment, Nelson said she knew the project was for her.

Nelson applied for the research trip, but it was canceled. In spring 2000, the project re-emerged, and Nelson applied again and was accepted to participate in studying the effects of trauma on the war-torn state of Bosnia.

"To be recognized by the National Academy of Sciences is an incredible honor," Nelson said. "I did not really believe I had been selected until the letter was in my hands."

NAS selected eight professionals from across the board to work on the project. Nelson said the research group is made up of physicians, political scientists, occupational therapists, a psychiatrist and a psychologist.

From Sept. 16 to 30 the group will travel to Sarajevo, Mostar and Travnik. Working their way across the country, the group will meet with representatives from hospitals, community health care providers, universities, schools, women's associations and many other groups to develop future collaborations between U.S. and Bosnian professionals.

Nelson said one of her personal goals of the trip will be to try to put together the pieces of the effects of war in relation to trauma.

"I would like to begin to understand how the people of Bosnia have dealt with the trauma of the war and what has been effective in reconstructing their lives," she said. "I am particularly interested in how the war and post-war experiences affect the children and families of Bosnia."

Nelson is the only marriage and family therapist in the research group. Terry Nelson, graduate student in family therapy, said the selection of Nelson is a big deal for the field of marriage and family therapy.

"She was picked from a great number of applicants," she said. "Nelson being picked suggests a recognition of the field of marriage and family therapy when looking at the impact of trauma."

Bill Meredith, director of the School of Family Studies and Human Services, said Nelson's background will provide a special view into what the group is studying.

"The other team members' approach on trauma will be from an individual viewpoint. She will come from the family standpoint and assess how trauma affects more than one person," he said.

Nelson said this is first time she will be studying trauma on an international scale.

She said she is excited about the trip because for the first time she will be able to fuse the things she loves with travel and research.

"I love to travel and learn about other countries," she said. "But I have never found a way to bridge my personal interests with my professional work. The NAS program is a great opportunity to accomplish this goal."

But for Nelson, this trip is for more than just pleasure. She said she also is looking forward to establishing valuable international connections.

"I see this opportunity opening doors to expand my work with trauma survivors in the international community," she said. "I have never worked with a whole community who have experienced mass destruction and devastation."

New program encourages students' minds to wander

By JIM REINTJES
Kansas State Collegian

K-State students enrolled in Statistics 320 and 330 are encouraged to let their minds wander while in class.

A new program in the Department of Statistics lets students visit other planets via the World Wide Web.

"Students can go collect data from an unknown planet," said Lynda Ballou, visiting associate professor of statistics. "They get to pick and choose variables and populations that they want to study from. They can use it to analyze and to find the answer to the problem they are working on at the time."

The non-traditional classroom is in Dickens 206. Students sit at an eight-sided table with two computers per student.

"It is a non-traditional classroom setup," Ballou said. "The students work in teams or in groups beside one another."

Ballou said they began the heavy-duty work for the classroom in fall 1998.

"We did a lot of the designing and thinking in 1998," Ballou said. "We had a pilot class in the fall of 1999, and it was Statistics 330."

This fall, Statistics 320 and 330 are taught in this studio class environment. Ballou said the instructors like the classroom setting, and most students like it although it might take some time for them to get used to it.

"I think, as instructors, we all love it dearly," Ballou said. "It's the students who it takes a little getting used to, but I think most students really favor it. They like the team environment and working together."

Laura Fischer, senior in family studies and community services, said she likes the classroom setting.

"It's not like a traditional setting, and the chairs are so comfortable you can sit in them for an hour and a half. It's different," Fischer said.

Joel Groninga, senior in political science, said the fast pace of the class is a downside, but the in-class interaction with students is a benefit.

"It can be fast paced at times," Groninga said. "I think the benefit is that it allows you to work with other people. I think it is more real world to have us work in a group. You have to learn those skills of being able to communicate and coming up with new ideas."

Derrick Cline, junior in psychology, said he is glad it isn't a lecture.

"I like the fact that it is not a lecture. It's all on computer," Cline said. "I would much rather take statistics this way."

James Higgins, professor of statistics, said the classroom environment represents the changing business world.

"I think this business is switching from a passive to an active environment, and it takes some getting used to for the students, but I think it's a good environment," Higgins said. "The essential part of the course and what you listen to people say in the business world need, they aren't the sole player, they need someone who can work on a team, someone who can communicate."

Higgins also said writing is an essential part of the course.

"Writing is an essential part of what we do. I have the belief that when students have have something to write about, they tend to do well," Higgins said. "Writing about scientific concepts and terminology that make sense to statisticians and to the ordinary person is the highlight of the course. It is a different way to evaluate students other than a pencil and paper test."

Technology fee gives opportunity to be at forefront

K-State might not be on the forefront of technology when it comes to making sure the air conditioners work in all classrooms, but the university is on the cutting edge when it comes to other things.

For instance, students enrolled in Statistics 320 and 330 are embracing a new way of learning. It's safe to say that this new learning style is even out of this world.

The new program in the Department of Statistics allows students to visit other planets due to the internet.

Students work in teams in a non-traditional environment and everything is done on the computer.

Another positive stride in terms of technology is the addition of a computer lab in the Union Copy Center. Previously, the Copy Center charged students for using the four computers. Those machines were replaced with 10 new Gateway PCs, and they are available at no charge to students due to their technology fee.

Both the new atmosphere for the statistics classes and the advanced computer lab are just two of the advantages that K-State students have to benefit from. Since students have to pay for a technology fee, they should get everything they can from it.

"With all the highly intelligent people working on Kansas State campus, what moron filled the bike racks with sand that fill up my shoes every single day?"

"Ken Wells, will you marry me?"

■

"Have you ever noticed that there is no vending machines in the Military Science building? Like soldiers don't get thirsty, too."

"A big thanks to Max Urick for making it so that now only the big donors can park in the lot at the stadium this year. That's right, students. We are in the grass whether you like it or not. Thanks, Max."

■

"I've seen the grass on K-State campus when it's dead and I have seen it when it's flooded. I wonder what it looks like when it is actually taken care of correctly."

"Hey, boys, don't you know tight jeans make you sterile?"

Stereotypes, misconceptions are BARRIERS to relationships, understanding

ZAC COOK

"So, what house are you in?" the freshman new member asked my roommate, Ben. Her eyes scanned his expression, anticipating which house he might belong to and reveling in the dreamy thought that he might be one of those sexy guys from a certain house, or at least know one of them.

Coolly, he fired back, "Zeta Theta Pi."

Her expression instantly became blank as she rifled through her memory, thinking of all 27 chapters at K-State, knowing this had to be one. But it sounded strangely unfamiliar. She couldn't quite place it. Maybe it was the alcohol.

"Oh, well," she thought. "Sounds kinda like Beta Theta Pi, so it's all good. And he is so cute, too!"

Their discussion continued; Ben amazed her with his charm, and she left the party not knowing that one of the nearly 10,000 independent guys had just impressed the hell out of her.

It's happening more all the time, everywhere in life. Not the greek impersonating, but learning to deal with stereotypes. Diverse people are those who recognize that stereotypes are inherently a part of us and work around them. Evolution placed stereotypes in our biology to protect us from extinction but has yet to remove them from our DNA. They hang around, hoping dearly that when we complete the Human Genome Project in 2003 that we won't switch off the fight or flight imprinting gene that gives stereotypes their power.

In ancient times, stereotypes were essential for our survival. A child of imprinting, they allowed the human brain to classify and recognize dangers. The first caveman learned pretty quickly that all lions would eat him. Lion equals death. There just weren't many nice, caring lions who would be non-stereotypical and say, "Hey, little caveman, I like you, so I'm not going to tear you to little pieces and gobble you up for dinner."

People, on the other hand, are a different story.

Unlike lions, we have evolved into a planet of 6 billion souls who speak more languages than there are days in a year. Our diversity is unparalleled. Even at K-State, where most of the students are in-state dependents of Kansas taxpayers, there is great diversity. Translation: Stereotypes don't work here anymore. They are like gall bladders and appendices, children of evolution who have outlived their usefulness and hang around only to cause us problems.

So, for today's lesson. If you're greek and you meet someone new, don't ask the person's name and then, "What house are you in?" It makes it uncomfortable for some independents who think that when they reply, "I'm not in one," that they will be sent to Lafene Health Center to be checked for diseases. I know and I've been there. If you get to know the person and then find out they are greek, that's just an added bonus. You can't just classify everyone by house. There are no genus, species and subspecies for college students.

If you are independent and you see someone wearing letters, don't glare at them as if they're wearing a Nebraska shirt or something. Don't think that just because you met the jerk of Lambda Lambda Lambda, this person is, too. I've been there and thought I knew everything. Don't think that if you know the whole rest of the house, you know this person, too. Just because they are Homo sapien-thetachius, doesn't mean they are genetic copies of their brothers/sisters. even if they do dress the same.

And for both sides, learn to value individuality. Don't judge a book until you've read the whole thing through. There are no Cliffs notes on figuring out people. There are no shortcuts. Stereotypes just don't work anymore.

Finding true love can be difficult in Manhattan

CLINT MUDRICK

It wasn't so much a realization as a confirmation of what I'd already known. It occurred at a local bar while I was watching a group of girls dancing.

I stepped in between two of them, confidently busting out my freshest Roger Rabbit dance. The two gave that look that can only be explained to one who's seen it (and most of us guys have) and promptly walked away. It was at that point that I came to my conclusion: I lack even the slightest clue as to what females are thinking.

This event wasn't too recently — I've since come to the conclusion that, if you want to impress women, you have to show them a better dance move, like the Sprinkler or the Running Man — but the months since it occurred haven't helped me to decipher the mystery that is woman.

I often hear women query whether stupid pick-up lines, misquoted poetry, drunken grinding and stupid displays of masculinity are the best we guys can muster. The simple and damaging fact is, quite simply, they are.

Prophet and visionary Jerry Seinfeld summed it up quite nicely. "We men aren't thinking anything. We're just walking around, looking around. We like women. We want women. That's about as far as we've thought."

Having set these fundamentals of male idiocy, let us enter the three most likely and therefore most intimidating places for a college guy to meet a girl: in class, at house parties and in the hellhole known as a dance club.

The main problem with the classroom pickup is that, in a classroom more than anywhere else, signals from girls are completely imperceptible and most likely nonexistent. This, however, doesn't stop guys from thinking.

A head nod, a smile or even a yawn obviously means that a female is interested. If a girl looks your way, blinks and looks back, it's time to move in for the kill.

Unfortunately, when said girl does this move in a lecture room with 300 guys, all of whom are sure they are about to get digits, problems abound.

The alternative route to classroom dating — my favorite — is much more intense. In this approach, the male sits near his target girl for two months, intentionally avoiding eye contact and tripping over more words than Elmer Fudd when she asks for a pen. This tactic, strangely enough, just doesn't work.

The next hotbed of dating activity is the house party. Those that I have had the honor of attending, both here and in Lawrence, have brought me to the realization that these occasions undoubtedly are the best chance college guys have to meet girls.

As is always the case, even this diamond in the dating rough falls flat. While the dirty, drunken atmosphere sets the tone for a long-lasting, romantic relationship, the sparks that fly by night are often extinguished with a hangover and a look at the person in the light of day. Alas, if a guy can't find love at a rowdy kegger in a trashy house, what hope does he have?

For the guys who have given up entirely, there is always the dance bar. These clubs afford males the chance to pay an outrageous cover and attempt to get with one of the black stretch-pants girls who frequent the place. Whatever gave people the idea that a good way to find romance was with loud music and nameless masses grinding spastically against one another is beyond me, but that's another issue.

Again, we have two divisions of guys in this setting, and sadly, I fit into the former and more pathetic. This group decides that rejection actually is a problem, and thus spends an hour dancing behind and just to the side of a girl, hoping she will turn and initiate what will soon become a meaningful relationship. When that doesn't work, he simply leaves the bar and makes up ridiculous stories about the play "that hot chick over in the corner" gave him.

The other group — the group we all secretly wish to belong to — could care less how many girls give them looks of hatred. They will grind, get rebuffed and grind again. Eventually, after lowering standards immensely, they end up with a decent-looking (albeit not too bright and none too pleasant) girl, one they likely will never see again.

Once a guy and a girl hook up, they have one of two things to which they can look forward to. Either they get together and the guy can enjoy an endless supply of "does she look better than me?" questions, or the guy says the wrong thing, in which case he is permanently and irrevocably "a great friend," meaning he has all the commitments of a relationship plus the added bonus of sexual frustration.

What's my point? In all this banter I've rather forgotten myself. However, if there is a gem of wisdom to be gained from this column, it would be this: girls, be easy on us guys. We're trying, but it's hard to worry about romance when the only thought in our head is whether they are going to make another sequel to "Bloodsport."

But to sum up: if I'm right, and indeed males are so grossly inept at finding life partners, how do guys and girls end up together? Again, to quote Seinfeld, "alcohol."

Local animal shelter undergoes changes, renovations

By TRAVIS HOCHARD
Kansas State Collegian

Today marks the completion of $585,700 in additions and renovations to the T. Russel Reitz Regional Animal Shelter in Manhattan.

The staff will be moving into a new wing as the first stage of renovation ends and work on the existing wing begins, said Jim Steele, construction foreman for Sunflower Builders.

Lynn Schumacher, shelter supervisor, has been waiting 12 years for this day. She said she is pleased with the way things are going.

The new shelter will be nearly three times larger when completed and has many additions that will increase the likelihood of animals being adopted, she said.

"I think the new shelter will be one that our community can be very proud of," Schumacher said.

One of the new additions includes cat condos, which have Plexiglass windows to prevent visitors from petting the cats and spreading diseases. When people pet all of the cats, especially around the nose and mouth area, it is easy to spread disease. The cat condos also will include separate cubicles linked together for cats that have kittens.

"Overall, the environment of the shelter is more adoption-friendly,"

Lynn Schumacher, shelter supervisor

Other additions include outdoor playpens for dogs and cats, and windows that line the rooms where the animals are kept.

"This keeps the animals in higher spirits, which increases the probability of them being adopted," Schumacher said.

New adoption rooms also have been added. This gives visitors a chance to play with the animals before they decide whether they want to adopt them.

The overall increase in size of the shelter allows animals to stick around longer, further increasing their chances of finding a home.

"Overall, the environment of the shelter is more adoption-friendly," Shumacher said.

Separate rooms for dangerous and contagious animals also have been added. This helps keep the other animals in better spirits and decreases the spread of diseases.

The animals are not the only ones that will benefit from the renovation. Larger offices have been built, including separate offices for the managers. Before, the entire staff was crammed in an office the size of a walk-in-closet.

Other additions include a euthanasia room, grooming areas, large food cubicles and wheelchair accessible restrooms.

Despite hot weather and rain delays, the project is under budget and still expected to be complete by Oct. 15. It will be a completely different facility, Steele said. Only one wall will remain untouched in the entire building.

Campaign for seats in Topeka heats up as candidates maneuver for votes

By CARL MANNING
The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Two years ago, Democrat Dennis Moore defeated Republican U.S. Rep. Vince Snowbarger in the 3rd District. Now, Phill Kline wants to return the favor.

The bout between Moore and Kline, a GOP state representative, is the most-watched political race on the state's Nov. 7 ballot. It's on the "A" list for both parties as each pulls out all the stops to control the U.S. House when it convenes in January.

While that race is important, there's a host of legislative races that will determine whether moderate or conservative Republicans will control the Legislature in 2001.

Nationally, Democrats need to pick up seven seats to gain control of the U.S. House, making every swing district important. Republicans have a 222-211 edge over Democrats in the House, which also has two independents.

"The 3rd District is one of the few in the country where there is overwhelming Republican registration and yet the congressman is a Democrat," State GOP Chairman Mark Parkinson said.

The district includes Johnson, Wyandotte and Miami counties and most of Douglas County. The vast majority of the district's voters live in Johnson County, where Republicans outnumber Democrats 2-to-1.

But nearly one-third of the registered voters in Johnson County are independents — a bloc both Moore and Kline must woo.

"For a Democrat to represent that seat, everything you can think of has to go wrong, and that is what happened in 1998," Parkinson said.

In 1998, moderate and conservative Republicans were divided; Moore ran as a popular Johnson County prosecutor, and Snowbarger had lost his luster with many voters.

But Kline said there's no schism among Republicans after the August primary. For Exhibit A, Kline points to his endorsement by moderate Gov. Bill Graves and support from his defeated primary opponents.

State Democratic Party Chairman Tom Sawyer sees it as a close race, but one Moore should win.

"From the Kansas party standpoint, it is our number one priority, and we're going to do whatever we can to get him re-elected," Sawyer said.

Traditionally, fall political campaigns kick off during the Labor Day weekend with parades, parties and gatherings. On Monday, Moore and Kline both were to appear in the annual Louisburg Labor Day Parade.

The 3rd District isn't the only place where Democrats are waging war.

In the 4th District, they hope to unseat Republican Todd Tiahrt with Democrat Carlos Nolla of Wichita. Libertarian Steve Rosile of Wichita also is running.

"We are going to be competitive," Sawyer said.

In the 2nd District, incumbent Republican Rep. Jim Ryun is favored to win re-election against Democrat Stanley Wiles of Ottawa and Libertarian Dennis Hawver of Ozawkie.

The 1st District shapes up as a cakewalk for Republican Rep. Jerry Moran. He has no Democratic challenger and faces Libertarian Jack Warner of Dodge City.

Whether moderate or conservative Republicans will rule the Legislature will be decided by the voters. About the only sure bet is that Democrats will continue to be in the minority, albeit maybe with some gains.

In the Senate, Republicans have a 27-13 edge, and Parkinson said that likely will remain unchanged. But he said Republicans could boost their numbers to 30.

Sawyer doesn't expects Democrat to capture control but said his party could pick up four or five seats, most likely in open districts.

Another race where Democrats predict victory is against Republican Sen. Tim Huelskamp of Fowler. He faces Democrat Steve Irsik of Ingalls, who is well-known in the district.

DEFENSE IMPRESSIVE, BUT THERE'S

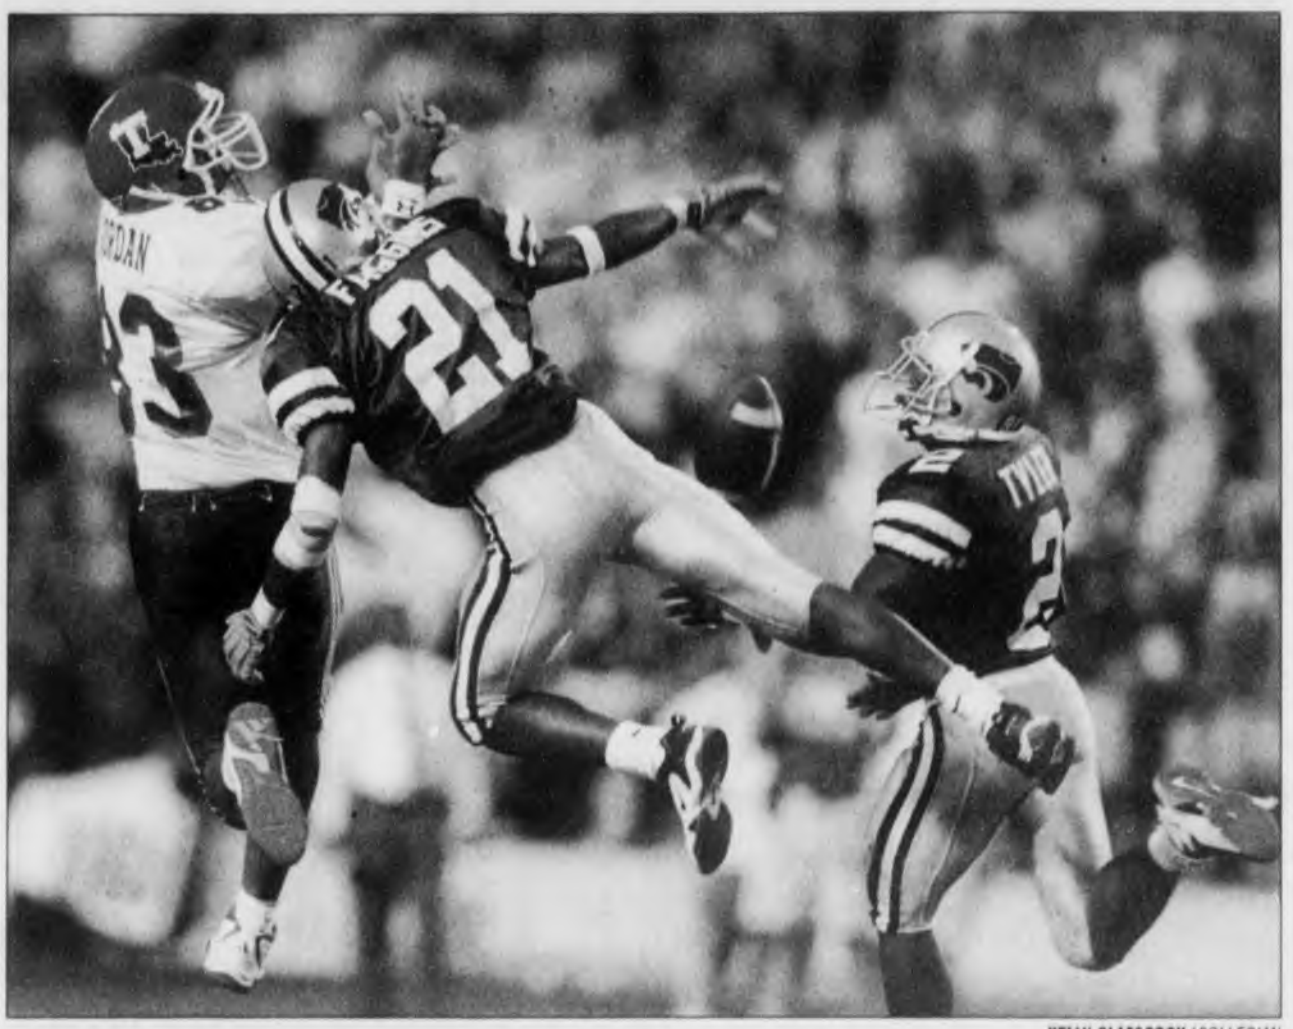
STILL MORE TO COME

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

K-State's defense gave up just 10 points Saturday to Louisiana Tech, team that had scored 63 the previous weekend.

The Cats' defensive backfield also intercepted four passes and dropped at least two more likely picks.

If that sounds impressive, consider this: K-State is expected to play much better, defensive coordinator and secondary coach Phil Bennett said.



"When you hold a team like that to 10 points, I think you've done a few things," Bennett said. "But as I've told the defense, if we're pleased with that, then we've got a long way to go."

Bennett is not a lone naysayer fighting a tide of purple enthusiasm, either. That perfectionist attitude is echoed by nearly the entire defensive squad, starting free safety Jon McGraw said.

"We were a little disappointed," McGraw said. "Ten points is good and all, but when you look at total yards and really get down to the details of their offense, we really didn't do a good job of stopping them."

The total yards given up by the Cats was admittedly unimpressive. On 54 pass attempts, the Louisiana Tech offense racked up 319 yards, the first 300-yard

WILDCAT NOTEBOOK

Bulldog blow-out
The 54-10 loss by Louisiana Tech was the team's worst defeat since the Bulldogs lost 63-13 at Texas A&M in 1996.

Heated conditions
The temperature at kickoff against La. Tech was 109 degrees, while the field temperature reached as high as 127 degrees in the first half.

Rheem moving up the charts
Senior placekicker Jamie Rheem moved into sixth place in career scoring after connecting on a 35-yard field goal in the first quarter, 29 and 28-yard field goals in the second stanza and three extra points for the contest. Rheem's 176 points surpassed Eric Hickson's (1994-98) 168 and put him 11 points behind Steve Willis (1981-84) for fifth place.

Lockett fills special teams hole
Lockett's 69-yard punt return for a touchdown was the first time a Wildcat other than David Allen took a punt the distance since Lamar Chapman returned one for a TD against Ohio on Sept. 13, 1997.

La. Tech gives K-State the big play
K-State recorded two plays from scrimmage that were longer than any the Bulldogs surrendered in the entire 1999 season. The 55-yard run by wide receiver Aaron Lockett in the first quarter and the 58-yard touchdown pass from Jonathan Beasley to Quincy Morgan in the second eclipsed the longest play against Tech last season, a 53-yard pass completion by Southern California.

Extending win streaks
K-State has now won 26 straight regular-season matchups against non-conference opponents and posts a 54-game winning streak versus non-ranked opponents in the regular season. The Cats have also won 23 straight games at KSU Stadium with their last home loss a 39-3 defeat to Nebraska on Oct. 5, 1996.

Secondary success
The Cats' four interceptions against Tech marks the sixth time in the past nine games that K-State had recorded three or more picks in a contest.

Numbers game
K-State is 59-3 since 1990 when holding opponents to 15 points or less, and 69-6 (.920) since 1993 when scoring at least 20 points.

Wildcats' size advantage allows K-State's running game to shine

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

Head coach Bill Snyder wanted to establish a running game early against Louisiana Tech on Saturday at KSU Stadium.

And establish one K-State did.

In K-State's opening 80-yard drive, 10 of the 12 plays were on the ground, as community college transfer Josh Scobey rumbled in from seven yards out to give the Cats a 7-0 lead.

"They're a little different type of football team, as we talked about at the beginning of the week, defensively," Snyder said of La. Tech, "because they play, by choice, with smaller players.

"To be able to put two tight ends in the ball game kind of exposes some of the smaller youngsters that they have."

K-State continued to exploit that size advantage through much of the game, compiling 267 rushing yards for the contest.

"We wanted to go downhill," offensive coordinator Rod Hudson said. "Well, they knew that and they took that away, and then what we did was change and started running the toss sweep outside.

"But Jonathan (Beasley) was getting us into those schemes, Jonathan was getting that part of it done. So that was really the telling story in that regard."

Nevertheless, Snyder commended the Bulldogs' defensive efforts Saturday.

"Now, they're excellent, as you can see," Snyder said. "They can run and hit you — we took some shots tonight. Some of the running backs doggone near got de-cleated.

"They will run and they will hit you, but when you can pin them down and run right at them, then they get a bit more vulnerable."

The K-State running backs won't deny they took some big hits against La. Tech.

Tune in to the Bill Snyder Show at 6:30 p.m. every Monday on Manhattan - Cox Cable Channel 8.

"I took a few. It's all a part of the game," Scobey said. "You're going to get some guys that are going to get some cheap shots on you. It's going to be that way, and I anticipated that it was going to be like that."

Fifth-year senior Chris Claybon said the smaller, faster La. Tech defense gave him fits, too.

"Every time I changed directions, the entire defense changed directions with me," Claybon said. "There was no against the grain. Every time I thought I went against the grain, everybody was going the same way with me.

"It's difficult for me to play like that. I guess if I had to pick a style, I sift and slash, and when guys can change directions like that, it's makes it extremely difficult."

Regardless, Claybon managed to rack up 121 yards on 21 carries against the Bulldogs.

"He's our starter right now," Scobey said of Claybon, "and he went out tonight and showed he could get the job done. So we pulled together, made a combination, and got some positive yards tonight."

That combination of two different running styles in Claybon and Scobey should pose problems for opposing defenses, Beasley, senior quarterback, said.

"Both of those guys are going to run hard," he said. "Claybon's a little bit more shifty. But Josh, when it comes time, can go north and south with the best of them. So, it's a great mixture having a shifty back and a power back in the backfield."

Scobey said it was extremely important for K-State to exhibit a strong running game against La. Tech with the absence of senior David Allen, who remains out with an ankle injury suffered against Iowa on Aug. 26.

"We wanted to come out and have a good night, especially for David," Scobey said. "We know that he really needs to be here, and one thing that we said as a group all week was that we're going to pick up that slack, and go out there and take care of the ball, make positive yards and run north and south."

Snyder said he was pleased with the way Scobey ran the ball against the Bulldogs, as he finished with 79 yards on 10 attempts.

"I think he's making the kind of progress that we wanted him to make initially," Snyder said. "And if he continues to do that, then every ball game, we'll give him more opportunities."

Scobey said he'll receive those opportunities

K-State volleyball opens strong in 3-1 showing at Washington tourney

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

K-State volleyball started the season strongly by placing second with a 3-1 record in the Washington State Cougar Challenge in Pullman, Wash., over the weekend.

The Cats rattled off three consecutive wins before falling to Washington State in the final game of the tournament. In what was easily K-State's worst performance of the tournament, Washington State defeated the Cats 3-2. The Cougars mounted 17 blocks and kept the Cats to just one kill on the way to winning game five, 15-5.

K-State might have lost to the Cougars, but it won its first three matches impressively.

In its first match, K-State defeated a pesky Utah State team 3-2, despite knowing very little about the Aggies, head coach Jim McLaughlin said.

"We didn't have a good scouting report for them, so it took us awhile to get our offense started," McLaughlin said.

Once K-State's offense got started, it sputtered a few times before capturing the win. In game four, the Cats allowed a 5-0 lead to unravel into a 17-15 loss, something that should not happen, McLaughlin said.

"We played well in games two and three and had a nice lead in game four, but we let up, which is something that we have to correct," McLaughlin said. "We weren't consistent, but we played well enough to win."

Against Utah State, two Wildcats earned their first career starts. Sophomore outside hitter Jenny Pollard and freshman outside hitter Cari Jensen both collected double-doubles. Pollard had 28 kills and 17 digs, and Jensen turned in 19 kills and 12 digs.

Setter Disney Bronnenberg also racked up double-double figures with 61 assists and 13 digs.

All three players continued their impressive play throughout the tournament. In the Cats' 3-0 shutout win over Gonzaga, Jensen collected her second straight double-double with 10 kills and 15 digs. Bronnenberg also notched her second as well, compiling 37 assists and 10 digs.

In the Cats third win, an easy 3-0 victory over Rhode Island, Jensen posted a team-high 14 kills. Pollard added 10 more, and Bronnenberg recorded 25 assists.

Bronnenberg, Jensen and Pollard were named to the All-Tournament Team.

The addition of Jensen to the honorary team is especially impressive considering that the tournament was her first collegiate playing time ever. Despite her youth, Jensen truly earned the honor, McLaughlin said.

"She converted on some big-time swings at some big-time moments for us today," McLaughlin said after the Gonzaga victory. "She has a gift — something you can't teach — where she delivers when the pressure is on."

K-State will conclude its road trip today when it takes on No. 15 BYU in Salt Lake City at 6 p.m.

AROUND CAMPUS

WHO: Carol Kennedy, Lafene health education director

KENNEDY

Carol Kennedy spends her days at K-State in Lafene Health Center, but she's not sick. Kennedy has been the director of health education and promotion at Lafene for 1 1/2 years.

As part of her job, she coordinates health promotions and programming on campus. She also teaches a peer education course.

When she's not working at Lafene, Kennedy works in her water garden and spends time with her husband, Robert, and her two daughters, Erin and Katie.

Kennedy, who graduated from Pennsylvania State University, said she liked working and living in Manhattan.

"I really like Midwest life," she said. "I like K-State because it has the athletics excitement of a college town but it's in Manhattan, Kansas."

If you have a suggestion for an intersting person to profile in brief, contact the arts and entertainment editor at arts@spub.ksu.edu.

K-State club teaches students at all levels of dance

It's like learning to walk again — only different.

"Dancing is learning how to walk to music," Josh Hernandez, instructor of the Kansas State Ballroom Dancing Club, said. "You find the one beat and learn how to walk with it."

Release

For those stressed out about school work and looking for an extracurricular activity that can serve to abate those negative thoughts, the dancing club could be just the thing.

"Personally, I think every college student should dance," Stephanie Higgins, junior in speech communication, said. "It is a release from stress and helps you forget what is going on in your life."

The club offers classes in different skill levels, ranging from beginner to advanced, and is open for anyone to join.

Instruction

Hernandez came to K-State in 1993 as a graduate student in rhetoric communication to coach debate. In 1998, he began working with the ballroom dancing club.

"I put the program together and it just took off," he said.

Dancing has been a part of Hernandez's life for a number of years, and he said he knows what it is like to be a beginner.

"I learned and went through some very embarrassing times," he said.

Since then, Hernandez has traveled to numerous cities and danced with some of the best instructors.

Stephanie Higgins, junior in speech, spins into the arms of Nate Kettle, senior in geography. Both have been members of the dance club at K-State for three years.

"I've seen the world champions," he said. "Dancing professionally and socially are two different things."

Confidence

Hernandez said anyone can learn to dance as long as he or she is willing to try.

"Once people understand the eight beat, they already have rhythm," he said. "They have to learn how to walk to the beat. It's a time to express yourself and nobody cares what you look like."

Higgins said skill isn't always the key to dancing.

"It's not a lot of skill," she said. "It's a lot of heart and desire."

For those just beginning to dance, Higgins said the program at K-State is a great place to start.

"Anyone can take lessons from the club because Josh starts at such a basic level," Higgins said. "It doesn't take an athlete. Somebody with two left feet can dance as well."

Attitude

Higgins said the key to be a good dancer is to have a good attitude.

"Dancing is a release of energy that describes the person," she said. "It's all about attitude. If you are convinced you are going to have a good time, you will."

Higgins' dance partner, Nate Kettle, agreed.

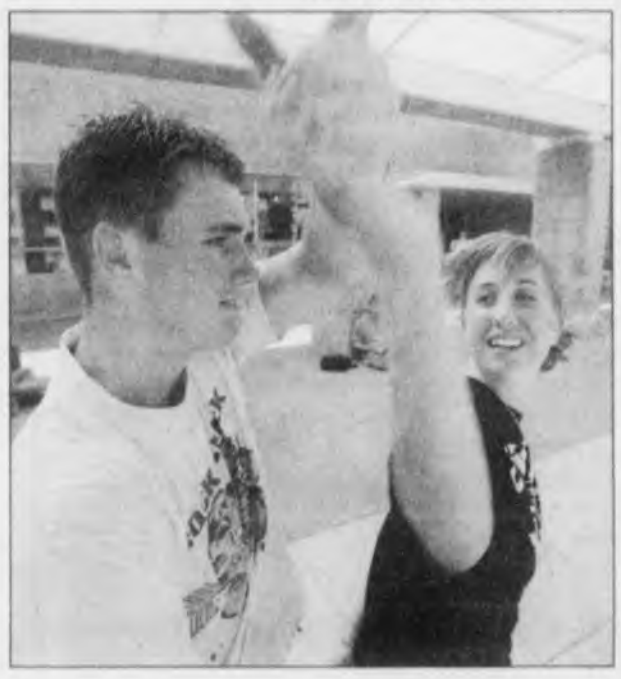
"I couldn't dance worth a hoot when I started," Kettle, senior in geography, said.

After learning more about dancing and developing their own styles, Higgins and Kettle now serve as assistant instructors to Hernandez with the club.

"I can't even put into words how much I've learned," Higgins said. "I've learned the basic steps, to being able to compete and to teach classes"

Kettle said he enjoys teaching others to dance.

"I'm an RA at Haymaker, and I convinced the guys on the floor to do swing dancing," he said. "It was great to see them have such a good time and to learn a new skill."



Lessons learned

All three of the instructors said teaching others to dance has numerous rewards in the end.

"After the first hour of lessons, you can see the level of confidence and excitement when people learn to do something they only dreamt of doing," Hernandez said.

Higgins said she agreed.

"It's such a release of energy, and I like to see other people having fun," she said.

Mike Hedtig, sophomore in speech communication, demonstrates swing dancing with Stephanie Higgins, junior in speech, for the Kansas State Ballroom Dancing Club.

For students who enroll in the semester-long class, a variety of skills will be taught. The cost for the class is $29, and in addition to the weekly practices, three additional workshops are provided.

"I created the program and offer additional workshops for free," Hernandez said. The workshops will be on Argentine tango, Cha Cha and aerials for swing dancers.

"Anybody and everybody is welcome," Hernandez said.

Competition

For some students who take the class, a more competitive level can be reached. The ballroom dancing club has had several top-three finishes in ballroom dancing competitions.

Last year, at the third annual Swinger's Ball Championship in Lawrence, four K-State couples placed in the top five. This year, the competition will take place in December at the Flamingo Studio in Lawrence.

"We are still in preparation, but I hope to have three couples take first, second and third," Hernandez said.

Even with the competitive aspect of ballroom dancing, Hernandez said the club doesn't focus on competition.

"It's not really about competition," he said. "It's about interaction with your partner."

Higgins, who competed in the Swinger's Ball last year, said she agreed that the competition wasn't everything.

"It was a really good experience to have to perform with the pressure of knowing that you are competing with other groups," she said. "But, Nate and I have shifted our focus from competing to teaching."

Kettle said he'd like to focus more on teaching than the competition.

"I will probably not take many lessons in the future," he said. "But, I will continue to share the skill where ever I go. I'm more interested in teaching at the beginning level."

Fun

Having a good time and participating in an active, social event is the goal of the ballroom dancing club.

"It's an excellent way to socialize," Hernandez said. "It's great for couples just to interact with each other."

Higgins agreed.

"Dancing is something that will stay with me for the rest of my life," she said. "Not as a profession, but as a social activity."

Want to dance?

Classes available are:
- Beginning club swing 1, 6 p.m., Tuesday or Thursday
- Intermediate club swing, 7 p.m., Tuesday; Advanced club swing, 7 p.m., Thursday
- New York-style salsa and Merengue, 8-9 p.m., Tuesday and Thursday

*class meets twice a week for salsa, but not for the others.

Fee is $29 per person. With this fee, you get the opportunity to participate in three extra workshops: Argentine tango, Cha Cha, and swing aerials. Classes take place at the International Student Center.

passing game allowed by K-State since Texas A&M threw for 324 against the Cats in the 1998 Big 12 Championship game.

However, K-State was close to having an excellent numbers game, Bennett said.

"I thought it was a game that, if we didn't have a couple of mistakes, we could have really played well statistically," Bennett said. "We played aggressive, got some good turnovers, which you have to do playing a team like that, but did not play every down as well as we should have."

Even if K-State had played every down well, Louisiana Tech still would have posed matchup problems. The Bulldogs' receivers were very talented, senior cornerback Dyshod Carter said.

"They were better than I thought they were," Carter said. "They have a great receiving corps. All of them, even the guys coming in the fourth quarter, did a great job doing their routes and releases. My hat's off to their receivers."

Part of the reason Tech's receivers were so tough to defend was their size. James Jordan, who led the Bulldogs with 11 catches for 119 yards, stands 6-feet, 1-inch high and weighs 232 pounds, and he wasn't even the biggest receiver on their roster.

"When a receiver is 6-3, 230, that's a big boy, and I'm not the biggest guy," cornerback DeRon Tyler, who stands 5-foot, 8-inches, said.

Despite their size, K-State still should have been able to defend Tech's receivers, Tyler said.

K-State's good-but-not-quite-there philosophy was typified by the Cats' first two plays. On the first play, Tyler missed a sure touchdown when he dropped a pass in the flat from Tech quarterback Brian Stallworth, but on the ensuing snap, he made up for his gaff by picking off a tipped pass.

The two plays combined elicited mixed feelings from Tyler, but the dropped pass was easy to describe.

"Touchdown," Tyler said. "Going home, calling your friends and telling them that you got a touchdown. So, now I can't go home and tell them that."

The fact that the K-State defense dominated the Bulldogs on their first possession is a credit to the Wildcat coaches' schemes, Tyler said.

"It's hard to read our defense. We have a pretty sophisticated defense, I think," Tyler said. "The quarterback knew he didn't have too much time to throw the ball, and he has to make a quick decision. He didn't see me, and he threw it right to me."

in time.

"There were some times I could've made some sharper cuts and ran through some more tacklers, but it's a start," Scobey said of his performance against La. Tech. "You always have to start somewhere, so it's a step, and I'm going to continue to take more.

"I want to take this process one step at a time. I feel like tonight was a great big step in getting things accomplished and letting people see some things, but the offensive line blocked great tonight."

Claybon was equally ecstatic about the o-line's play Saturday.

"The offensive line did a great job," he said. "I actually had to come back and apologize to them a couple of times that I should've been gone, but I ended up running into (Aaron) Lockett — he's hard to see."

Yet, Claybon also was quick to give the Bulldog defense credit.

"Some of those guys, I couldn't find," Claybon said. "I don't know if I need to have my vision checked or something, but they hit pretty decently and they stayed in the ball game — they didn't ever lay it down.

"They were a great defense, and I may have to wear a little bigger shoulder pads the week after next."

Claybon exited the game in the third quarter favoring his shoulder, but he assured the news media he's healthy.

"Even if I wasn't," he said, "I wouldn't tell you anyway."

caretaking of the field over the summer. They began planting June 1, earlier than usual, so the corn would stay green through October.

The heat definitely has not helped the land, but the corn, which still is green, has kept up surprisingly well, Martisko said.

The maze originally was to stay open until Oct. 29, Rogers said. The heat could cut that shorter than expected, but once the corn dries out, people still can go through the maze.

They hope, the heat will subside so more people can experience the maze, Bev Rogers said.

Szynskie said she recommends K-State students try out the maze.

"It was something different to do — an original idea," she said. "It was a lot of fun and just something to do outdoors."

For people wanting more of a challenge than just finding their way out, there are games to play while in the maze, Rogers said.

There are trivia questions to test people's knowledge on Kansas, K-State, farming and corn. There also are strategically placed hidden markers people can try to find.

Many people still enjoy just walking through the maze, though, Rogers said.

Martisko and Rogers said there are more things they would like to try out with the maze. Next weekend, flashlight nights will begin. The maze will be open for admission until 9:30 p.m., and the maze itself will stay open until 10:30 p.m., Martisko said. All visitors need to bring their own flashlights.

Szynskie said it is obvious how much work the maze owners put in to the final project.

"They wanted to see your impressions and why you came out," she said. "They were really excited about it, and you could tell it was something they had wanted to do for a while.

Farmers Market provides variety, atmosphere

JEANEL DRAKE/Collegian

Jessica Madsen, 15, Manhattan, works at the Manhattan Farmers Market on Aug. 30.

By CHARLIE MORASCH
Kansas State Collegian

Daisy Schalles was out driving Saturday morning when she had an idea. After a quick stop behind the Riley County Courthouse, she had picked over pieces of African culture, ostrich meat and hot pepper jelly. That doesn't include watching the five-piece band that was playing in the background.

Schalles was visiting the Manhattan Farmers Market.

"This is my first time here," she said. "I'm very impressed. It looks like there is good product and good workmanship here."

The Farmers Market is a biweekly event. Farmers and other small business entrepreneurs can bring what they have to offer the public, and customers can sample food and take in the market atmosphere. The most popular part of the market is the fresh fruits, vegetables, meats and other foods that customers buy directly from the farmers.

"It's nice to get good, homegrown products," Schalles said.

Another popular part of the market is the relatively exotic variety offered.

Patience Sama, freshman in biochemistry, has been selling items at the market for 10 weeks. Originally from Cameroon, Sama makes African clothing and an African snack food to offer customers.

"It's called chin chin," Sama said. "It's good."

Sama said she has enjoyed the opportunities the market presents.

"You can make and bring anything you want," Sama said. "People come and might buy it, or they might not."

Dennis and Jean Kuehler also offer a rare delicacy at the market, even though they come from nearby St. George, Kan. The Kuehlers bring ostrich meat directly from their farm. Although not yet offered in Manhattan restaurants, Dennis Kuehler said ostrich meat is popular throughout much of the United States.

"It's popular east of St. Louis and west of the Rockies," Dennis Kuehler said. "Last year, we went out east and sold a lot to restaurant companies and restaurants themselves."

He said the difficulty comes in convincing area meat buyers that people want ostrich meat.

"It's hard to get it in the restaurants in Manhattan and the Kansas area," Dennis Kuehler said. "We have one restaurant in Aggieville that's thinking about it."

At the Farmers Market, the Kuehlers and others have the ability to appeal directly to the consumer.

"It's been going very well here," Dennis Kuehler said. "We started about three weeks ago and didn't know how people would react, but it's been very good."

Last fall, Dick and Joyce Blaske of Blue Rapids began selling at the market to push items from their business, Harmony Hills. They offer picture

Manhattan warns of water pollution

By SARAH BAHARI
Kansas State Collegian

When Scott Lunsford wants a glass of water, he can't drink it straight from the tap.

Lunsford, senior in economics, lives in one of the 33 Manhattan homes placed under a boil-water advisory after their water supply was found to be contaminated last week.

"I got a notice in the mail about it," he said. "I'm a little concerned, because there's really not much we can do about it."

Coliform bacteria was discovered in the water supply of a subdivision located just north of Manhattan, east of Tuttle Creek Boulevard, on the north side of Rocky Ford Avenue and the south side of Barnes Road, officials said.

Sharon Watson, public information officer for the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said the contamination affects 81 residents living in 33 homes.

Coliform bacteria creates a good environment for potentially dangerous bacteria to live, Watson said.

"Conditions are present for serious bacteria to grow," she said. "We're not seeing anything like E. coli yet, but there is some type of bacteria."

The advisory went into effect Aug. 31 after KDHE workers found the bacteria present in the water supply Aug. 29, Watson said. The bacteria was first detected three months ago, though, and routine tests began.

Once bacteria like this is discovered, no formal advisories are placed until the results stay consistent for three months, Watson said. This is to ensure the results are not a fluke and to avoid false alarms.

The earliest the advisory will be lifted is Thursday or Friday, Watson said.

Until then, crews will be raising the levels of chlorine in the water to combat the high level of iron present in this supply, Watson said. The trouble is finding the right mix of the two components. When too much chlorine is in the water, people often complain of a chemical taste, she said.

Lunsford said for the last year and a half he has lived there, the water never has been high-quality, but he has noticed a different taste.

"The water wasn't very good to begin with," he said.

"When we take the dishes out of the dish-washer, there's a white film on the dishes.

"It sort of has a chemical taste to it — like a bleach smell."

Lunsford's roommate, Pat Paulsen, senior in secondary education, said not too many students are affected by this.

"It's mainly residential," he said. "There's a few other students who live out here, though."

Precautions

Anyone living in this area should take the following precautions:

- Boil water vigorously for one minute prior to use.
- Make ice cubes with water that has been boiled.
- Disinfect dishes and other food contact surfaces by immersion for at least one minute in clean tap water that contains one teaspoon of unscented household bleach per gallon of water.
- Water used for bathing does not generally need to be boiled. Supervision of children is necessary while bathing or using backyard pools so water is not ingested. Persons with cuts or severe rashes may want to consult their physicians.

Commission approves restructure of Amherst

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
Kansas State Collegian

Amherst Avenue is going to get a makeover, after a vote by the Manhattan City Commission on Tuesday night, but many area residents wonder if the change will be only asphalt deep.

As the gateway to the Miller Ranch housing development, Amherst neighborhood residents have had long-standing concerns about becoming the route everyone takes to Seth Child Road when the development opens up. City estimates project a 235-percent increase in traffic volume over the next 20 years.

In a 3-2 vote, with commissioners Roger Reitz and Ed Klimek voting against, the commission accepted a preliminary plan to stripe the road for three lanes of traffic, remove some parking options and designate the road as a bike route.

Efforts made to accommodate students

Heather Grace said being disabled hasn't been an issue during her five years at K-State.

"They try and make it so every building is accessible," Grace, senior in agricultural communications, said.

Fifteen years ago, Grace might not have been able to be a K-State student. Without any handicapped parking stalls, curb cuts or elevators, getting to class would have been a challenge.

"Fifteen years ago, if you were in a wheelchair and wanted to get across campus, you'd be in trouble," said Mark Taussig, associate of facility planning facilities.

Since 1985, K-State has made incredible improvements, Taussig said, not only to the curbs and parking stalls, but to most buildings on campus.

"Every year, there's been a lot done, so even though there's some buildings that aren't accessible, the amount of work that's been done is phenomenal. There are very few areas that don't have accessibility," he said.

Buildings that don't have accessibility include Dykstra Hall, the Military Science Building, Denison Hall, Bushnell Hall and the Ahearn Field House.

Dickens Hall and Forum Hall are two problem areas that are being addressed due to their limited accessibility, said Gretchen Holden, director of disabled student services.

Holden said Forum Hall, in the K-State Student Union, is accessible but difficult. Someone wanting to enter would have a building manager to unlock the first-floor entrance or to unlock and turn off the alarm at the outside ground-floor level. Once inside, however, the person would have to sit either at the back of the hall or right up against the stage because enough room has not been allotted between the seats and stage for wheelchair users.

Heather Grace, senior in agricultural communications, loads her wheelchair into her car as she gets ready to drive home after class Tuesday evening. Fifteen years ago, K-State didn't have handicapped parking stalls, curb cuts or elevators.

"It's what I call minimally accessible. You really have to know what you are doing and where to find someone, so it's really difficult," Holden said. "Why this wasn't fixed during renovations, I don't know, but I think it was a very serious oversight."

She said she receives many calls regarding the hall and its accessibility.

"It's a very tough facility to make accessible, and that's why I

AOL-Time Warner merger under renewed scrutiny

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Federal antitrust attorneys are prepared to block the proposed merger of America Online and Time Warner unless the companies agree to let competing services use their cable lines, sources familiar with the government review said Monday.

The Federal Trade Commission lawyers are concerned that in markets where Time Warner operates cable systems there is no other way for competing companies to get high-speed Internet access, according to a source who confirmed a story first reported by The Washington Post.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said discussions are ongoing between the government, Time Warner and AOL, and will continue until a compromise is reached.

Survivor of pipeline blast at camp died Thursday

CARLSBAD, N.M. — The only survivor of a pipeline explosion that killed 11 members of her extended family died Tuesday.

Amanda Smith, 25, lost her husband and two children in the fiery blast that engulfed the family's campsite near Carlsbad on Aug. 19.

She never regained consciousness and died at a Lubbock, Texas, hospital.

The victims were camping along the Pecos River in New Mexico when the pipeline erupted in a fireball and generated heat so intense it melted sleeping bags and tents. It left a crater 86 feet long and 20 feet deep.

A family member filed a federal lawsuit Aug. 30 in Albuquerque, alleging El Paso Natural Gas failed to comply with state and federal rules and did not properly inspect and maintain the line.

National Transportation Safety Board investigators found corrosion inside the pipeline had eaten away half of the pipe's wall in places.

Squirrel leads to fire, shutdown at Wolf Creek

BURLINGTON, Kan. — The Wolf Creek nuclear power plant probably will be out of operation until the end of the week, after a squirrel caused a fire that shut down the plant.

The squirrel got caught between two electric wires Monday, causing the fire. No human injuries were reported.

The plant should be operational by the end of the week, Wolf Creek spokeswoman Susan Maycock said Tuesday. It could be several days before plant officials can estimate the cost of the damage and repairs, she said.

The wires that electrocuted the squirrel were on a transformer outside the plant. The sparks caused a fire on the transformer about 11:30 a.m. Monday, but a sprinkler system extinguished it.

There is another transformer that could provide power to the plant if needed. Equipment necessary to protect the nuclear fuel was not affected.

The wandering squirrel apparently crossed more than a quarter mile of open ground, slipped through a chain-link fence and climbed a 15-foot metal stand to reach the transformer.

Wolf Creek officials will look at ways to keep animals out of the plant in the future, but probably won't do anything too expensive.

"It's a fluke," Maycock said.

The burned transformer supplied electrical power for the plant itself. Officials are looking into whether to use another transformer or repair the burned one.

No customers lost power because the plant's owners — KGE parent Western Resources, Kansas City Power & Light, and the Kansas Electric Power Cooperative — supplied power from other sources.

Accused meth maker dies of drug overdose

EMPORIA, Kan. — An Emporia man about to go on trial for many drug charges, including attempted unlawful manufactureof methamphetamine, died after swallowing $250 worth of the drug.

Tracy L. Dillard, 33, was found just after midnight Sunday, Emporia police Detective Lt. Mike Heffron said. Dillard later died at a hospital.

"The cause of death is unknown," Heffron said Tuesday. "But it is suspected to be a possible methamphetamine overdose."

An autopsy will be conducted.

Heffron said Dillard's wife told officers the couple were stopped by a Lyon County sheriff's deputy Saturday night in Reading. He then swallowed about 3.5 grams of the drug, Heffron said, and she later called authorities.

City prosecutor tries municipal cases, offers legal advice

By CRISTINA JANNEY
Kansas State Collegian

Michael Kearns, city prosecutor, calls every Tuesday and Thursday "the circus."

Defendants parade into city court — so many, sometimes, that they fill all the seats and line the back walls, Kearns said. Sometimes pounding and sawing can be heard from a nearby construction project. Court documents get passed back and forth over folding tables, like the kind you eat off of at church picnics.

The atmosphere is more relaxed in municipal court, Kearns said. He calls it a people's court.

Rules of evidence may be relaxed, because people are defending themselves. The goal is to get at the truth, he said.

The circus players are a hodge-podge of people: a young man in khakis and a tie, another man in sport shorts and a T-shirt.

Perry L. Oatis, of Ogden, Kan., was in court Tuesday to face a charge of driving on a suspended license. He faced the judge with his sunglasses perched on his head ready to defend himself.

Oatis was somewhat familiar with the court system after he had his license suspended for failing to take an alcohol-breath test.

He said it is cheaper and quicker to plead guilty, face the consequences and get on with your life. Oatis was ordered to pay a $120 fine, court costs and received a five-day suspended jail sentence and nine months probation.

People's cases are taken on a first-come, first-serve basis in municipal court.

All the crimes prosecuted in municipal court are violations of city ordinances. This includes crimes such as traffic violations, DUIs, misdemeanor theft, misdemeanor criminal damage to property, domestic battery, simple battery, noise violations or violations of animal control regulations.

working in the COMMUNITY

Who: Michael Kearns
Position: city prosecutor

Felonies and more serious crimes are prosecuted in district court, in which state laws are applied. The maximum penalty the municipal judge can apply is six months in jail and $1,000 fine, Kearns said.

Kearns is familiar with both worlds. He has only been the city prosecutor since December, but served as a district court prosecutor in Manhattan for seven years and a judge advocate general, a military attorney, in the U.S. Army for 20 years.

He said he was just as comfortable dealing with misdemeanor first-time offenders as with murderers.

Many of the defendants Kearns sees on his case load might never have had contact with the court system. They often don't have lawyers and might be confused and afraid, he said.

When he is not in court, Kearns tries to make time to meet with whoever wishes to speak to him about their cases.

"I am not in an ivory tower," he said. "I want people to be able to talk to me if I have the time."

He can't be their attorney, but he can tell them where he is going with the case and what kind of punishment they might face. Those defendants who face jail time and can't afford an attorney can apply for a public defender. Defendants can choose to defend themselves, but they must sign a waiver saying they understand that they have a right to an attorney and have turned it down.

Kearns' aim is not to recommend the hardest penalty possible. His job is justice, he said.

"The goal is not to rack up convictions," he said. "It is to do what is right to protect the people of Manhattan," he said.

Municipal Court Judge Patrick Kaffey said he thought it was the role of the prosecutor to present the facts of the case and then both aggravating and mitigating circumstances if there is a conviction, guilty or no contest plea.

The prosecutor makes recommendations about sentencing based on those factors, he said.

The judge reviews the city and defense's evidence and then makes a decision.

"I have to come into this without any biases," Kaffey said.

Although Kaffey attempts to explain and provide information on the trial process, many people still are confused. They don't understand that they have to present their cases by asking questions of witnesses, Kaffey said.

"I guess it is human nature for someone to come in and want to tell their story," he said.

Kearns has to work quickly. He will prosecute an average of 44 cases a week and review 100 to 150 cases per week.

Students most often end up on Kearns' docket for liquor violations, he said.

Students don't understand how much one drink can cost them, he said.

The use of a fake driver's license can cost the violator up to a $500 fine. A second offense can go up to $1,000 and six months in jail. If the defendant cooperates with authorities and tells them where they got the ID, they might receive a lesser sentence.

"Even with a clean record, that one beer is going to cost a few hundred dollars," Kearns said.

If a student uses another student's ID, both students are subject to fines.

But students aren't just putting themselves on the line when they use fake IDs. They are jeopardizing the liquor license of the establishment in which they purchase alcohol.

"That's putting someone else's livelihood at risk. That's not fair," Kearns said.

Alcohol consumption media campaign begins 2nd year at K-State

BY ANGIE JOHNSON
Kansas State Collegian

It is a known fact at K-State that most students drink moderately, if at all, according to Project Wellness.

The media campaign addressing alcohol consumption on college campuses that produced this slogan is starting its second year at K-State.

Douglas Newton, K-State Project Wellness coordinator, and Bill Arck, director of alcohol and other drug education services, are confident with the campaign, due to the positive outcome from last year.

"We are here to correct the misconceptions that students have and inform them of the realities regarding drinking on this campus. Last year, the plan worked well," Arck said.

The campaign emphasizes that K-State students have the ability to help keep themselves and others safe and healthy when they drink alcohol.

Project Wellness also advertises that a majority of students do not experience harm due to their drinking and they are capable of having fun without alcohol consumption.

These facts are presented from K-State students themselves, in a survey taken by roughly 10 percent of the student body.

"The survey is voluntary, anonymous and random, so therefore we trust that students respond honestly, and we have found that they do," Newton said.

Facts collected from the surveys are included in banners, posters, newspaper advertisements and on the radio promoting Project Wellness.

A new poster for campus buildings was created for the campaign.

"The poster is attractive and eye-catching," Stephanie Riegle, freshman in open-option, said. "The picture helps to illustrate that the campaign includes all students."

A core group of faculty from the university counseling services and members of the Kansas Health Foundation strive to advertise the positive message in a consistent way.

"Our primary goal is to show students that the stereotype given by national TV, such as MTV Spring Break, is not concise," Newton said. "There will always be students who drink to the highest and lowest extremes, but for the most part, there is a trend that the majority lie in the middle. This is implying that students drink moderately and really do know how to take care of themselves while doing so."

The Project Wellness campaign has been on the ground for years working to decrease alcohol usage on many college campuses.

"I think the campaign is a really great idea for our campus," said Ray Perez, junior in Spanish and political science. "It shows that we are responsible and not just a bunch of alcoholics."

Equestrian team needs support from students

Women's equestrian, K-State's 16th varsity sport, might not receive the same widespread acclaim as other sports programs at this university, but it deserves to be given a chance.

Last Wednesday, more than 100 people attended head coach Teresa Slough's informational meeting to learn more about equestrian.

That number, although surprising too many, shows that there is an attention level surrounding K-State's newest varsity sport and a hope for a bright future.

Lack of interest was one of the main reasons fingers were pointed at Max Urick and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics when equestrian was added to the varsity level at K-State April 21.

No one thought equestrian would remotely draw the sustenance or enthusiasm as women's soccer or softball, yet, because it would allow numerous women to participate, equestrian was the logical choice.

But that decision is in the past. Equestrian is here. Let's embrace and welcome this new sport to our campus and help make it a success.

Tryouts for the team are in progress and run through this Friday, while the team will begin competition Oct. 6 when it travels to West Texas A&M.

Now, it would be ludicrous to expect hordes of Cat fans to travel to the Lone Star State for the equestrian opener, as if it were the Cotton Bowl or Alamo Bowl or something.

On the contrary, what the team needs is the support and backing of this university, and with that, maybe the K-State equestrian team will have the potential to turn a few Wildcats' heads this fall.

CAMPUS fourum 395-4444

The Collegian's Campus Fourum is an anonymous call-in system that allows readers to voice their opinions on topics relevant to the publication.

"This just in, breaking news: The Royals suck."

"Yeah, to the guy who said that Nebraska's fans are classier than ours: what do you say about the ones that egged our house on the weekend of the big game two years ago?"

■

"To all fans of Kansas State football: next time your starting quarterback comes off the field, give him a round of applause, not some back-up who didn't do anything."

"I just wanted to say I think the cross-word puzzles in the Collegian are too easy. I get them done in 10 minutes and then I sit around in class for 40 minutes with nothing else to do."

SHARP LEARNING curve

Campus has obstacles to trap unwary students

KEN WELLS

Most people point to President Jon Wefald's arrival at K-State as a turning point in the university's history. I have no doubt on the matter. But while most people will primarily credit Wefald for one thing and one thing only — hiring head football coach Bill Snyder — most people look past Wefald's greatest strength: academic recruiting.

And, yes, it's just as formidable as the football team. Can you argue with, oh, let's count... 10 Marshall scholars, 36 Goldwater scholars, 23 Truman scholars, 11 Rhodes scholars and a partridge in a pear tree? Wefald will be the first to remind us that these totals make K-State the best public school in the nation — period — and hangs in the top 10 of public and private universities combined (We need to be, if we're gonna navigate the K-State Web site).

Most people have a working knowledge of athletic recruiting and the myriad issues involved, the risks of courting a hotshot small-town wide receiver versus the quiet, competent big-town fullback. But academic recruiting is more vague — what goes into assembling a top-notch corps of academia?

Simple. Campus Darwinism. The students of K-State are this good because if they're not, they become extinct. Football players get benched. Bad students just ... disappear.

I hope you haven't noticed yet, but the campus is carefully crafted to be an exercise of both cerebral and cardiovascular strength. This place makes an Indiana Jones movie look like a walking tour of Wichita State. A fedora and a bullwhip aren't required to study here, but damned if it's not a good idea.

It's the little things. Type the wrong password too many times into your Unix account and you run a five-percent chance of receiving 150,000 volts straight into the frontal lobe. Sure. Laugh. Don't believe me. It's your lobe, dude.

The lawn mowers that occasionally "accidentally" run loose and threaten to mulch you and your study group? Intentional. Really. Sure, it's important to study, but if you lose touch with the "real world" and become totally immersed in sociology, you're plant food. So you learn to keep one eye pointed up, sweeping the horizon at all times, muscles tensed to spring up a tree and nest with the squirrels until the coast clears.

One out of every 5,000 books is a bomb. Imagine you open your "Beowulf" tome and find it's actually hollowed out and filled with plastique and a timer on the right, and detailed instructions on defusing the bomb on the left. This counts as a three-credit pass-fail course with a lab on your grade card. It used to be in the line schedule as "BOOM100," but someone thought that was a giveaway. And note — after the Fortmeyer incident of '95, the bombs don't tick anymore. That was just too easy.

BECKY WILSON/Collegian

Surely you've noticed the temperature in several of your classes, where you either can (a) turn on the air conditioning or (b) listen to your instructor. Sadly, classrooms are not democracies, so (a) is often right out. Welcome to Death-Sauna 2000, where you can watch the waif-like sorority girl in front of you skeletalize before your eyes. Moral of the story? Pack drinks, food, handheld motorized fans, whatever you might need to survive in the infernal conditions of Denison Hall's armpit. The prepared persevere, the unaware assume room temperature (which is actually pretty warm anymore).

Chemistry's gotten more innovative, too. What you might think is yet another Pepsi Cola product is, highly infrequently, a lethal concoction of hedgehog blood and diluted root beer. But behind the label is the formula for its antidote, which you can synthesize using office products (hint: keep some white-out and printer toner on hand). This is not pass-fail; it is possible to survive and yet be incapable of resisting Pepsi products for life. Scary, isn't it?

Then there's the bison test. Yes, K-State's been funding a top-secret program to genetically engineer a carnivorous bison with the speed and murderous intent of a velociraptor for several years. You might remember the field test not too long ago. Rest well if you're on the second floor or above. But if you're bookin' it to campus and hear a vicious "moo," run like Amy Mortimer crossing Anderson Avenue between classes. Also, bone up on the feeding habits of bison so you might distract it should the day come. Keep barbecue sauce in your backpack, spraying it on passersby to make them more delectable to bison sensibilities.

Traffic isn't a deliberate machination of the administration or the Board of Regents. It just happened that way. But it still feeds into the philosophy. I know and you know that pedestrians have the right-of-way on campus, but try explaining it while getting put into the ambulance.

There's more I could tell you about: the spear pits in Nichols Hall, the piranha in the Natatorium and you wouldn't believe what they've got in Hale Library. Here, but I've said too much already. Just remember that by the time you escape, er, "graduate" from K-State, you'll be stronger for it.

Let the games begin.

Poor tippers should follow guidelines, help students with financial struggles

We all dream of graduating from K-State and becoming millionaires. Although some of us might take a while to get there and some might keep playing Powerball every week with their favorite football players' jersey numbers, we keep up the struggle. Unfortunately, the struggle by some is a result of others.

RICK WOOTEN

$3.35 an hour is not a wage for which most people would work. But there are many of our fellow students whose paid wage is below the federally mandated minimum. They depend on their peers to make up for this shortfall by subsidization.

No, not by scholarships or work-study, but by simply following the socially responsible act of tipping.

I am writing about this not only because I myself am a bartender at the Aggie Lounge, not only because I live with two women who are waitresses at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, but because I am tired of generously tipping others to make up for those who don't take their responsibility seriously. Let the following be a guide to those who might be confused about what is appropriate economics while going out.

If a bar has a special of $1 drinks, don't think you can go out with a $10 Alexander Hamilton and get him to meet Jack Daniels and Coke 10 different times. First of all, tipping in bars usually is at least 10 percent, so now you're down to nine drinks. Let's say the regular price on these drinks is $2.50. The bartender and/or waitress still does the same amount of work regardless of how much you pay for the drink, so let's apply the 10 percent rule to the $2.50. Now we're down to about eight drinks.

If you're paying with a check and plan on writing it for more than the tabbed amount or you pay with a credit card, plan on adding to the amount you should tip your server. Time away from another paying customer is time away from another tipper.

A server's time doesn't end when the last customer leaves. Your favorite place doesn't get magically cleaned for the next day by your mother or even "South Park's" infamous "underpants gnomes." While you are heading home, someone is sweeping, mopping, cashing out the registers, cleaning the bathrooms and numerous other duties usually at less than minimum wage.

In restaurants, the accepted guideline for tipping is 15 percent, although a reprieve can be granted for the Chinese buffets. And even though your count of 15 10 cent wings might only total $1.50, if you leave 23 pennies you deserve to have that chicken come alive in your bowels.

My cousin came up with an interesting concept of how to tip fairly while eating out. Start at 25 percent and subtract 5 percent each time you have to wait too long for a water refill or on a replacement for an incorrect order, et cetera. Once, he left a note on the table as he left that read, "You started off tonight at 25 percent, but your service was poor and you were deducted 5 percent for every instance of ineptitude." He proceeded to leave his address and told the waitress that she owed him 10 percent of the cost of the meal. Surprisingly, a check never arrived.

Don't use this method at 3 a.m. in Bob's Diner, Mini's or Village Inn. I believe the people who work there are very much on the edge, and leaving one's address could lead to an ugly picture on the following day's front page.

One place where gratuities mean everything is the gentlemen's club. I suppose a person could go into such an establishment merely to pay too much for drinks and take in the scenery, but it is much more fun to drink beforehand and save your 35 $1 bills for a table dance. Junktown (a.k.a. Junction City) employs several of our students as adult entertainers, and they, too, work hard for their money. The going rate at each club is different for each of the duties, but as in any other type of service industry, there's more bang in the buck.

My bartenders pour better drinks. My waitresses flirt and give me back rubs. My waiters ensure that my Bourbon Street Steak is served hot with extra onions. And my dancers don't ignore me.

This isn't the "Give a Penny, Take a Penny" tray at the local Dara's. This is the age-old rule that some people know and others need to learn. You get what you pay for.

Creationism, U.S. Army-trained assassins, pay inequity and adoption are among the topics for the fall 2000 Lou Douglas Lecture Series on Public Issues.

The lecture series, sponsored by UFM Community Learning Center, honors the memory of Douglas, a former professor of political science at K-State.

"We try to keep the topics centered on grassroots," Linda Teener, executive director of UFM, said. "Mr. Douglas was always very orientated on the grassroots and the community issues. By keeping the topics based around those ideas, it is a great way to honor his memory."

Fall 2000 speakers are Rev. Roy Bourgeois speaking on the U.S. Army assassins, James K. Galbraith dealing with the pay inequality between men and women, Eugenie C. Scott lecturing on creationism in public schools, and Laura Cecere, who will focus on the importance of worldwide adoption.

This year marks the 20th anniversary for the series that was founded to focus on topics involving human rights, social justice, world peace and international development.

Olivia Collins, Lou Douglas Lecture Series coordinator, said speakers are chosen by an advisory committee that is made up of people inside the K-State community as well as the community of Manhattan.

"The advisory committee works to pick speakers that are experts in the areas that the lecture series is focused on," Collins said. "They identify certain individuals who fit the criteria and then contact them to see if they can fit it in their schedule."

UFM also employs about 10 interns to assist with the lecture series. These interns are responsible for the administration aspect of the series.

"The interns basically provide us with insights on the topics, help plan and execute the series and occasionally introduce the speakers," Collins said.

Jonas Stewart, second-year intern and senior in political science, said he has found his internship rewarding because of the opportunities it provides.

"Through this experience I have met some very prominent people," Stewart said. "I get to talk to them one on one about the topics they are experts in. It is very rewarding."

Collins said K-State students also can benefit by attending the lectures.

"This series will help students enhance their education and broaden their prospective on people," she said. "It gives them a chance to interact with speakers who are knowledgeable about their topics."

All presentations will take place in Forum Hall, Union. There is no admission fee.

artwork, a variety of specialty jams, jellies and other crafts that are made by the couple themselves.

Dick Blaske said some of the flavors, such as mint jelly and hot pepper jelly, have other uses besides what jelly is typically used for.

"Mint is used on lamb meat, typically, and hot pepper jelly can be used on grill-cooked food," Blaske said.

Near Blaske's table stood a group of musicians playing flutes and violins for money.

Sellers and shoppers alike seemed to agree that the group added to the atmosphere of the open market.

"It's a nice addition," Blaske said.

The inconspicuous location keeps the Farmer's Market customer base consistent.

"Overall, it's good old Manhattan people," Kuehler said.

MAKING PROGRESS

Schedule plays role in season hopes for women's golf

By NICK BRATKOVIC
Kansas State Collegian

Progress, while just one simple word, is what K-State women's golf is looking for in 2000-01.

The team has a new course, Colbert Hills, to call home, and players passing previous standards. Now, with the season beginning next weekend, a stiff competition is taking place on the fairways and putting greens.

That competition plays a distinctive role in their excitement for the new season.

If the off-season is any indication, it should be quite a year for K-State.

The Cats had several players compete in tournaments this summer, including Miranda Smith, who qualified for the U.S. Open.

The K-State sophomore shot a combined score of 174 in two rounds of play, missing the cut, but said the opportunity to play was tremendous.

"I have played in other USGAs, but the Open is just so much bigger and so much greater in magnitude," Smith said. "Sometimes while I am standing there, I am just like, 'Wow, I am competing at the Open.'"

Head coach Kristi Knight attended the tournament as Smith's guest, and said the experience was invaluable.

"She qualified for the tournament and didn't play real well, but that is really the ultimate tournament, and just to qualify for it tells me that the talent level here is rising," Knight said.

The talent level has risen, Knight said, for a variety of reasons. K-State has added both a new golf course and a state-of-the-art practice facility.

"I am biased, but I would say we have one of the best courses around to practice and play on," Knight said. "You really learn something about yourself every time you play it."

The course also has played a pivotal role in recruiting.

"Colbert Hills helps turn heads," Knight said. "It is not a guarantee, but it will make them stop and think."

K-State freshman golfer Christine Boucher said the course is one of the main reasons she chose the school.

"They have got great facilities here," Boucher said. "The team is also good, and I liked the town."

Women's cross country team ranked No. 4

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

K-State's women's cross country team has the attention of the nation.

After the team's best finish in program history, placing fifth at last year's NCAA Championships, the Cat women are ranked No. 4 in the preseason FinishLynx/NCAA Division I women's cross country poll.

The poll, conducted by the Women's Cross Country Coaches Association, also gave K-State one first-place vote, according to a Tuesday press release.

The Cats are ranked behind Stanford, Wisconsin and Colorado, while other Big 12 programs such as Missouri, Nebraska and Texas A&M also received top-25 recognition.

The first regular season FinishLynx poll will be released Sept. 18.

Meanwhile, both K-State's men's and women's cross country teams got off to a good start in their fall 2000 season opener, overcoming sweltering heat Saturday at the Wichita State Gold Classic.

"It was really furnace-like conditions," head coach Randy Cole said. "It looked like it affected the guys more as the field went out pretty slow."

Junior transfer Shadrack Kimeli and sophomore Amy Mortimer won the men's and women's respective individual races to lead the Cats at Raft Golf Course.

Five of the top six finishers in the women's race were Wildcats, with Mortimer leading the way with a first-place time of 17:51.22 over the 5,000-meter course.

Those individual performances helped the K-State women win the team competition, topping second place Pittsburg State.

Returning NCAA All-Americans, seniors Korene Hinds and Annie Wetterhus, finished second and third place overall, with times of 18:12.38 and 18:24.82, respectively.

Junior Amanda Crouse finished right behind them in fourth with a mark of 18:25.66, while freshman Cate Holston took sixth in her Wildcat debut with a time of 18:45.74.

"Our goal was to go out and run the race as a pack through two miles and then really go out."

Randy Cole, head coach

"Our goal was to go out and run the race as a pack through two miles and then really go out," Cole said. "I think we did that. We were able to stay under control and I don't think anybody strained too much today but it was a nice controlled effort by the entire team."

On the men's side, Kimeli led K-State to a third place finish with 77 team points, as Oklahoma State won the team title with 20 points and runner-up Wichita State ended with 68.

Returning NCAA qualifier, senior Jean-Paul Niyongabo, finished 10th overall with a time of 20:47.48, while freshman John Sumner turned in at 18th with a mark of 21:30.61.

K-State's men and women return to the course Sept. 16 at the Woody Greeno/Nebraska Invitational in Lincoln.

Amanda Crouse teamed up with Annie Wetterhus to take first place for the women's cross country team at the K-State/University of Missouri-Kansas City dual meet at Warner Park last season. Crouse finished fourth Saturday at the first meet, the Wichita State Gold Classic, with a time of 18:25.66.

Equestrian tryouts begin for new season

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

Equestrian, K-State's 16th varsity sport, began tryouts Tuesday that will run through Friday.

Head coach Teresa Slough said she's looking forward to the inaugural season, which is set to begin Oct. 6 when the team travels to West Texas A&M.

Slough also said she was impressed with the interest level associated with equestrian.

On Aug. 30, more than 100 women attended an informational meeting to learn more about K-State's newest sport.

"I was extremely pleased with the turnout at our first meeting," Slough said. "I am really excited about the opportunity to work with all these talented young ladies in the upcoming season."

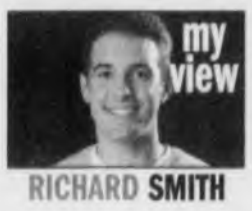
Yankees defeat Royals; teams suffer injuries

By STEVE BRISENDINE
The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — David Cone went down too early to get the win, but reliever Dwight Gooden never lost the New York Yankees' early lead Tuesday night in a 10-5 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

No. 9 hitter Jose Vizcaino went 4-for-5 and Scott Brosius hit an eighth-inning grand slam for the Yankees, who maintained their six-game lead over second-place Boston in the AL East.



Brosius' blast off reliever Andy Larkin splashed into the fountains beyond left field and made it 10-4.

Cone separated his left shoulder making a diving catch on Rey Sanchez's bunt in the third inning, becoming the second Yankees player in two days to go down with an injury. On Monday, center fielder Bernie Williams aggravated a previous rib strain in the first inning of a 4-3 win over the Royals. He is expected to

Quarterbacks need respect

Chiefs fans want Elvis Grbac to do something heroic. Grbac makes hero money. He plays quarterback, the hero position. He needs to deliver.

RICHARD SMITH

Grbac wants to be a hero, too. He's spent four years listening to fans call for his head. He's heard the sports talk-show callers demanding his ouster. Grbac probably knows his son's friends yank him from the lineup in their Nintendo football games. He wants to deliver.

Third-and-6 at the 21-yard line. Trailing by three. The eyes of 80,000 fans as a tangible weight upon him, waiting, expecting. The seconds tick off the clock and into the late afternoon air. There aren't many chances left. Time to make something happen.

Grbac takes the snap, and sure enough, here come the Colts. Three of them, all with a free shot at him. Grbac knows his receiver only needs a split second more to get open. So he backpedals, he holds the ball. Just before he gets creamed, he does what a hero would — he slings an improbable pass toward the left sideline.

The off-balance throw wobbles toward Derrick Alexander and a first down, but never arrives. Indy cornerback Jeff Burris snatches the gift and darts down a clear path to the endzone. Indianapolis takes a 27-14 lead. As Burris gyrates madly in his end zone celebration, Grbac trudges, head down, toward his sideline.

And the boos begin to rain down.

This has been wearing at me for a while now. Why do we hate good quarterbacks? I'll bet K-State quarterback Jonathan Beasley wonders. He is 13-1 as K-State's starter. He threw for 250 yards and a touchdown, and ran for another two, weekends ago at Arrowhead Stadium. His team won 27-7. He also threw two interceptions. And he got booed by a handful of "die-hard" K-State fans who all expect Ell Roberson to win no less than seven Heismans.

Grbac could write a book on getting booed unfairly. Maybe even a trilogy. Just flash back to this weekend. His stable of "running" backs would be longshots to win a game of "Duck, Duck, Goose." His receivers were dropping passes like they had a bet going. All this against the best team in the AFC, yet Kansas City only trailed by three, thanks to sturdy defense and Grbac's two touchdown passes.

So, deep in his own end, Grbac tried to make something special happen. Why not? No one else was. And it turned out the way these things always seem to for him. Good, but not good enough. The boos pelted Grbac like hailstones as he left the field.

Being a mediocre defensive tackle is a swell gig. Heck, it's almost a cottage industry. Dan Williams, Eric Swann, Sean Gilbert, Gilbert Brown ... these guys could pay off the national debt with the money they've reaped from their groundbreaking achievements in the field of mediocrity.

But put the letters Q and B in front of a player's name, and suddenly imperfection becomes completely intolerable.

Great quarterbacks are great. We'll cheer them and pay $70 to wear their replica jerseys. We'll even name our first-born children after them. Great quarterbacks, we love, we treat like kings. Good quarterbacks, we just behead.

I can't understand that. Maybe it's because they're the center of attention, forever viewed as the top dog of every offense. Maybe it's because we all grew up pretending to be Joe Montana, to throw the winning touchdown pass, and because it all seemed so easy in our dreams.

Maybe it's the money they make. Maybe it's just some weird, deep-seated hatred of the number 18. Maybe it's because our athletic heroes can bring more thrills to our lives than we ourselves do, and we hate them when they fail. Whatever the case, it's rarely rational, or fair.

I write bad columns. I do it just about every Wednesday, actually. But it's no big deal because A) I get paid whether you laugh or not, and B) I don't have 80,000 people curse at me when I do. However, I do get a lot of angry, misspelled e-mails.

When you get a "C" on your Calculus test, likewise, you don't have to listen to a complete stranger explain at length on live radio how you're just not smart enough, aren't living up to your potential, and the class clearly would be stronger if you were replaced with a smarter freshman.

When did being merely good suddenly become bad? This is America — we made Steven Segal a star, for God's sake. When did perfection become a requirement, or even the norm? In fact, it's not — except when we have 50-yard-line seats, or an 800-number, and we're immune from owning up to the criticisms we sling so easily.

Should we high-five and cheer interceptions and bad throws? Of course not. But as fans we should be fair. We should be reasonable and supportive. We're not perfect. If you can complete a 15-yard out pattern against press coverage, boo to your heart's content. If you can't, save the clever jeers and try just cheering for a change. It will make the Elvis Grbac and Jonathan Beasley's lives a whole lot happier.

Master of SUSPENSE

Hitchcock film festival, assisted suicide debate, sex talk, band competition among events on UPC's fall schedule

By DAVID LAUNDER
Kansas State Collegian

Sex, "Shaft" and assisted suicide are just part of this semester's schedule.

At least, they are part of the Union Program Council's schedule of events for this fall.

UPC, which has been at K-State since the K-State Student Union opened in 1956, is an organization that works to produce and promote activities at the Union.

"We want to provide entertainment that is educational as well as fun," Gina Kimble, interim program adviser, said. "There are many things to do in Manhattan, but we feel we have a lot to offer."

UPC events

Calendars are posted throughout campus. If you need further information, the event hotline is 532-6572.

This semester, as in the past, UPC is working to provide K-State students with a wide variety of activities to choose from, including educational presentations.

Betsy Bergen, professor of family studies and human services, will discuss how to enjoy sex when she presents "How to Improve Your Sex Life" at 7 p.m. Thursday in the main ballroom, on the second floor of the Union.

In addition to speeches, lectures and debates, movies are Friday and Saturday nights in Forum Hall for $1.75.

"We show movies that were just in the theaters as well as older films," Michael Rottinghaus, UPC president, said. "It's a great chance for students to see some good movies cheap."

Of the many films to be shown this semester, the original "Shaft" will be shown Sept. 15-16, followed three weeks later by the new "Shaft" starring Samuel L. Jackson on Oct. 6-7.

UPC also is offering films for the mystery and suspense fans. On Sept. 29-30, "Vertigo" will kick off the K-State Alfred Hitchcock Film Festival. It will be followed by "Rear Window" Oct. 13-14 and conclude with "Strangers on a Train" Oct. 20-21.

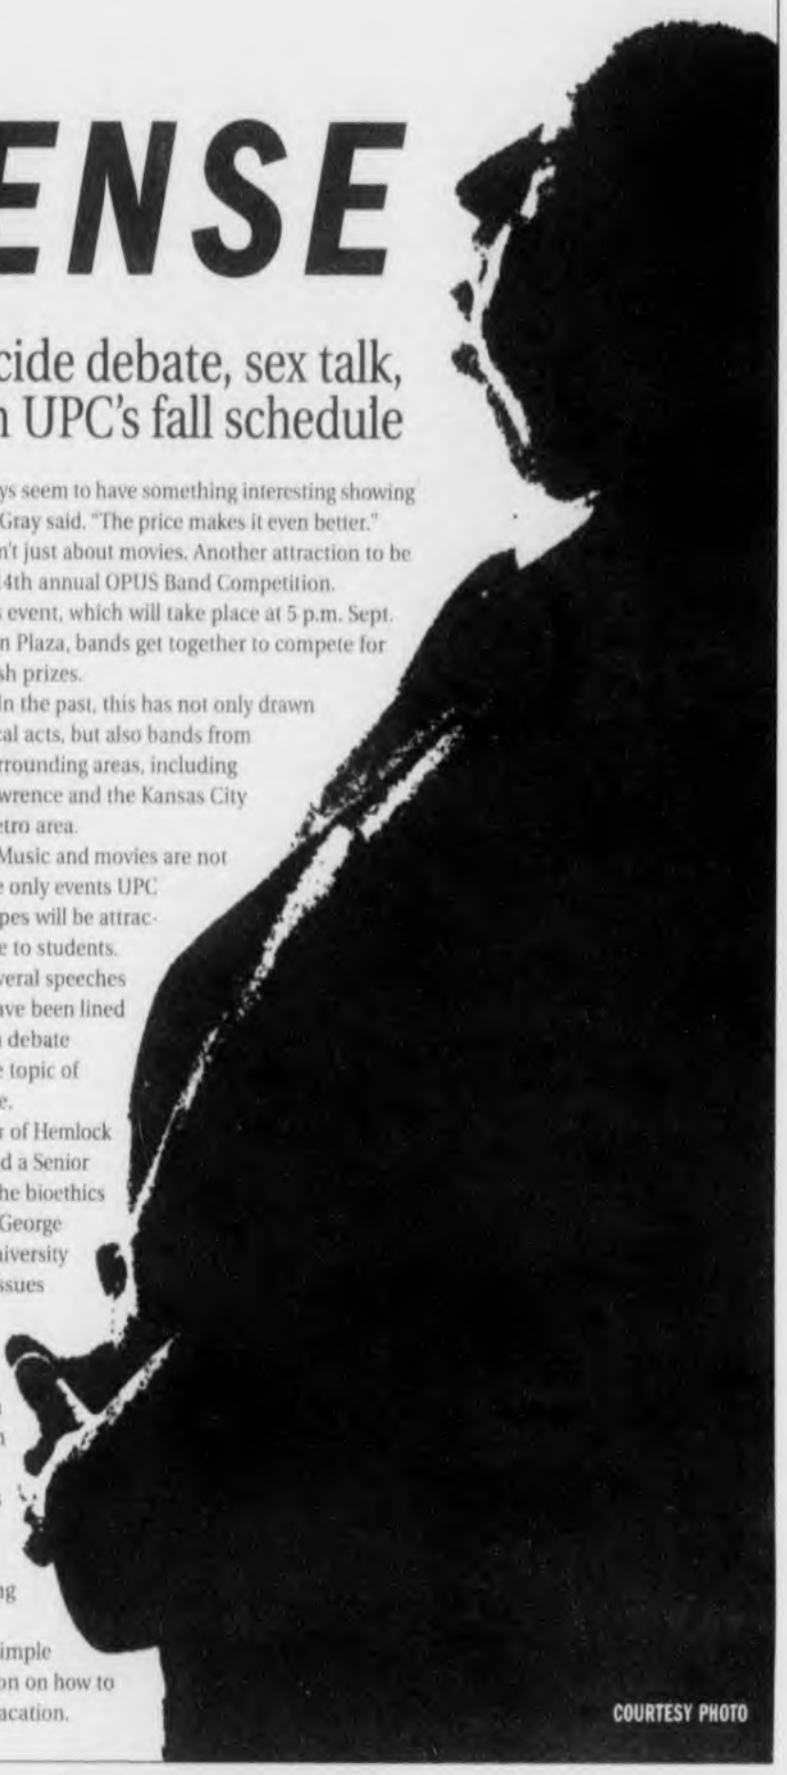
"The Rocky Horror Picture Show" also will be shown at midnight Oct. 27 in the Union ballroom.

Brandon Gray, junior in mechanical engineering, said he likes the variety of movies UPC offers.

"They always seem to have something interesting showing at the Union," Gray said. "The price makes it even better."

But UPC isn't just about movies. Another attraction to be offered is the 14th annual OPUS Band Competition.

During this event, which will take place at 5 p.m. Sept. 15 in the Union Plaza, bands get together to compete for cash prizes.



In the past, this has not only drawn local acts, but also bands from surrounding areas, including Lawrence and the Kansas City metro area.

Music and movies are not the only events UPC hopes will be attractive to students.

Several speeches and debates have been lined up, including a debate concerning the topic of assisted suicide.

The director of Hemlock Society USA and a Senior Scientist with the bioethics department at George Washington University will argue the issues surrounding assisted suicide at 7 p.m. Sept. 28 in the Union main ballroom.

The speeches lined up for this fall range from the settling of Mars to something as simple as a presentation on how to have a cheap vacation.

Local artist displays work all week in Willard, says art reflects society

■ Several types of media used to develop disparate pieces as commentary on society.

By ALLISON RUSHTON
Kansas State Collegian

Sheet music, paint, wire, fabric, artificial fruit, sticks, springs and Shakespeare all have things in common.

To Sally Thomas, a local artist, they are vital materials to her work.

"Sally Thomas: Multimedia Works" is on display at the Willard Art Gallery on the first floor of Willard Hall. The exhibit is open from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and runs through Friday.

Thomas said no single word can be used to describe this exhibit: birds are made out of wires and fabric, paintings are done on sheet music, and wall-hangings are made with sticks and springs.

"I like to think that this represents everything I've seen, everything I've done and everywhere I've been," Thomas said. "I suppose you could say that it's about society because I'm a part of society."

EVAN SEMON/Collegian

Samples of Sally Thomas' artwork can be seen at the Willard Art Gallery, on the first floor of Willard Hall. The exhibit is open from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and runs through Friday.

Xuhong Shang, associate professor of art and painting, said he agreed that the work is a comment on Thomas' life.

"This shows the transcendence of her experiences rather than literally transferring them," he said. "It's impressive because she is trying to express herself — not please others — as many artists do."

Shang said he visited the exhibit and was so impressed by it that he asked Thomas to speak to his students about her work.

"You don't see art like this often in the Midwest," he said. "It's more conceptual, and in some ways it is more intellectual."

Thomas said one of the most interesting things about this exhibit is that it can be seen as several small works, or as one collective work.

"They are individual pieces, but they are also all connected," she said. "It's up to the viewer to decide how to take it."

Anyone is welcome to view this free exhibit, and it doesn't take long to see.

Luci Hull, sophomore in open-option, visited the exhibit in between classes.

"I was just walking by and thought I would stop in," Hull said. "This is a really cool exhibit. It's worth taking a look at."

Thomas said she considers all her work, including what is on display, to be a work-in-progress.

"I am always tearing things apart and trying something new," she said. "I don't ever consider my work finished."

miss 4-6 games.

Gooden (6-4) replaced Cone and gave up three runs and seven hits in 5 1/3 innings, walking one and striking out one.

Mike Stanton pitched the ninth, giving up Mike Sweeney's sacrifice fly.

Cone's shoulder was popped back into place, but he was taken to a hospital as a precaution.

David Justice homered and drove in two runs for the Yankees, who beat Kansas City for the seventh time in eight games this season.

His leadoff homer in the seventh off reliever Paul Spoljaric gave New York a 6-4 lead and atoned for a fielding error in the sixth that allowed an unearned run to score.

Carlos Beltran, making his first start since he went down with a bruised knee on July 3, went 2-for-4 and drove in a run for the Royals.

The Royals took a 1-0 lead on Jermaine Dye's RBI double in the first inning, but the Yankees scored four times in the third against Jeff Suppan (7-9).

Clay Bellinger, Williams' replacement in center field, led off with a home run to left center.

Paul O'Neill's bases-loaded fly ball, caught by a wind blowing in from right field, fell in for an RBI single.

Tino Martinez followed with a sacrifice fly for the inning's first out.

O'Neill got hung up between first and second when Justice struck out, but managed to elude the tag long enough for Derek Jeter to score from third.

Suppan gave up five runs and 10 hits in 5 1/3 innings, striking out three and walking four.

The teams traded sacrifice flies in the fifth, Johnny Damon answering Justice's RBI with his own to make it 5-2.

The Royals scored twice in the sixth, cutting the Yankees' lead to 5-4, when Beltran hit an RBI single to left and the ball got away from Justice, allowing Mark Quinn to score.

Knight said all she can ask for is a foot in the door, and has learned to handle not signing every recruit.

"A couple of years ago, I was upset about not getting a certain recruit, and I was talking to (men's golf) Coach Tim Norris, and he said, 'If you get every recruit you want, you probably aren't recruiting the right players,'" Knight said.

Now, with the addition of Boucher and Smith fresh off the U.S. Open, Knight said the team is attempting to make a move toward postseason play.

"We set the goal of getting to regionals this year, and if we keep improving our play, we will get a chance to get in if our scores come down," Knight said.

The Cats play next weekend in Lincoln, Neb., at the All-Tel Husker Invitational, a tournament Knight said she is looking forward to.

This week has been spent preparing for the intrasquad tournament after a weeklong qualifying tournament.

"We began playing our qualifying tournament a week ago, and we are planning to finish it up later this week," she said.

Knight uses the tournament as a way to get the top five of her 10 players into the week's given match, and said it has been a good process to use.

"I think it is really the most fair way to qualify people for the tournament," Knight said, "so the players know going in that there is going to be some competition as to who goes to the tournaments."

The team's travel squad then has the opportunity to earn exemption status by shooting 79 or better at the away tournament.

"I proposed that last year, and it has really worked out well," Knight said.

"That way, those players who qualify can not have to worry about playing another tournament, but can instead hone the skills necessary to improve."

The policies were voted on by the team, and Knight said they play a prevalent role in a squad with as much depth as the Cats.

The golfers who qualified for the opening tournament, along with Boucher and Smith, were Edie Murdoch, Elise Carpentier and Lindsay Hammerschmidt.

Knight said it was stiff competition.

"This is as deep of a team that I have had since I have been here," she said.

"I can tell you, the talent level has risen."

Knight is stressing improvement and looking for the program to continue making strides.

"The team has made really amazing progress in the five years that I have been here," Knight said.

"This isn't the end of the road — we need to raise the bar higher."

COMMISSION

compared the proposal to the recent changing of North Manhattan Avenue to three lanes, with the middle lane for turns.

"It does have a psychological effect, and it does slow people down," she said.

Others disagreed.

"We don't care much if it has stripes," resident Ken Hoyt said. "What we're worried about is we're going to have a collector road from Miller Ranch to Anderson."

A link to Anderson Avenue, abandoned from an earlier phase of the development, was mentioned numerous times by citizens.

"As far as I'm concerned, all this talk about striping, bike lanes and traffic calming is a smokescreen," resident Paul Prince said.

Commissioner Carol Peak said waiting is not the solution either.

"I think that this experiment is the best way to go in the short term," she said.

Presidential debates subject of argument

By DAVID BAUDER
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Executives at ABC and CBS said they would not broadcast presidential debates organized by rival networks CNN and NBC, as proposed by Republican candidate George W. Bush.

Instead of agreeing to three 90-minute, nationally televised debates in October as proposed by the Commission on Presidential Debates, Bush has said he would participate in one of those debates and two others suggested by NBC and CNN.

One would match the two contenders in a prime-time version of NBC's Sunday morning talk show, "Meet the Press," moderated by Tim Russert.

The other would be an edition of Larry King's talk show on CNN.

The Gore campaign has said it would not agree to Bush's plan unless Bush also committed to all three commission debates with their potentially wide viewership.

"We will not carry another network's programming," said Paul Friedman, executive vice president of ABC News. ABC would cover such an event within its news programs if news were made, but would not broadcast it in its entirety, he said.

When asked why, Friedman said, "It's so obvious as to be difficult to articulate. We're not in the business of carrying the efforts of another network, where we have no control over the format or the questions asked."

CBS, which has proposed a debate for its Sunday morning show, "Face the Nation," also would not carry a "Meet the Press" or Larry King debate, spokeswoman Sandy Genelius said.

"It's their talk show, why would we put it on our air?" she said.

"It would boil down to incredible promotion for a competitor's broadcast."

ABC also has invited Gore and Bush for a debate, with a format uncertain.

Friedman said the squabble was all part of the game, and it was obvious Bush was proposing debate formats with which he was most comfortable.

ACCESSIBILITY

think it got left out. It's not hard to build a new building that's accessible, but retrofitting old buildings is hard," Holden said.

Under the terms of the Americans with Disabilities Act, the university is not required to make its buildings handicapped accessible, but it is required to make the services accessible.

Holden said this is one reason she is concerned about Forum Hall. If someone wants to participate in an activity or class taking place there and can't due to the accessibility, the instructor would have to move it somewhere that would be accessible. Finding somewhere to move it to could be difficult, she said.

Gerald R. Carter, director of facilities planning and university architect, said the reason Forum Hall wasn't included in the $11.5 million Union renovations was because it wasn't a top priority.

"With the money that we had available, the priorities were placed for all the internal and external parts of the building," he said.

"It was necessary for us to spend that money in making other fire and safety code regulations. It was held back for subsequent renovations."

Carter said as the end of the Union renovation program nears, an architectural team and fire engineers are working together to explore options that would make the hall more accessible.

"The fire-protection engineers and the architects have not completed that study yet, so I'm not sure what the final recommendations are going to be," he said.

Once the recommendation is made, he said, decisions regarding finance would have to be made.

He said further renovations, like the present renovations, would be voted on by the student body. If approved, the funds would come from the students.

"We are in the midst of a process," Bernard Pitts, director of the Union, said.

"The key thing is that there is a way into Forum Hall, and that we are not in the process of studying a way to enhance the accessibility."

Pitts said he didn't know it was a problem until last spring when Holden told him she had received some complaints.

Until then, he said they hadn't heard of any, even at the five public presentations of the renovation plan.

"None of these complaints were voiced during the three years of planning," Pitts said. "We certainly would have given it attention if it would have been voiced during the planning process."

Pitts said when the issue was raised, the Union addressed it.

"We are finding out what we need to do, what the state needs to do and where to get the funds," he said.

Holden said besides Forum Hall, the only other main problem area is handicapped parking stalls, especially in the middle of campus.

"There's not enough handicapped spots, but parking in general is limited," she said.

Grace said parking is the biggest problem she has faced.

"Since I've been a freshman, it seems like there are more and more handicapped people, so there aren't as many parking spots," she said. "But I have noticed this year they've added some more spots."

Other than the few problem areas, Holden said significant improvements have been made all over campus.

"You got to kind of know the secrets, but on almost every building there's signs for where to go, which is helpful. The improvements are just steady and excellent," she said

"Really, there are few problem spots left."

Accessibility problems rare for Manhattan

By NANCY FOSTER
Kansas State Collegian

A crack in the sidewalk, a few steps to a door and a toilet a little too high probably do not affect the lives of many.

But for some, situations such as these can make everyday activities difficult.

Holly Dankenbring, junior in social work, knows these situations all too well. She uses a wheelchair, and has been a Manhattan resident for three years.

"I find that the sidewalks are kind of uneven and have a lot of cracks in them, and that could possibly be a problem for someone in a manual chair," she said.

Calls regarding Manhattan's handicapped accessibility have been minimal, Cathy Harmes, director of human resources, said.

"It's been very few and they're usually very easy to be resolved," she said. "It's not so much complaints, but giving out information."

She said that, in the past three years, most people who call just have questions regarding rules and regulations.

By law, every public city building must be completely accessible. A disabled person must be able to get from the parking lot, through the front door and around inside the building. There must not be steps or a high threshold in front of the entrance. Buildings or stores with counters, such as grocery stores, must have a portion of the counter at a reduced height for wheelchair users.

Restrooms must have signs with braille for the visually impaired, a handicapped stall, special door handles and a sink low enough for wheelchair users. All other bathroom services, such as trash can and paper towel dispenser, must be at a height that wheelchair users can reach.

Dankenbring said bathrooms are one of the biggest problems she encounters.

"The toilets are way too high for someone to be transferred to," she said. "They are higher than the average toilet — not lower — but I don't think it's a Manhattan problem. It's across the nation."

Brad Claussen, Manhattan building official, said that to ensure buildings are in compliance with the Americans with Disability Act, he oversees them as they are built. When an individual or business wants to make extensive renovations, alterations or construct a public building, they must obtain a building permit from him.

Once they obtain that permit, he becomes involved.

During the building or renovation, Claussen makes inspections to verify they are making it handi-

Suit filed against local company

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON

"Top Secrets Can Make You A Fortune."

The claim still is prominent in one of the Junction City-based Top Secrets, Inc.'s Web sites, but a civil suit filed by Kansas Attorney General Carla Stovall's office has put the company and its CEO, Thomas M. Michaels, on hold.

The petition, filed Aug. 24 in Geary County District Court, alleges deceptive and unconscionable practices on the part of Michaels, violating the Kansas Consumer Protection Act. Temporary restraining orders and injunctions have been granted to prevent the operation of Top Secrets.

One prominent charge is that Top Secrets hires and pays workers on commission to recruit other employees, not to sell a product.

Terry Hamblin, assistant attorney general, said workers apparently paid a fee to enter the program to promote the Shopping Network by phone, giving their identification number to those they spoke to. The first two people to call back with that number would be worth $10 each for the worker who referred them. Each additional caller was worth $100 in commission to that worker.

Pyramid schemes, as these are called, are illegal in Kansas, Hamblin said.

"If the primary way of making money is by referring other people, that is against state statute," he said.

Mary Tritsch, director of communications for the attorney general's office, said pyramid sales

"People should look very carefully into anything where they have to solicit other people."

Mary Tritsch, director of communications for the attorney general's office are outlawed because the last people coming on will have a more difficult time turning a profit.

"You're not selling anything. You're eventually going to run out of people," she said. "People should look very carefully into anything where they have to solicit other people."

Hamblin said the office has been receiving complaints from consumers over the past two to three years, usually forwarded by other state's attorney generals. Other states included Texas, California, Pennsylvania, Montana, Ohio and Illinois, he said.

Student planners selected for conference

By LYNNE HERMANSEN
Kansas State Collegian

Seven K-State students will attend the first Organization of Future Financial Planners in Boston along with 23 other students picked from around the United States.

Sidni Van Allen, Melissa Hochman, Sarah May, Ashley Shaver, Angie Wynia, Angie Heber and Nicole Zucker will leave today for Boston for the weeklong conference.

"It goes to show our program is becoming one of the best in the nation," said Van Allen, senior in family financial planning. "It's an honor to have seven of our students selected."

The conference is sponsored by the Financial Planning Association, and the theme for the conference is "Success Forum 2000."

Applications were sent and selection was based on grade point average and involvement with the group. Van Allen said she went to group meetings and participated in group activities.

Each student was given a scholarship in association with the conference. As part of the scholarship, the students are working at the conference as door greeters.

Van Allen said top financial planners and 3,000 large corporate sponsors will be at the conference. Presentations and speeches will take place covering areas such as investment, retirement, how to run a financial planning business and state planning.

"We will be able to network for future jobs, and make our voices heard to the industry leaders," said Hebers, senior in financial planning and human ecology and president of Future Financial Planners.

"By recognizing us, they will come to K-State and recruit, which is beneficial to students in financial planning and other programs."

Van Allen said she hopes the conference will introduce her to future employers.

"It's a great networking opportunity for potential employers, and helps to put us on the map," Van Allen said.

Zucker, senior in family financial planning, hopes to meet employers as well.

"We will be able to meet people and make contacts for future job opportunities. It will help expand our horizons," Zucker said.

Hebers said their representation at the conference will help all K-State students, not just students in financial planning.

"We are bringing in professionals for recruiting, so other programs can benefit," Hebers said.

"Industry leaders want to come and speak, become familiar with our program. It brings us more publicity, so we are seen not as a small program, but on a national level."

Zucker said she sees the conference as a way to gain national attention.

"It's exciting. Our program is new and small, and this will help get our name out there, receive some attention, publicity and honor," Zucker said. "It's great for us."

Hebers said she hopes for national attention but in a different way.

"This is the best thing for the program, and it will affect the whole university," Hebers said, "It shows that we are being recognized nationally as being part of the College of Human Ecology as opposed to the Business College."

Golden Key awarded honors for chapter

By COLLEEN FOOTE
Kansas State Collegian

K-State's Golden Key chapter received the Key Chapter Award for the 16th year in a row this summer.

The group went to Los Angeles from Aug. 5 to 6 with other Golden Key chapters from around the United States and the world.

Dacia Daniels, senior in accounting and Golden Key president, said a chapter must be active to receive the Key Chapter Award.

"Our chapter has many social events and social service activities," Daniels said. "We plan many events, not just for our chapter, but for the whole community."

Jennifer Witt, senior in microbiology and biology, said Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan Inc. and Adopt a Family are a few of the social service organizations Golden Key is involved with. Witt said Golden Key is starting a new service project this year called The Best of America, which will incorporate Golden Key members promoting the dangers of drugs and peer pressure to local middle schools.

"Hopefully, in a few years, The Best of America will become a statewide project," Witt said. "Even though Golden Key is an academic honorary, we still focus most of our attention on social service."

Another requirement for the Key Chapter Award is to submit a yearbook that includes everything a chapter has done throughout the year. This year the K-State chapter submitted a nine-volume yearbook.

"Our yearbook is basically a snapshot of everything we do," said Nicole Bindel, senior in finance and Golden Key historian. "The yearbook helps with improving ourselves now and in years to come."

Daniels said that, even though this is its 16th year in a row to win, the chapter doesn't take the award for granted and always works as a team.

"We always have the goal of winning the Key Chapter Award," Daniels said. "But our main goal is to focus on service and pass it on to others."

Texas man sentenced to 18 years for stabbing

ABILENE — A Texas man was sentenced to 18 years in prison Wednesday for killing his wife while the couple was in Abilene in 1999.

Robert Shriber, 44, of Monahans, Texas, was sentenced in Dickinson County District Court for the stabbing death of his 53-year-old wife, Henrietta. She was killed as the couple drove down an Abilene street Dec. 11, 1999.

Shriber originally had been charged with first degree murder, but he pleaded guilty in May to second-degree murder.

Shriber was a cable television installer and had been in Abilene only a few days when the killing occurred.

Nebraska game attracts crowd to Web broadcast

OMAHA, Neb. — About 200,000 people logged on the Internet this weekend to watch Nebraska's football team defeat San Jose State.

It was the first college or pro football game produced and shown on a Web site directly linked to a main television network.

"Based on the tremendous positive feedback, we're already planning additional college football Webcasts," said Danny Greenberg, senior vice president of foxsports.com. "This is only the beginning."

The game between the Cornhuskers and Spartans, which was not televised, was generated from HuskerVision video used inside the stadium and radio feed from the Pinnacle Sports Network.

The Webcast also featured real-time game stats, chats and a live scoreboard.

The site will provide weekly highlights of college football coaches' news conferences featuring some of the top college teams in the nation, including Nebraska, Notre Dame, K-State, Florida, Texas A&M and Virginia Tech.

Gore ahead in Missouri, according to new poll

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Al Gore has caught George W. Bush in Missouri, says a new poll taken after the political conventions. Bush had led in the battleground state for much of the year.

Democrat Gore had 45 percent to 41 percent for Republican Bush in the poll, published in The Kansas City Star. Gore jumped from an 11-point deficit in early July to the new result, which was within the poll's 4 percentage point margin of error.

The Mason-Dixon poll of 621 likely voters was conducted Thursday and Friday. Green Party nominee Ralph Nader had 2 percent, while Reform Party candidate Pat Buchanan was at 1 percent.

Gore made the most progress among women. Women now back Gore by 53 percent to 35 percent in Missouri. In July, Bush led among women 44 percent to 41 percent. Bush led by 10 points among men, although the spread has decreased from the earlier 19 points.

An earlier Mason-Dixon poll conducted for The Star from July 6 to July 10 before the two major parties' political conventions showed Bush up 48 percent to 37 percent. Gore has made progress in numerous key states in the state-by-state battle for electoral votes.

In the most recent poll, nearly half of Gore's supporters — 47 percent — said the convention made them more enthusiastic about their candidate. Twenty-six percent of Bush's backers said they were more excited after the GOP convention.

Unused credit cards can lead to financial problems

By NANCY HULL
Kansas State Collegian

Free T-shirts, candy bars, water bottles and coolers seem like great trades for simply filling out credit card applications.

However, having multiple cards, especially ones that never are used, can lead to imperfect credit reports and other difficulties down the road if the cards aren't deactivated.

Kami Swayze recently learned about these complications when she moved into her new apartment. Swayze, senior in marketing, said the landlord of the apartment complex wasn't interested in leasing to people with several credit cards.

"I actually didn't have a problem because I have two and I use them both," Swayze said.

"It's when you just sign up for a card to get a free gift, and then if you don't deactivate it there will be problems."

Placing unwanted credit cards out of sight actually can result in lower scores from the credit bureau, said Stacy Shaffer, lead member of service representation at the KSU Federal Credit Union.

She said when credit cards aren't canceled, it still shows that the person has a lot of credit.

"If you have three cards with various limits, it shows that what you could go into debt is high," Shaffer said. "Every time you sign a credit-card application, you're giving the company permission to pull another report on you from the credit bureau, and your score can lower every time one's pulled."

"Companies use students to make the cards look more enticing."

Carla Jones, director of student life

She said when people apply for loans, the lower scores shouldn't cause serious problems.

"They can look into it and realize that you've had the card for three years and it has not been used," Shaffer said.

"They'll usually just tell you to go ahead and cancel it and there shouldn't be a big problem."

K-State students also should realize that applying for cards and then immediately canceling them is not a good habit, Shaffer said.

"You need to show that you can use a card and be responsible with it. You need to have something to build credit," she said.

While filling out applications for credit cards, Shaffer said it's important to pay attention to the card's annual fee, annual percentage rate, late fee and financial charges. She said if the terms of the contract and the small print are overlooked, a person might end up paying a higher annual fee than expected.

Scott McFarland, senior in elementary education, skipped over the fine print when he filled out credit card applications during spring break in Panama City, and now he's experiencing trouble because of it.

"Filling them out didn't take long, and then I had a Frisbee to play with at the beach for the next day," McFarland said. "When the cards came in the mail, I just cut them up."

But when he received a phone call from one of the companies last month, he realized he should have canceled the cards.

"They called and said that I owed $21 for each card since I didn't call and say that I wouldn't activate them," he said.

Aside from giveaways offered by credit card companies, Carla Jones, director of student life, said K-State students can lure other students into filling out applications. In order for a credit card company to be on campus, it must be sponsored by a student group.

"Companies use students to make the cards look more enticing," Jones said. "When students are walking around campus and they see their fellow students promoting the cards, they'll walk over there."

With all the troubles that stem from credit cards, changes have been made on the K-State campus to inform students of the dangers associated with credit cards.

The Union Governing Board approved a movement last April that requires materials discussing the pros and cons of credit cards to be present when card applications are offered in the K-State Student Union.

Bernard Pitts, executive director of the Union, said this policy only applies inside the Union building, and the educational materials are not required throughout the rest of campus.

Children's literacy organization in need of student volunteers

By SARAH BAHARI
Kansas State Collegian

A local organization is looking for K-State students to help its cause.

R.S.V.P. Leadership and Literacy, which works with elementary school children whose reading levels aren't up to par, will be host to a training session for interested volunteers from 9 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. today at the Retired Senior Volunteer Center.

College students are encouraged to volunteer, said Lori Bishop, executive director of the program.

"We like to involve community members and K-State volunteers," she said. "It's been a great partnership."

The literacy program works with kindergarten students at Bluemont Elementary and Woodrow Wilson Elementary schools to help them attain the skills they need to be successful in school, said Kristi Glasper, a teacher at Bluemont.

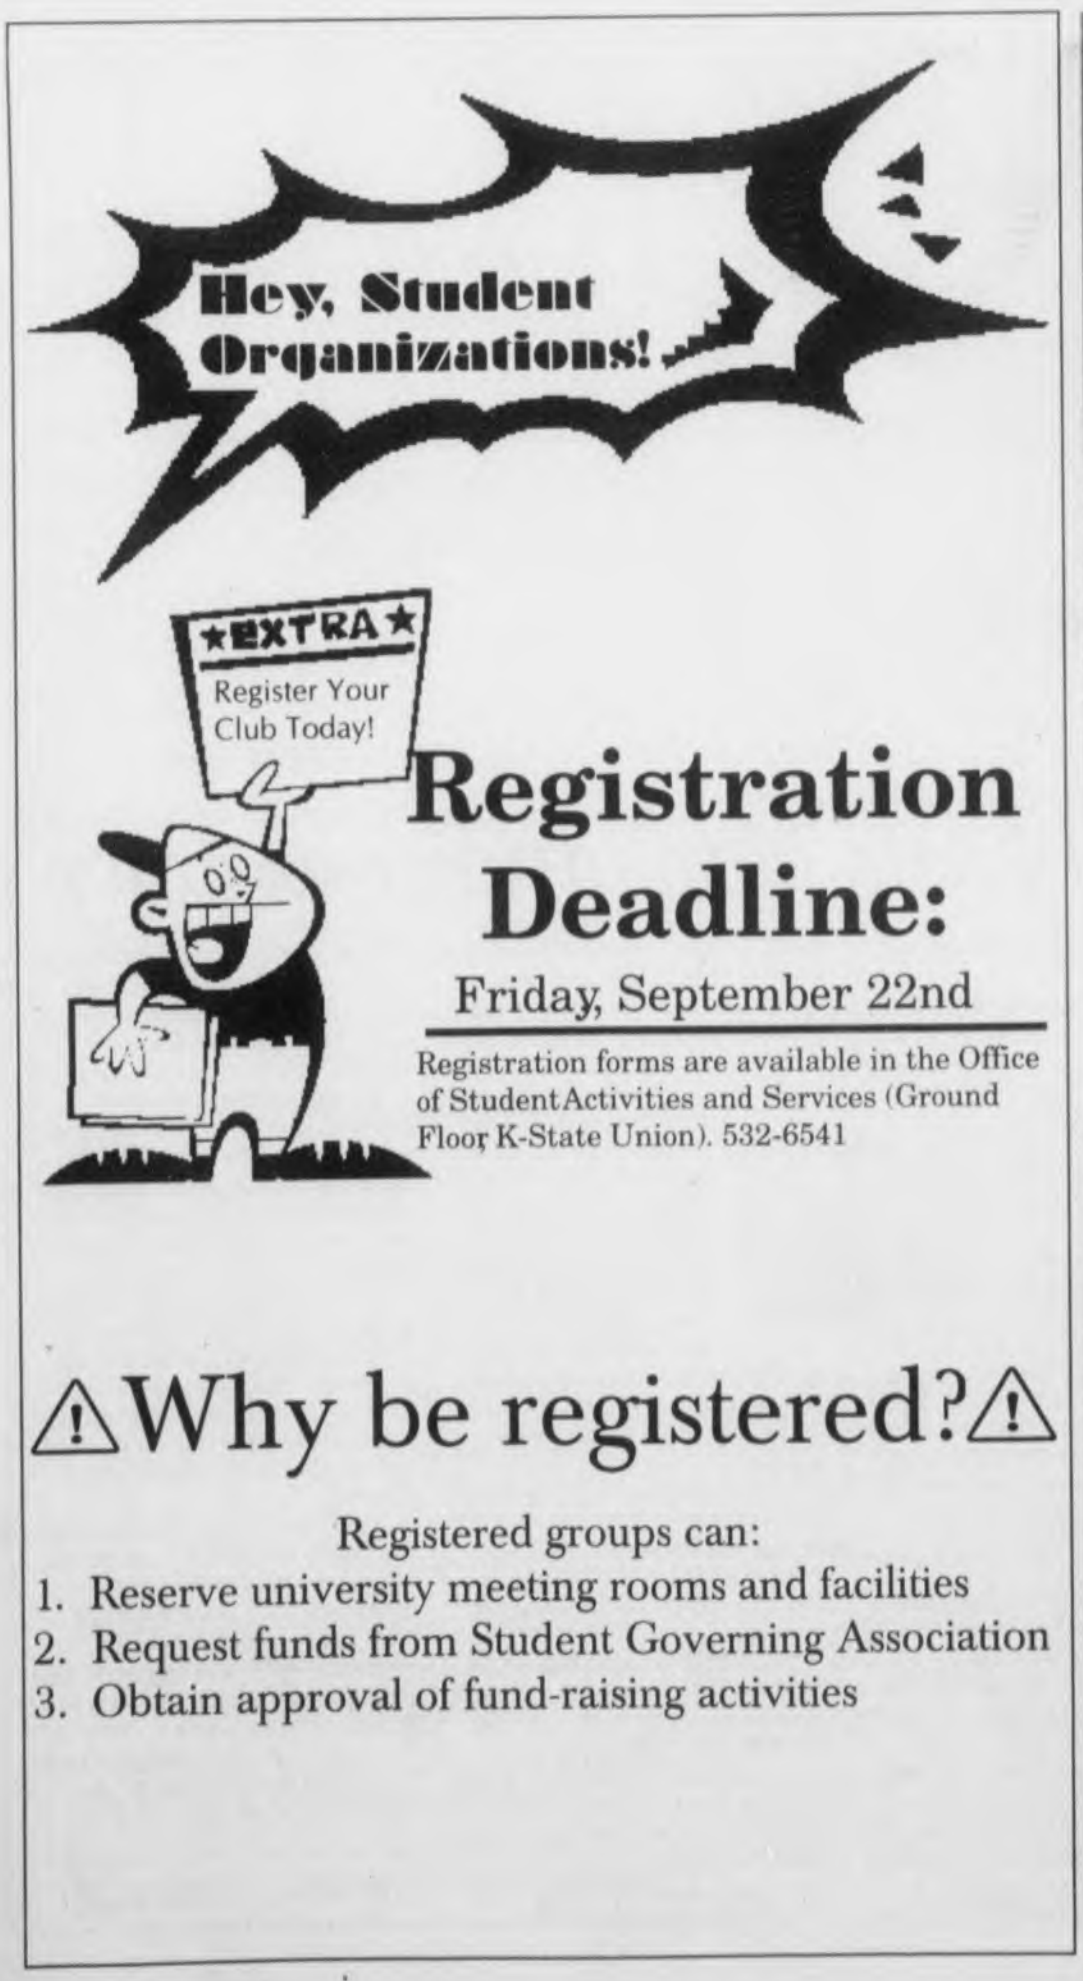
"The teachers first identify those students who need extra help," she said.

"This then helps bridge the gap between what students are supposed to know coming to school and what they usually do know."

There are two different programs people can volunteer for an after-school tutoring program geared toward kindergartners and HOSS, Helping One Student Succeed, Glasper said.

MORE INFO?
Students interested in volunteering can contact Kristi Glasper at 587-2030.

The after-school program volunteers work with a child at least one hour a week.



HOSS is a more in-depth program in which a volunteer follows a student until the sixth grade, Bishop said.

Leadership and Literacy needs as many volunteers as they can get for the after-school program so the children can get more one-on-one help, Bishop said. Last year they had about 40 volunteers total.

Anyone interested should attend the training session today, Bishop said. It will focus on the nuts and bolts of the program, what's expected of volunteers, the confidentiality issue and role playing exercises. On Friday, volunteers will get hands-on experience by visiting Bluemont Elementary and working with children.

If people are interested in volunteering but cannot attend the meeting, they can still volunteer by taking a 30-minute course before meeting with children, Glasper said.

They can contact her at 587-2030 for information.

Fire inspections mark important Senate decision

Student senators have an important decision to make tonight: a decision that affects housing in Manhattan.

Tonight, Senate will vote on adopting a resolution to support mandatory rental inspections every three years.

The group did not acquire this at its meeting, Aug. 31, due to lack to information.

Even though the Manhattan Fire Department inspects all rental housing that contains three or more units annually for fire and life-safety violations, there are no mandatory inspections brought forth by the city for all other properties.

The fire department should be commended for annually checking the residence halls and greek housing, yet more needs to be done in terms of providing safety for all students.

A mandatory inspection is a necessity.

The cost is minimal to landlords, and even if students do see a small increase in their rent, it would be well worth the fee if that ensured safe living arrangements.

Student Senate has done an outstanding job by taking an issue that is connected with the city and understanding how important it is to the student body.

Not only will it employee two full-time positions, but it ultimately will affect the quality of housing in Manhattan.

We urge students to tell the senators the importance of passing this tonight.

The senators have an opportunity to truly make a difference for the well- being of K-State students.

SOCIAL ANXIETY

Oversharing strangers pain reticent people

MIAH WHITAKER

I freely admit that I am not the most social person in the world. Don't get me wrong; I have quite a few friends, I like making new friends and once I know someone fairly well, I have no problem being in a social situatjon with them.

I'm just very shy and incredibly uncomfortable around people I don't know very well.

That is why I can't understand how someone can walk up to a person they've never seen before, who obviously is giving off the "Leave me alone, I don't know you" vibes and start talking to them. I'm not talking about the general, "Hi, how you doing?" kind of thing, I 'm talking about in-depth, personal "I just found my wife in bed with another man" stuff.

It's one thing to walk up to someone in a bar or a party or some very obvious social situation when the unsuspecting target clearly has given off the approachable signs — made eye contact, smiled, not gotten up and run off when you started to approach. It's another thing entirely to start talking to someone sitting in the library with his head buried in a rather large volume of Shakespeare during midterms.

Some people are social and others aren't. It doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure that out. So why is it so hard for some people to realize that perfect strangers might not want to discuss personal details over the salad bar during lunch?

A few weeks ago, I stopped by a restaurant, and while I was quietly waiting for my food to be prepared, an obviously friendly woman came in. I did what I always do when I'm alone: I avoided eye contact and carefully concentrated on my book. Less than a minute later, the woman sat down a booth over and started talking to me. I politely answered her questions, not knowing what else to do, and turned back to my book, turning away from her without trying to be rude. Then she asked if it was my natural hair color and what I used to dye it. The personal questions continued until my order was ready and I was able to escape.

I know the woman was just trying to be friendly, but I was horrifically uncomfortable. I did everything I could, short of being rude to convey my reluctance to talk to her, and nothing fazed her.

What ever happened to "don't talk to strangers?"

Friendly strangers are easier to handle than disgruntled in excruciating detail.

My most recent example of this is what my roommate, Jason, calls the irritated, weird, angry pickle guy incident.

I spent Labor Day at the Kansas City Renaissance Festival. At some point in the afternoon, a small group of my friends and I were standing in front of the steak sandwich vendor waiting for the food to be prepared. and this rather angry man dressed in a hideous green outfit wandered up to us. Out of nowhere, he proceeded to tell us how much he hated the Kansas City festival. It seems that he was a pickle vendor and he wasn't selling any pickles.

According to him, the entire reason he was broke was because Kansas City sucked. He was belligerent, and I only can assume that he thought we were part of the festival because we were all in costume. I hope he wasn't that rude to his customers, although that would explain why he couldn't sell any pickles.

My friends and I tried to ignore him, but he didn't get the hint. We tried turning away from him, but he persisted. His little tirade continued for several minutes before he moved on to another target, leaving us with "At least the chicks dig me."

There was yet another little piece of info I did not need.

In the past, it was considered rude to bother someone who clearly wanted to be left alone. Details of a personal nature were strictly to be shared amongst friends, loved ones and people in the medical profession. I don't see a problem with that. Maybe I'm just a throwback to an older generation.

Movie monopoly gets Manhattanites down

ERIN HOWERTON

With one "business decision" after another, Carmike Cinemas is ruthlessly ruining my town.

The recent closing of the Westloop 6 Theaters has struck me personally. That was the place where I saw my first movie in the early '80s — "Cinderella." Thus began a long and glorious love affair between the silver screen and I. The colors! The music! The grand scale of it! Best of all, you were sharing the movie with other people. We gasped with wonder as Cinderella's dress blossomed from rags and sighed with defeat as the wicked stepmother banished her to her tower room. I left that theater convinced that movies were pure magic and nothing could dissuade me from my beliefs.

That is, until Carmike Cinemas rode its evil black horse into town.

After the Varsity Theater's closing, the Campus Theater suddenly was the only movie house on Moro Street, a standing tribute to the love of Hollywood on the plains. Second-run movies were only a dollar, and my new drivers' license became a ticket to everything cinematic.

Going to the movies was going to a friendly neighborhood — I was close to friends' houses, near shops and cafes and I didn't have to drive all over town to have a soda with friends after seeing "Jurassic Park" for the fourth time. It was part of what makes Manhattan so pleasant — diverse attractions in a small radius.

Then, Carmike decided that it should die.

The lonely marquee, whose flashing lights had for so long beckoned me to the dim mysterious cool of the movie theater, flickered into darkness. I raged, considered picketing the place in peaceful protest and finally just sat down the street with a cappuccino in defeat.

So I began the weary existence of saving $6.50 over the course of a couple weeks, and blowing it in Carmike's megalopolis six-plex theater across town, or at my beloved Westloop, where I had been introduced to the magic of movies. They didn't seem very magical anymore — go figure. The 50-cent pittance discount for students didn't exactly make me a Carmike convert.

The decision to convert Westloop to a $1.50 theater excited me. Finally! I thought Carmike must have realized that Manhattan's chief charm comes from the fact that we have a small-town atmosphere with a touch of big city life. I had my affordable, student-friendly movies back.

Westloop also was a friendly place for pedestrians, having stores and restaurants nearby which made the theater part of the spectrum of entertainment rather than the sole focus of it. I preferred to go to the Westloop theaters precisely because they were smaller and had more of a community atmosphere, not isolated from the rest of the public world as the Seth Childs Cinemas were (and still are).

My joy was not to be long-lived, however.

Recently, Carmike decided that, now, Westloop should be no more. My only movie option has been reduced to the impersonal 12-plex across town that costs me my first-born child and make me wander across acres of pavement to get to the shrine of commercialism that Carmike has come to symbolize: Did I say touch of big-city life? It's beginning to feel like a sledge-hammer.

I have no children to sell. I am tired of polluting the air with my vehicle to reach entertainment venues that are isolated from everything else Manhattan has to offer. I am weary of Carmike destroying my town.

Dear reader, if you are a theater aficionado like myself you will understand my attachment to the theater experience. Sure, it's possible to rent a movie and watch it affordably (somewhat) in my own home, but it's not the same. I'm not sharing the same emotional experience with others in the flickering dark of the theater, not seeing the crumbling corner of the Campus Theater's white projection wall, not hearing the dusty swish of velvet curtains as I amble down the slanted aisles. There's no joy in observing the public hush of the movie theater, no outraged violation of the same when something happens to our favorite character. There are no sniffles from the audience when Jodie Foster finds her father in another dimension of reality, no gasp of disbelief when Cardinal Richlieu faces down the Musketeers. It's just not the same respite from reality.

Sometime, if you get the chance, go by the building that used to house the Campus Theater. It's Varney's textbook expansion, if you're confused or new to town. On the south side of the building there's an advertisement — worn, faded and very old. It says "Commonwealth Theaters."

It's strangely ironic that the company that used to own theaters in Manhattan used a name that is connotative of community. That's all we have left of times when businesses cared more about the people whom they served than serving their own self-interests. I hope they leave it is as a lasting reminder.

Carmike, I wish you realized — it's not just business to me or the people of Manhattan. It's a part of our lives.

City public transit steering council meets for 1st time

■ Committee includes 18 representatives from local government bodies.

By AMY BRIGGS
Kansas State Collegian

A steering committee met for the first time Wednesday night to begin reviewing wants and needs involved in a Manhattan transit system.

The meeting, conducted by Karen Davis, director of community development, and Ted Rieck, consultant for TranSystems Corporation, established the goals, activities, processes and potential outcomes of the committee.

"Students represent one of the largest populations of possible users of a transportation in this city."

Jake Worcester, student body president

The purpose of the committee is to advise and guide the city on different issues surrounding public transit and what types of public transit will benefit the community the most.

Representatives from several community institutions, such as K-State, local businesses, the Kansas Department of Transportation and the Manhattan Emergency Shelter, were included in the 18-member committee to address many of the needs and desires for public transit.

"They are really providing guidance through the study," Davis said. "They listen to the results of the study and talk to the community and advise as to what should be done."

The initial meeting addressed demand for public transit, potential markets for riders, service options and varying levels.

On the agenda for the steering committee is several items of market research.

The first will be focus groups based on K-State people, stakeholders in the community and residents. The purpose of the focus groups is to identify what the citizens want in a transit system and where potential problems might be.

After the focus groups are conducted, there will be community surveys issued to students to identify student and citizen's various destinations and why they would use public transportation.

To wrap up public input, there will be one or two open houses to hear from the citizens and to discuss the study findings, potential routes and committee recommendations.

"We have a special opportunity to take advantage of this process and to do something very unique and appropriate," Bruce Snead, Manhattan city commissioner, said.

The committee formed after a two-year comprehensive transportation study of Manhattan. This study included many of the current committee members and addressed all forms of transportation, policies and costs.

Despite the city of Manhattan creating and organizing the steering committee, K-State students will not go unheard.

"My goal is to represent K-State students and keep their interests in the forefront," Jake Worcester, student body president, said.

"Students represent one of the largest populations of possible users of a transportation in this city."

Charges lifted in shoplifting-death case

By ALICIA CHANG
The Associated Press

DEARBORN, Mich. — In a case that heightened racial tensions, a judge threw out manslaughter charges Wednesday against a store security guard accused of fatally choking a black man after an alleged shoplifting.

The judge said the victim might have died of a heart problem, rather than asphyxiation.

Dennis Richardson, 29, a guard for Lord & Taylor, was charged with choking Frederick Finley, 32, on June 22 after Richardson and other guards confronted him in the parking lot.

The guards suspected Finley's girlfriend's 11-year-old daughter of shoplifting. According to police, the guards said Finley threw a punch and Richardson placed a choke hold on him.

Judge Virginia Sobotka found that the medical evidence was not sufficient to conclude Finley died of asphyxiation. She said Finley had an enlarged heart and the confrontation might have triggered heart failure.

One medical examiner testified that internal bruising and discoloration of the head and neck led him to conclude Finley died of asphyxia. But another medical examiner testified Finley died of heart failure, saying Finley's lungs were filled with fluid, a sign that his abnormally large heart was failing.

Richardson could have gotten up to 15 years in prison if convicted.

Richardson is black, as was Finley.

Activists who charged that the confrontation had racial overtones have staged protests against Lord & Taylor, accusing it of having black security guards scrutinize minority shoppers to avoid the appearance of discrimination or racial profiling.

A day before Richardson was charged, a 5,000 to 10,000 demonstrators led by the Rev. Al Sharpton rallied outside Lord & Taylor to protest Finley's death.

The company has denied engaging in any form of racial profiling.

Richardson showed little emotion as the judge issued her ruling.

"His family's very grateful. His mother prayed a lot about it," defense attorney Gerald Evelyn said.

Prosecutor Kevin Simowski said he will appeal.

Geoffrey Fieger, the attorney representing Finley's family in a lawsuit against Lord & Taylor, bitterly disputed the ruling.

"You strangle a man to death and you get away with it. That's ridiculous," he told WWJ radio.

On Wednesday, passersby outside the store appeared divided over the judge's decision.

"This case put a black mark in the city of Dearborn," said Bernadette Drennon, 32, who is white. "I'm just glad it's over with."

Joi Cobb, a black social worker from River Rouge, said she was surprised at the judge's move.

"I think they should have looked further into it. There should be someone guilty of his murder," she said.

Early morning exercise

Pre-dawn practice readies crew for season

With the sun creeping up behind them, 19 K-State students begin their morning ritual. Their routine is neither laid back nor easy.

For these 19 men, an ideal morning starts at 5:55 a.m. on Spillway Marina Dr., where a sign states: "Victory Drive, Home of the K-State Crews."

As they make their way down a set of gravel steps to the water, the hills in the background still are shrouded with darkness. Not until 6:30 will the first signs of sunlight spread across the water, giving the K-State men's varsity crew team a glimpse of what lies beneath the brisk darkness of the morning.

"It will challenge you," sophomore Chris Tracy said of the Monday through Friday practices that are a requirement of the varsity program. The team's 5,000-meter head races and 2,000-meter sprint races demand a strict schedule and devotion to training, he said.

Crew is a year-round sport, and morning practices continue until the water freezes to ice. Training, however, doesn't end with the changing weather. The team then moves to indoor facilities where it uses weight and rowing machines to maintain and build strength.

"It's definitely a physical sport," Tracy said, but for the crew team, that same physical philosophy has paid off at many regattas throughout the country.

Last year, the novice crew team won the Midwest Rowing Championships in Madison, Wisc. The novice group also took top honors at a regatta in Dadvale, Penn., that was comparative to a club sport's national event.

This year, a new challenge will face the crew, as it prepares for K-State's first appearance at the prestigious Head of the Charles regatta in Boston.

"This is the biggest race in the fall," Tracy said.

The Head of the Charles regatta is billed as the largest one-day race in North America, and varsity captain Jeff Tignor said K-State will compete well.

"This is where all the big guys go," Tignor said, "(and) we're shooting for top 10."

Among others, the 54 crew regatta will include the U.S. Coast Guard Academy and the U.S. Naval Academy, along with the U.S. Rowing crew that might compete in the 2000 Olympics.

K-State crew has earned a competitive reputation, rarely coming away from a regatta without at least one medal. This year, expectations are just

Volleyball team falls to BYU

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

It was a long week on the road for the K-State volleyball squad, and unfortunately for the Cats, the week didn't end as well as it began.

After posting a 3-1 record in the Sept. 1-2 Washington State Cougar Challenge tournament, No. 20 K-State fell 3-1 to No. 17 Brigham Young Tuesday.

The Cougars (2-1) downed the Cats (3-2) in four games, 15-9, 9-15, 15-10, 15-4, out hitting K-State .316 to .264.

"It was a good measuring stick for us on where we are and where we need to be," head coach Jim McLaughlin said. "I'm disappointed with the two losses, but we figured some things out, and we're moving forward."

BYU captured game 1, despite a Cat five-point rally that cut the lead to 13-9. However, K-State stole game 2 after jumping out to an early 3-1 lead and fighting past a four-point Cougar run.

Yet it was game 3 that proved to be the deciding factor.

BYU would take the game after seven tied scores and seven lead changes.

Then, in the final game, the Cougars jumped out to a 12-0 advantage to take the game and the match.

Several Wildcats posted impressive individual performances against BYU, including four in double figures for kills.

Freshman outside hitter Cari Jensen led the way with a career high 20 kills on .349 hitting with 10 digs, while junior outside hitter Liz Wegner followed with 17 kills and three service aces.

Sophomore outside hitter Jenny Pollard recorded her third double-double of the season with 12 kills and a career high 17 digs in the contest.

Senior middle blocker Kelle Branting hit .565 on the night, notching 15 kills, seven digs and four blocks, while freshman middle blocker Lauren Goehring made her first career start as a Wildcat.

"I think we answered a lot of questions on this trip," McLaughlin said. "We improved in all areas of our game. It was a good trip for us."

Up next, K-State returns to action Friday at Ahearn Field House as the Cats will be host to the Wildcat Classic Tournament. K-State's first round match is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. against Bradley.

Libel returns after graduation, marriage

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

Brice Libel has put in his time.

The fifth-year senior has played football for four years and graduated with a bachelor of arts degree. Then, on Aug. 12, Libel walked down the aisle to marry a woman named Kelli, and presumably, to start a new life.

LIBEL

So it would have seemed reasonable that the time had arrived for Libel to give up youthful college activities such as football.

Or so it seemed.

Instead, and luckily for the Cats, the special-teams expert decided to stay one more year. The thought that it might be time to move on did cross his mind, though, Libel said.

"It seemed like the perfect point to go on with your life — get married, grad school, be done with football, whatever," Libel said.

He could have moved on, but then he wouldn't have been able to finish what he started, Libel said.

"I think its something I wanted to do my senior year, my fifth year," Libel said. "It was important to me to be a part of this, especially this year with the implications and expectations of what we can achieve."

In addition to refusing to miss out on a season brimming with potential, Libel said he also didn't want to leave all the friends he had made.

"I wanted to be a part of this team. The class I came in with is really close," Libel said. "I think, if anything else, I'd just miss the camaraderie of a lot of the people in my class. Jarrod Cooper and Chris Claybon and all the guys are good friends of mine. Even though I'm married and starting my own life, I think I'd miss that."

And K-State would miss Libel. For the past three years, he's been making big plays on special teams. Just last Saturday against Louisiana Tech, the Wathena, Kan., native made a fantastic play on the punt team to pin the Bulldogs down deep in their own territory.

K-State punted the ball, Libel eluded his blocker and streaked down the field, catching and downing the ball on the 2-yard line. The result was field position that greatly favored the defense, Libel said.

"I think that's a big play, because any time you can back the other team's offense up behind the five, that puts a lot of pressure on them," Libel said.

The play against Louisiana Tech was just the norm for Libel, who has lettered three years as a special teams player. As a result, Libel has become a leader on the field, head coach Bill Snyder said.

"It was important to me to be a part of this, especially this year with the implications and expectations of what we can achieve."

Brice Libel, special teams

"He's played that way for a couple years now," Snyder said. "He plays hard and is really into our special teams, and has been a big special teams leader for us, and has been for a long time."

In addition to making plays, Libel also serves as a mentor for the younger, less experienced players. As an acknowledged team leader, Libel said he tries to lead by example as well as vocally.

"I think that it's important that they have someone to look up to and ask questions," Libel said, "and see that you can graduate in four years, and that you can still do well on the field and off the field."

Junior transfer Thane Bernbeck said he agreed that Libel serves as a great model for other players.

"When I came, Brice kind of showed me the ropes," Bernbeck said. "He kind of takes charge there. He's got a certain urgency to him, he wants to do things right.

"I think we need more people like that, who show how to do things right. A lot of people could follow his example."

As much as Libel enjoys playing the game and interacting with the players, though, sometimes it's just nice to get away from it all.

That's where Libel said he truly appreciates his wife, who, he said, doesn't barrage him with football questions.

"I like to be able to separate. I get enough of it around here," Libel said.

"It's nice that I don't go home and have to talk about Big 12 football. It's nice to kind of get away from it at home."

Whether he talks about it at home or not, however, Libel still will be making big plays, Bernbeck said.

"I'm always looking for Brice to get a big play, and I'll be right there behind him," Bernbeck said. "If I ever get a chance, I'm going to take advantage of it, too."

Local forward commits to women's basketball

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

K-State's women's basketball team has received a verbal commitment from Kendra Wecker, a senior at Marysville (Kan.) High School.

By securing the 5-foot, 11-inch forward, the Wildcats beat out a host of Big 12 schools, including Oklahoma and Nebraska. A large factor in Wecker's decision to choose K-State was its proximity to her home in Marysville, Wecker's high school basketball coach Mary Kessinger said.

"She's really tight with her family," Kessinger said. "I think that we all feel good about her decision. It's great for the community. In a selfish way, we're all excited about the opportunity to see her games."

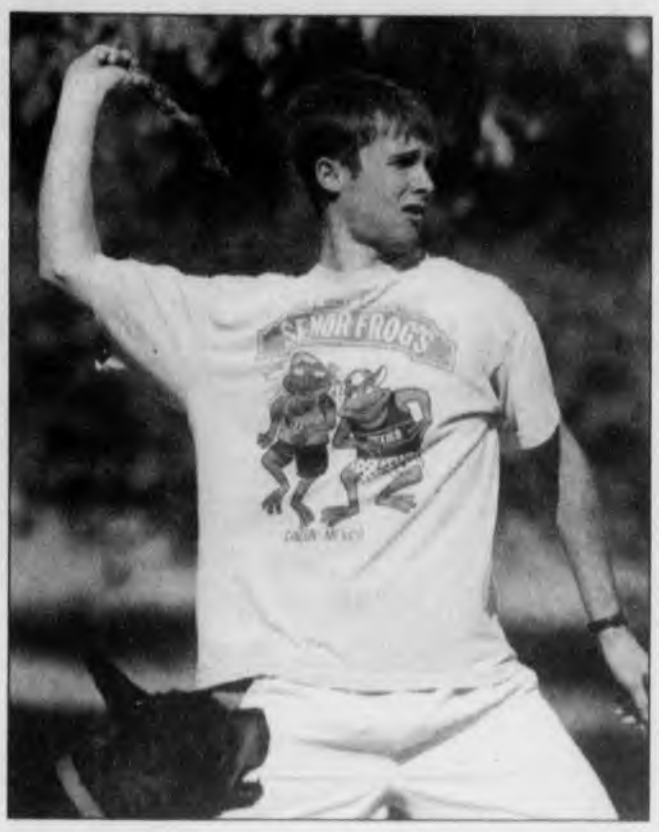
Another reason Kessinger said Wecker decided on K-State was the quality of the Wildcat coaches.

"I really think a lot of K-State's coaches," Kessinger said. "They did just an outstanding job of recruiting. I'm excited about their recruits. They're going to turn that program around."

Wecker, a two-time All-State selection, should make the K-State coaches glad they put the effort into her recruitment. Last season, as a junior, Wecker averaged 23.7 points and 11.6 rebounds per game.

She is rated by recruiting analyst Greg Swaim as the top player in the state of Kansas and one of the top 10 players in the nation.

In the 1999 4A State tournament, Wecker set state records in three categories — single-game scoring with 41 points, tournament scoring with 95 points and tournament field goals with 39 shots made.



Wecker also has performed well in other arenas. In addition to being a standout volleyball and softball player, she recently was honored in track. Wecker set a state record in the javelin throw with a toss of 169-5 feet and was invited to tryout in the USA Olympic Track and Field Trials.

As a result, Wecker will throw javelin at K-State in addition to playing basketball.

The recritment of Wecker raises the total number of fall 2001 Wildcat commitments to three. Wecker joins Kari Hanson of Bismarck, N.D., and Chelsea Domenico of Thornton, Colo.

as high for this year's squads.

Assistant coach Jim Barnard rowed for the Wildcats while he was a student at K-State and now is in his second year as head of the varsity crew.

"We are one of the top clubs around," Barnard said of the program. "We've got more guys this year. It makes us faster racing side by side in training."

Barnard said dedication, hard work and the right attitude are essential parts of being a successful crew member. Barnard added that physically, it also helps to be tall.

"We can teach anyone to row," he said, "but we can't teach them to grow."

The crew team is bigger than ever this year.

guard, averaged 17 points per game a year ago for Mandan High School. She was a finalist for USA Today's North Dakota Player of the Year honor last year after moving there from Fort Collins, Colo.

Domenico, a 5-foot, 6-inch guard, led Horizon High School to an 18-5 record last year while posting 12 points per game. As a junior, she was a finalist for USA Today's Colorado Player of the Year.

Due to NCAA regulations, K-State women's head basketball coach Deb Patterson is unable to comment on her verbal commitments until they sign national letters of intent.

'America's Team' not beloved by football fans nationwide

MIKE VIETTI

Many, many moons ago, somebody, somewhere, for some unknown reason, anointed the Dallas Cowboys as "America's Team."

Maybe it was Tom Landry or maybe it was Herschel Walker, or perhaps it was Jon Wefald — nobody really seems to know who started this vicious rumor, this dastardly lie.

All I know is that it's pretty hard to be America's team when every single football fan who doesn't root for the Cowboys hates them. Pure and simple. Any time a score flashes on the bottom of the tube, if the Cowboys are losing, it's a victory for all us non-Texans.

Being a reasonable young lad, I'm not really sure where all this hate comes from — even the oldest of football fans routinely snarls at the Cowboys, but for my generation, this blinding hatred stems from one source: good ole Jerry Jones.

I never thought it was possible for an owner in any sport to rise above George Steinbrenner in that category, but Jones has by far exceeded the foundation that Steinbrenner has been laying for 20 years, and he's done it in about half the time.

Everybody has, at the least, extremely disliked the Cowboys since they won back-to-back Super Bowls in 1993 and '94, but when Jones (from now on I'll refer to him in eloquent fashion as Moron) decided that the general manager thing wasn't too tough of a job and wrestled it away from Jimmy Johnson, the hatred has boomed like the gold rush in the 1800s.

Nine times out of 10, arrogance is a bad thing, and this is no exception. Moron pushed one of the better coaches in the last 20 years out the door so he could have his own real life fantasy football team. I suppose choosing draft picks and making free agent decisions would be the dream of any football fan, but none of us actually go out and do it like Moron.

Since he got rid of Johnson after the 1993 season, Moron has done one heck of a job as the Cowboys personnel man.

Check out some of the superstars Moron has drafted in the first two rounds of the draft: Shante Carver, DE, 1st round '94; Sherman Williams, RB, 2nd round '95; Kendell Watkins, TE, 2nd round '95; Shane Hannah, G, 2nd round, '95. Every single one of those players is out of the NFL.

Then toss in wasted picks like tight end David LeFleur, taken in the first round in 1997, or this year's second-round pick, cornerback Dwayne Goodrich, and the follies show expands in length even more.

Check out this nugget, Moron: of the 24 reasonably high picks you had from 1994 to '97 (we'll say rounds 1-4 on this one), two start for your team. I'm not a math major, but I do believe two out of 24 ain't so good. Of the rest of the 24, six are still in the league, but only three of those are starters.

Another wonderful aspect of his decision making was the hiring of Barry Switzer (that name sounds familiar for some reason) and the firing of Chan Gailey. All Switzer did was use up the last bit of energy from the teams Johnson put together, while Gailey proceeded to put the Cowboys back on the right track before Moron dumped him.

If you think Gailey's not a great coach, consider that Kordell Stewart has sucked ever since Gailey left Pittsburgh, or that the running-game inept Miami Dolphins rushed for more than 150 yards in the first game of Gailey's tenure there as the offensive coordinator.

Well, class, what can we conclude from this? I'm thinking that Moron needs to stop doodling around with the Cowboys and hire a real general manager.

The Cowboys were at their best when Moron owned the team, not when Moron ran the team. Moron is a solid owner, there is no debate on that subject, but Moron obviously doesn't know what he's doing when it comes to the rigors of picking those college players or picking a coach or any of the minute details associated with being a general manager.

But hate Moron as much as we all do, we owe him some thanks. As long as he's calling all the shots, the Cowboys will suck, just like they did against the Eagles in their 41-14 loss last weekend.

And, after all, all of us love seeing "America's Team" get kicked around as much as possible.

MP3.com may pay $250 million for violations of copyright laws

By LARRY NEUMEISTER
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — A federal judge Wednesday ordered MP3.com to pay as much as $250 million to Universal Music Group for violating the record company's copyrights by making thousands of CDs available for listening over the Internet.

U.S. District Judge Jed S. Rakoff punished the online music-sharing service at $25,000 per CD, saying it was necessary to send a message to Internet companies. The exact number of CDs involved and total damages will be determined at a November hearing.

Universal Music Group, the world's largest record company, had urged a stiff penalty in a case closely watched by Napster and other businesses that share music or other copyrighted material over the Internet.

The judge said some Internet companies "may have a misconception that, because their technology is somewhat novel, they are somehow immune from the ordinary applications of laws of the United States, including copyright law.

"They need to understand that the law's domain knows no such limits."

MP3.com said it will appeal. The company had argued that a penalty of any more than $500 per CD would be a virtual death sentence.

Shares of MP3.com were halted at $7.88 on the Nasdaq Stock Market before the decision. When trading resumed 2 1/2 hours later, shares plummeted 27 percent to $5.77.

"The ruling was much harsher than I anticipated, as it puts the company literally on the brink," said Nitsan Hargil, an analyst at Kaufman Brothers in New York.

Leonard Rubin, a Chicago attorney who specializes in copyright, trademark and entertainment law, said it was clear courts are not going to tolerate wholesale copying of protected works.

Universal was the only plaintiff.

The nation's four other large record companies settled with MP3.com after Rakoff found earlier this year that MP3.com had violated copyrights. The amount of the settlements was not disclosed, but MP3.com set aside $150 million recently to cover its legal costs.

Universal lawyer Hadrian Katz had asked the judge to award the record company up to $450 million.

"Music is a media, and the next infringement may be very different," Katz said. "It may be video or it may be film or it may be books or it may be something very different."

According to Universal, MP3.com copied 5,000 to 10,000 of its CDs, which means damages could reach $250 million. MP3.com has put the number of CDs at 4,700, which would put the damage award at nearly $118 million.

MP3.com lawyer Michael Rhodes argued that Universal did not deserve what he described as a windfall.

"There's not one iota of evidence that they even lost a penny," he said.

Cocaine production in Colombia continues to increase steadily

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — With the new $1.3 billion U.S. counternarcotics program for Colombia still in the planning stages, coca production there continues to skyrocket, and no significant reductions are expected until 2002, administration officials said Wednesday.

Barry McCaffrey, director of the White House drug control office, said that while CIA estimates won't be available for four months, anecdotal evidence suggests there will be an increase this year over the official 520,000-metric ton estimate for 1999.

McCaffrey and a number of other administration officials briefed reporters on key aspects of the U.S. program a week after President Clinton visited Colombia in a show of solidarity with President Andrews Pastrana's efforts to defeat drug traffickers.

Pastrana said he hopes to earmark $7.5 billion over three years to fight the drug trade, stimulate the economy and reform the judiciary, among other goals. He expects to generate $4 billion locally and use $3.5 billion from the United States and other countries. About $300 million of the U.S. contribution will be earmarked for nonmilitary purposes.

Colombia is by far the world's largest supplier of cocaine and also is an emerging major source of heroin.

Thomas Pickering, under secretary of state, said the forthcoming CIA coca production estimates cannot be viewed as a measure of the success of the U.S. effort because implementation has yet to begin.

Randy Beers, the State Department's top counterdrug official, said 18 Huey helicopters in Colombia were idled when funding ran out earlier this year, but should be ready to resume operations in two to three months. Another 15 Hueys will be sent to Colombia during the first two months of 2001, he said.

He also said the 33 helicopters will be able to provide mobility for one U.S.-trained Colombian counternarcotics battalion and another which should be ready for duty early next year.

Colombia can expect to receive additional Hueys, plus Blackhawk helicopters, during the latter part of 2001, he said.

McCaffrey said that based on anecdotal evidence such as satellite photos and other indicators, the production of cocaine in Colombia is continuing to skyrocket. He said he anticipates that early next year, once the official analyses are completed, "we're going to see more bad news out of Colombia."

Beers said the joint U.S.-Colombian effort is expected to level off coca production by the end of 2001, and bring a dramatic reduction a year later.

Tailgating tradition

Parking lots fill with pregame excitement

By ERIN SCHNEWEIS
Kansas State Collegian

Part of the tradition of watching the football team can be found surrounding the stadium.

The tradition of beer, barbecue and a sea of purple can be found during the tailgating before the games.

Jon Smith, senior in architectural engineering, said Saturday afternoons are his highlight during the fall season.

"We try to get there when the gates open up. We set up the grill, I put on my chef's hat, start cooking and just have a good time," Smith said. "The chef's hat is the most important."

He said he enjoys tailgating because it's not stressful.

"I guess I step into a different suit on Saturday. There are no real worries," he said. "All I have to worry about is if I have enough cold beer and food to eat."

The food Smith cooks usually depend on his financial status.

"I usually cook what I can afford, which is usually burgers and brats, but occasionally steaks, if I want to splurge," he said.

To get extra flavor, Smith said he sometimes adds whiskey or beer to the meat.

EVAN SEMON/Collegian

Todd Fox, Wichita, fires up the grill before the K-State/Louisiana Tech game. Fox has been attending and tailgating at K-State football games since 1994.

For those who don't want the hassle of loading up the grill and buying and preparing the food, they have the option of stopping at a local restaurant or grocery store.

Chris Downs, assistant manager at Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque, said a lot of football fans stop at his restaurant before heading to the game. Downs said customers pick up sliced meats and choose from the variety of side orders, such as beans, potato salads and coleslaw.

For certain games the restaurant tries to put together combinations of the food to make it easier on their patrons.

"Occasionally, we put together tailgate packages and sell those. We usually do it for the bigger games," Downs said.

"This year we probably will for the Oklahoma and Nebraska games."

Beth O'Connor, junior in social sciences, said K-State's opponent makes a difference on the quality of the pregame celebrating.

"It depends on who the game is against. For the Nebraska game, there will be a lot more people tailgating," she said.

Part of the fun of tailgating is the social aspect of it, O'Connor said.

"I just went from group to group and talked to people I knew," she said.

Some students said they were going to start joining the tailgating festivities this year.

Toby Green, senior in construction science, said he has gone to Lawrence on the weekends in the past to party, but plans on sticking around Manhattan this fall for the games.

"I'm going to go with friends and hopefully drink a lot of beer," Green said.

Safety important for successful tailgating food

By KRISTEN DYMACEK
Kansas State Collegian

Food either can make or break a tailgate party.

In order to have a safe, successful tailgate party, Karen Blakeslee, rapid response coordinator for research and extension, said there are several tips to follow in order to keep food, especially meat, from spoiling.

"You can take just about anything to eat," Blakeslee said, "but you want to try to keep it as simple as possible."

Part of keeping it simple includes preparing meat at home, she said.

"You can pre-make hamburger patties before you get out there," Blakeslee said. "There's a cleaner environment to prepare the food, and then it doesn't have to sit out as long."

Dianna Schalles, registered dietitian at Lafene Health Center, said the important thing to remember is to keep meats and mayonnaise-based foods cold until they are ready to be used.

"Keep the food in a cooler with ice and ice packs. The cooler is supposed to be 25-percent ice or ice packs and 75-percent food," Schalles said.

Cold drink cans and frozen hamburger patties also can help keep food cold, she said.

There are certain steps that need to be followed when cooking meat, said David Schafer, extension specialist in meats in animal science industry and department.

"We like to make sure there is a good heat source to cook meat well," Schafer said. "It's important the meat is cooked thoroughly."

In order to make sure the meat is cooked properly, he said he recommends using a meat thermometer to check the temperature.

"When checking the temperature, you want the thermometer to be in the coldest part of the meat possible, so as close to the center as it could possibly be," he said.

The cook also is an important part of proper cooking, James Marsden, regents distinguished professor, said.

"You have to make sure the person that's cooking is not a source of contamination," Marsden said.

Hands need to be washed regularly, he said, if not with soap and water, then with alcohol-based hand wipes.

Schafer said plates and utensils used with the raw meats should not be used again with cooked meats or other foods.

"It gets a little complicated, but what we're trying to do is avoid cross contamination," he said.

Once the meat is cooked, Marsden said not to leave it sitting out for a long time.

"It's very important bacteria doesn't go unchecked," he said. "Bacteria doubles every 15 minutes when it's left out in a high temperature. There is a little grace time when they don't grow, but I wouldn't leave meat out more than an hour."

Blakeslee said there are other options to grilling fresh meat.

"You don't have to barbecue," she said. "You can take sandwiches and pick them up at the last minute."

Arkansas clean-up to require planning

By CARL MANNING
The Associated Press

WICHITA — Cleaning up the polluted Arkansas River is going to take cooperation, time and money, those attending a symposium were told Wednesday.

Some 200 people attended the conference, which brought together representatives of communities along a 200-mile stretch of the Arkansas from Great Bend to Arkansas City. The river runs through Wichita.

Some stretches of the Arkansas have high levels of fecal coliform bacteria, says the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, which is under a court order to reduce pollution in the Arkansas and other rivers.

At times, especially after a heavy rain, the Arkansas between Wichita and Derby is so heavily polluted with bacteria, it is unsafe for skin contact.

Among those attending the two-day conference were federal and state officials, including Gov. Bill Graves, Secretary of Health and Environment Clyde Graeber and Secretary of Agriculture Jamie Clover Adams.

Jack Brown, environmental health director for Wichita and Sedgwick County, called the symposium, which began Tuesday, as a giant brain-storming session.

He said urban and rural runoff is the main culprit for polluting the Arkansas, but the problem is finding the specific cause. A lot of small sources are suspected, such as failed septic tanks, dairy and horse farms, wildlife and pet waste.

"We know what the quality of the river is. What we don't know is the exact cause," Brown said. "The challenge is to go forward and work together."

Brown said how long it will take to clean up the Arkansas is the unanswered question, but added, "It won't be one or two years; it will take a while."

The timetable, he said, depends in large part on how long it takes to identify the specific problems, come up with plans to deal with them and getting the money to pay for it.

"It's dead if there's no cooperation," Brown said.

Echoing the theme of cooperation was Ron Hammerschmidt, KDHE director of environment, who said, "We all are going to have to work together. Everybody is going to have to be in on this together."

Hammerschmidt said the state's role is to "act as a bureaucratic filter. We will try to cut through the red tape and get things done."

Graves began the day's session by urging people to work together to meet the balance between the needs of people and the needs of the environment.

"The search for the ideal balance will be a work in progress," Graves said. "What won't change is Kansans' commitment to seek that balance."

Tire safety problems cited since 1997

By NEDRA PICKLER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Bridgestone/Firestone Inc. collected data from 1997 to 1999 indicating possible safety problems with the same tire models that were recalled last month and are being investigated in 88 U.S. traffic deaths, according to documents obtained by The Associated Press.

Officials with Ford Motor Co., which uses the tires, previously said the tire maker told them it did not compile such data.

The internal Bridgestone/Firestone documents marked "confidential" show most of the customer reports of tread separation involved tires from the company's Decatur, Ill., plant. More than a third of the reports involved the P235/75R15 size tires that now are under recall.

The documents were made available to the AP on the same day two congressional hearings opened to find out when Bridgestone/Firestone and Ford knew about the problem and why the recall did not come earlier.

Masatoshi Ono, chief executive of Bridgestone/Firestone, testified before the Senate Appropriations transportation subcommittee and apologized for the fatal accidents. He also pledged to bring in an outside independent investigator to try to find out what caused tread separation problems on some tires.

"I come before you to apologize to you, the American people, and especially to the families who have lost loved ones in these terrible rollover accidents," Ono said.

"We feel a heavy responsibility to make certain that we are worthy still of your continued trust and confidence."

The tire maker announced a recall Aug. 9 of the P235/75R15 size ATX and ATX II models as well as Wilderness AT tires in the same size. Many of the tires were made at the Decatur plant. The tires are standard equipment on some Ford models, including the Explorer.

The documents show that of the 506 light-truck-tire claims reported to Bridgestone/Firestone in 1997, 54 percent were for the ATX II tires. In 1998, 59 percent of 854 claims were for that model and in 1999 51 percent of the 1,105 claims were on ATX II tires.

The documents are not dated, so it is unclear when the data were compiled. However, Ford and Bridgestone/Firestone previously maintained no statistics were compiled showing problems with the tires until Ford analyzed Bridgestone/Firestone's claims of property damage or injuries in late July and early August.

Ford spokesman Jon Harmon said he was unaware of the internal documents. "It's the first time I've heard of this information," he said.

Bridgestone/Firestone did not immediately return a call seeking comment.

In the meantime, lawmakers weighed in on the issue.

"This hearing is not just about the topic of safety," Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., said at the subcommittee hearing. "It's about the topic of honesty."

Joan Claybrook, president of the consumer advocacy group Public Citizen, called for federal legislation requiring tougher safety standards and penalties for corporate misconduct.

"Ford and Firestone covered up safety problems with the tire/SUV combination for almost a decade," Claybrook said.

Multiple lawsuits charging that the Firestone tires could lose their tread or blow out on the road have been filed over the past 10 years, and Ford started recalling the tires on its vehicles in 16 foreign nations more than a year ago amid reports of safety problems.

Ford did not tell U.S. officials when it conducted the overseas recalls and is not required to do so by law.

Helen Petrauskas, Ford's vice president of environmental and safety engineering, told senators Firestone had insisted the problems overseas were caused by poor repairs, road hazard damage and extreme operating conditions and their own company testing found no defect trends in American versions of the tires.

"The first we heard about (the defect trends) was when NHTSA opened their investigation and required Firestone to assemble and provide data on property damage, personal injury and lawsuits," she said.

It wasn't until four months ago that the federal government began investigating the case and less than a month ago that Bridgestone/Firestone announced a voluntary recall of 6.5 million ATX, ATX II and Wilderness tires.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration said it has received more than 1,400 complaints, including reports of 88 deaths and at least 250 injuries that might be linked to the tires.

Ford and Bridgestone/Firestone say they still do not know what is causing the tread separation, blowouts and other defects customers have reported.

"Why did we have to wait for perhaps 80 people to die on the highway for somebody to pay attention to the problem?" Rep. Billy Tauzin, R-La., said Tuesday. Tauzin was to preside over a House hearing Wednesday afternoon.

Last week, NHTSA issued a warning about the safety of 1.4 million tires beyond the 6.5 million recalled models. Bridgestone/Firestone continues to insist there is no reason to expand the recall to include those tires.

capped accessible, and if they are not, construction is put on hold until it is.

"Anytime we issue a permit for a commercial structure, we ensure that it is made accessible to the extent feasible," Claussen said. "If you are going into a building, you need to have the same access to the services as someone not disabled."

Dankenbring said the biggest inconvenience lies in Aggieville.

"Some of the stores you can get around in the back, but it's not very accessible. It's hard to find," she said.

Due to a lack of signs, she didn't know that several of the stores were accessible at all. Java Espresso & Bakery and the Rock-A-Belly Deli were two stores she didn't realize had accessibility.

"It's not obvious at all, so they need to make some sort of sign," Dankenbring said. "Just make signs like they do on campus, like a sign with an arrow."

Mark Skochdopole, Java owner, said signs indicating its location weren't there when he purchased the store, and he thought people knew there was a handicap entrance.

"I never realized that people didn't know that because I have several people that are handicapped that come in on a regular basis," he said.

Dankenbring said Aggieville is not the only place where the accessible entrance can be difficult. Entrances that don't have an automatic door make entering the building difficult.

A manual door means she has two options: she either must have her helper with her to go inside and open it or she must call first to inform them what time she will be arriving so that a worker can open it for her.

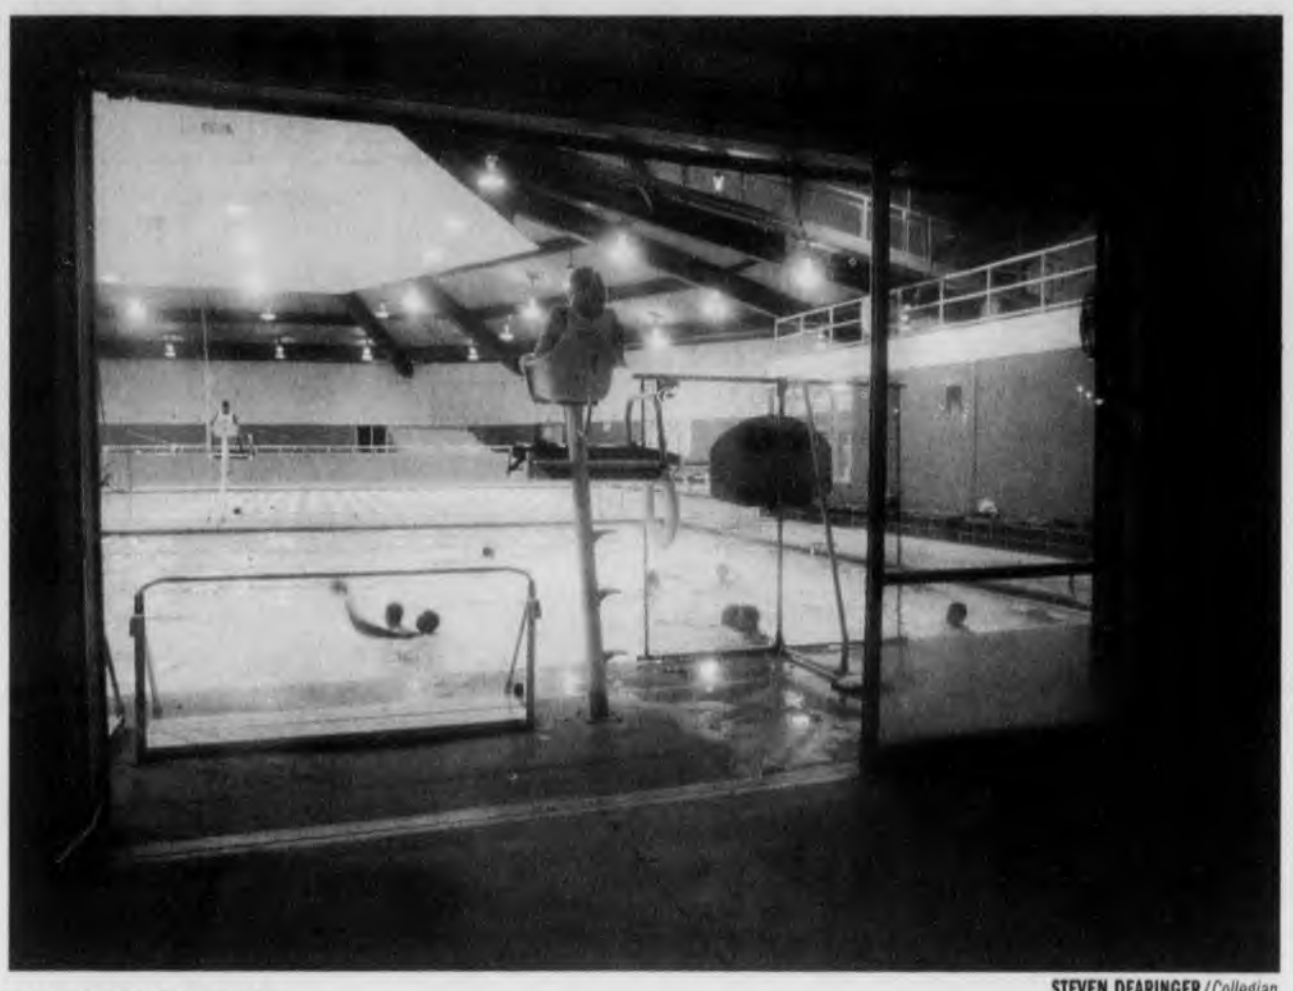
Parking spaces can create a problem if they are too narrow, Dankenbring said, such as in front of Scholtzsky's Deli. She said that even though they probably are up to standard, they are narrow, making it hard for her to get in and out of her van.

Dankenbring said a public transportation system for the elderly and disabled is available, and that it's nice to have except for one thing — it's hours of operation are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

"They're not really conducive for the college student," she said.

Harmes said the city has worked hard to provide services for the disabled. They had a significant part in developing a computer technology assisted center at the Manhattan Public Library. The computer program is user-friendly for the sight impaired and has a database that can help them search for jobs.

Frank Anneberg Park's playground was designed for disabled children. With the help of private funds and donations, the playground was built so that its equipment is accessible for the disabled.



Also, a new surfacing material was used so in case a child was to fall, it wouldn't hurt as much as falling onto asphalt.

The new amphitheater at the Sunset Zoological Park also is handicapped accessible.

"The city has really gone above and beyond the ADA standards," Harmes said.

Harmes said another step they take to ensure standards are met is to self-evaluate themselves each year.

"I think the city has taken main strides — milestones — in making our buildings accessible," she said.

TOP SECRET

"It's east to west, north to south," he said.

In fact, Kansas was one of the areas that few complaints came from, Hamblin said. The office still is trying to figure out exactly how many people did participate in the business.

"I'm fairly certain we're talking more than a thousand," he said.

Additional allegations against Top Secrets are that the company has referred to amounts of money employees could earn without being able to give an example, misrepresented state consumers' right to cancel, did not make guaranteed refunds and offered a CD-ROM for sale that does not exist.

One of Top Secrets' home pages also still states that the company is "registered with the BBB..."

However, the Web site of the Better Business Bureau Serving Northeast Kansas, based in Topeka, has Top Secrets, formerly known as Fortune 5000, listed as a company that does not have the BBB's permission to use its trademarks and has refused repeated requests to stop using them.

At present, Hamblin said negotiations are proceeding in the civil case and an investigation is being made into criminal violations. Each alleged violation carries a potential penalty of $5,000, which rises to $10,000 if the transaction is with a person older than 65.

TKE house cleans up after fire

By JENN DAVOREN
Kansas State Collegian

More than a week has passed since the Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity house was damaged by fire, and members are working to clean up the mess — the blackened, smoky mess left by the flames, and the mess left behind by well-circulated rumors.

No people were harmed by the burning of room 305, but residents J.J. Fischer, sophomore in computer engineering, Kevin Osborn, freshman in mechanical engineering, and Shawn Ward, junior in electrical engineering, remember a few casualties: a TV set, an entire closet of clothes and shoes, and books left on a couch that caught fire, to name a few.

"I found my football tickets," Ward said, finding a bright side.

Ward said he was the first to go to bed the night of the incident, turning the lights out around 1:30 a.m. Aug. 31. Fischer was next just one hour later, followed by Osborn at 3 a.m.

No one knows when the trouble began, but it was first noted between 4:15 and 4:30 a.m. when one of the residents got up to get a drink of water. When he returned, a couch in a corner of the room was engulfed in flames.

TKE President John Muehring said the three residents ran from room to room to alert other members of the house to the danger. No one knows whether the building's fire alarm was set off by smoke or a member of the house, but it also helped to clear out the fraternity members.

Muehring said less than five minutes passed between the time smoke alarms first sounded and the time the TKEs evacuated the building. The Manhattan Fire Department pulled in front of the house just as the last two residents exited the building.

A head count was taken in the TKE parking lot to account for the 65 members sleeping at home that night.

"Everybody was accounted for," Muehring said. "Our house mom was out of town, and two guys weren't at the house, but we knew where they were."

A phone call woke Dan Messelt, an insurance representative with the Charlson & Wilson Insurance Agency, at 6:30 a.m. Thursday. Messelt, a 1966 TKE alumnus from the University of Kansas, not only represents the fraternity in insurance matters, but serves on the TKE housing cooperative, an organization that helps members

Cellular users having trouble with service

■ Local Voice Stream Wireless, Sprint PCS services disrupted due to unexpected call volume.

By BRYAN MURPHY
Kansas State Collegian

Many cellular phone users in the Manhattan area recently have experienced problems with connections when trying to make calls.

Customers of two cellular providers in particular — Sprint PCS and Voice Stream Wireless — might have had trouble with their service in the past few days.

Sprint PCS towers in Manhattan receive up to 15,000 hits per day, with as many as 3,000-4,000 hits at any given time.

The big problem with the recent cell phone connections has been simple — multiple users and limited resources.

"The big factor was school starting up again," said Donnie Wise, director of business sales for Sprint PCS. "We didn't expect to have this much success right away, and so many people were using phones that we didn't have the abilities to keep up with all the calls."

Representatives of VoiceStream Wireless could not be reached for comment, although some users of that service have admitted having problems with good phone connections.

"On Wednesday, it didn't work at all. There was no signal," Shawn Patterson, sophomore in business management, said.

There are many causes for such connection problems, including the possibility of harsh weather, high air temperatures and the overall geography of the local area.

"Actually, we have not had any recent equipment failures that may be due to bad weather," Wise said.

Natural events, such as a lightning strike or a strong wind, actually might damage towers for up to a day before many problems can be fixed.

Brett Nelson, sophomore in sociology, calls his team in before a competition to explain factors that could play a role in the outcome of the game. Nelson voluntarily took classes to become a licensed soccer coach.

Student enjoys spending time as youth soccer coach

Nelson explains to Matt Tomich his role in the game between Manhattan High School and Topeka West High School. Nelson found that coaching has helped to keep him involved in a sport he loves.

By APRIL MIDDLETON
Kansas State Collegian

K-State sophomore Brett Nelson wanted back in the game.

Nelson, sophomore in sociology, said he coaches a youth soccer team in order to stay involved in the game he loves. He also coaches the Manhattan High School freshman soccer team.

Nelson said coaching the U12 Warriors, a part of the Little Apple Soccer Club, has become one of his favorite pastimes.

"Knowing that the little guys are having a good time is the greatest part," Nelson said. "I can remember when I was their age and playing and learning the game. I liked it just as much."

Nelson said he played soccer when he was younger, and as he got older, found interests other than soccer. He said that when he moved to K-State, he missed the game and began coaching. Before moving to Manhattan, he coached a U11 team in Emporia, his hometown.

"I've played soccer ever since I can remember,"

Senate vote supports life-safety inspections

■ Resolution adopted to send official students' opinion to city.

By BRYAN SCRIBNER
Kansas State Collegian

A resolution declaring support for a mandatory rental-inspection program in Manhattan was unanimously adopted at Thursday's Student Senate meeting.

Support for this legislation was not adopted last week. Student Body President Jake Worcester provided additional statistics regarding the program.

Worcester said about 16,000 students live off-campus. He said a large portion of the city's rental housing tenants are students, and about 45 percent of all housing in Manhattan is rental property.

"This is a good program and it's time for this to happen," he said. "I think it's common sense."

The resolution, Worcester said, was not intended to endorse or recommend a specific plan for the city. Rather, it will indicate that the student body is in favor of the proposal.

"It's time to address this need in the community," he said.

The Manhattan Fire Department inspects all rental housing containing three or more units annually for fire and life-safety violations. All other properties, though, are not required to perform inspections, Worcester said.

If acquired by the city, the inspections would be in compliance with the Board of Code Administrator's Code.

Worcester said students should expect a minimum requirement for inspections. He said K-State students are residing in properties that should not pass code requirements in the United States.

Communities in Iowa, Missouri and Oklahoma have universities similar in size to K-State. Worcester said programs such as this have been successful in these areas.

"It's time to address this need in the community," he said. "This is part of a plan that's going to help enhance Manhattan overall."

The unanimous support from Senate was surprising, said Matt Wolters, agricultural senator and government relations chair. He said he expected a few senators to vote against the proposal.

"Evidently other people saw the benefits of it," he said. "Everybody deserves to live in some place safe."

Inspections could cost $36 per rental unit for three years, which could raise rental rates about $1 per month. Although Worcester previously said they would occur every three years, he said this could change.

Phil Anderson, faculty representative to Student Senate and instructor in the Department of Speech Communication, Theatre and Dance, has owned about seven rental units for 19 years. He said he is not concerned with operating costs.

"This is not about standards of living, it's about safety," he said.

The city recommends BOCA codes, but Anderson said it does not enforce them.

"I think the most important thing to stress is this is something that is good for the city as a whole in protecting it from future lawsuits."

Discrimination reason for chapter suspension

ATHENS, Ga. — The University of Georgia suspended the Alpha Gamma Delta sorority pending an investigation of a racial discrimination complaint.

A member of the sorority told university officials that a black student was denied admission because of her race during recruitment for the fall semester, said Richard Mullendore, vice president for student affairs.

The unidentified sorority member said she expected retaliation from the campus chapter after she filed the complaint. She since has withdrawn from school.

Under Wednesday's interim suspension, the sorority can't conduct social or recruitment activities. The organization also is investigating the complaint, Georgia officials said. Alpha Gamma Delta officials did not immediately return a call seeking comment.

"Based on the allegation and the early investigation as reported to me, it appears this sorority has acted wrongly in both motive and result," university President Michael Adams said.

Alpha Gamma Delta, based in Indianapolis, has 178 undergraduate chapters and 123,000 members worldwide, according to the group's Web site. It was formed in 1904 by 11 students at Syracuse University.

Hydrogen fire injures 2 at local fertilizer plant

LAWRENCE — Two men were injured Wednesday in a hydrogen fire at the Farmland Industries plant.

The fire is the latest in a series of accidents at the fertilizer plant. Plant manager Dick Lind said Wednesday's fire started when a spark ignited gas escaping from a release valve.

Lawrence Fire Chief Jim McSwain said one man was hospitalized in good condition and the other was taken by private vehicle for treatment. His condition was not available.

The accident was under investigation and occurred outside the same compressor building where a fire and explosion in July caused major damage, Lind said. The plant was shut down for six weeks.

The latest fire was not related to earlier problems, Lind said. The July blast was pinned on mechanical failure.

Lind said the men, employed by a subcontractor working at the plant, were on top of the compressor building putting screen mesh in place to block openings under a deck. The mesh was used to keep out birds.

The men were rescued with an aerial ladder, Lind said. The fire burned out about 5 p.m., an hour after it began. Lind did not have a damage estimate.

The plant, which was shut down after the fire, was scheduled to shut down Thursday and Friday for maintenance on a compressor.

"We aren't going to reopen until we are sure what caused the fire," Lind said. "We are interested in the safety of our employees and the concerns of the neighbors."

Explosions at the plant on July 7 and July 14 kept the plant closed until this week. McSwain said he was concerned about the problems with the plant's equipment.

Gap2K store opens in Manhattan Town Center

By NANCY HULL
Kansas State Collegian

Nine months of Y2K passed before Manhattan finally had the opportunity to fall into Gap2K.

The Gap opened in the Dillard's wing of Manhattan Town Center on Wednesday, and the store is classified as one of 56 Gap2K stores in the United States, Gap associate manager Davis Brants said.

The Manhattan Gap is distinguished as a Gap2K because of the store's new look. Its open floor plan, lighter look and wood interior set it apart, Brants said.

Since the anticipated Sept. 1 opening was pushed back, Manhattan residents were eager for the mall's latest addition to open its doors.

Brants said the store opened at 3:45 p.m., but previously announced it would open at 3 p.m.

"From 2:35 until 3:45 there were about 35 people lined up outside the gate. Everyone was waiting for it to open," Brants said.

Brants said Gap brings a distinctive clothing option to Manhattan.

"We have everything people need," he said. "There's attire for work and lots of denim as well."

The Manhattan location should bring in a number of people from surrounding towns, including Wamego and Junction City, Brants said.

He said GapKids, which is connected to Gap, should be a success.

"There's no other place to shop for kids in Manhattan," Brants said.

For some residents, Manhattan's Gap will cut back on the hassle of driving to a Gap in another city.

"I usually go to Gap in Kansas City, but there's a lot less traffic here," Soo Bae, junior in kinesiology, said.

Bae said she's always worn clothes from the Gap because she likes their casual, basic clothing.

"In Kansas City, they're always sold out of my size," she said. "Everyone gets the same size, and it's always so busy there."

REED DUNN/Collegian

Gap opened at Manhattan Town Center on Wednesday afternoon. The store is one of 56 Gap2K stores within the company, offering a more open layout and wider variety of styles for customers.

Bae said she doesn't expect Manhattan's Gap to run out of certain sizes as quickly.

Joe Catanzaro, senior in economics, said he was shopping at Gap in search of a winter coat. Catanzaro moved to Manhattan from Florida four weeks ago.

"The clothes in here are a lot different from Gaps in Florida," he said. "There aren't ever any sweaters or anything there because there are always summer clothes."

Although Catanzaro said Manhattan's mall is fairly small compared to what he's used to, he said it's nice to recognize a store name from back home.

Randy Crow, marketing director for Manhattan Town Center, said the Gap's national popularity will draw people to the Manhattan store.

"It brings something fresh that's widely known and people are used to seeing," Crow said.

He said Gap was the No. 1 requested addition to the mall.

"Everyone really wanted to see Gap. It offers a lot to everyone," he said. "The certain appeal and know name will draw people in, and then they'll look at the clothes and realize they've found something they need."

Greek houses choosing to become handicapped-accessible

By NANCY FOSTER
Kansas State Collegian

As private residences, the greek community is not required to meet the standards of the Americans With Disabilities Act; however, many houses are beginning to see it as a priority regardless.

"It's a growing trend, and it's something I think greek houses are looking more seriously at," said Mary Schwartz, senior in biology and president of Delta Delta Delta.

The Tri-Delt house is not handicapped-accessible. There are several steps up to the front door that would prevent wheelchair users from entering. However, because the steps are few and small, Schwartz said a portable ramp easily could be put into place. As for making the rest of the house accessible, she said it's in the plans.

"It's something that's definitely been evaluated and looked at to see what we have to do to make it accessible. It's definitely in the plans for the future," she said.

Schwartz said accessibility is a topic they have discussed in Panhellenic Council for several years, but financial reasons have restricted putting these plans into action. Creating an entrance to the front door would be easily solved, and having a room to live in wouldn't be difficult with the 10 rooms on the first floor.

Where the biggest expense would lie is in the bathrooms and showers, Schwartz said. In these areas, many regulations must be met, such as the stall size, door handle type, permanent walls and facility heights.

"That's a major renovation," Schwartz said. "It's not just a matter of putting up a bar."

Lambda Chi Alpha is not accessible in nearly any aspect, said Tim Blake, junior in finance and external vice-president. With steps to the front door and no rooms on the first floor, living in the house would be impossible.

"Our house is really old. Our chapter has been here since the '60s and has never really had renovations done," he said.

Blake said renovations are in their plans for the year 2005 and will include making the house handicapped-accessible.

Beta Theta Pi members said their house is wheelchair-accessible, but not equipped for residents in wheelchairs. There is handicapped parking in the front and a ramp to the front door, but no first floor bedrooms.

Ben Hemmen, junior in business and Beta Theta Pi president, said creating first-floor rooms was supposed to be a part of its renovation and expansion in 1997. However, the chapter ran out of funds before the expansion process could be completed. Now, he said, it might either create a first floor bedroom or implement an elevator to the second floor.

"We're looking into it," Hemmen said. "We're hoping to go through our expansion in the next two years."

Funds to complete the expansion would come from fund-raising and alumni donations.

Hemmen said giving all people the chance to join the greek community was important whether they are deaf, blind, use a wheelchair or even learning disabled — all forms of disability.

"Just recently, we had someone in a wheelchair go through rush. It's out there, and the fraternities and sororities are aware," he said. "I think the entire greek system is making it a priority. We won't discriminate against anyone that wants to join a fraternity or sorority. You are given every opportunity to join this house, so why shouldn't anyone else?"

For the first time in K-State history, a woman who uses a wheelchair went through sorority recruitment in fall 2000, joining one of the six accessible houses, Alpha Xi Delta.

The Alpha Xi president could not be reached for comment.

Mike Stamm, FarmHouse president, said their house is completely accessible and has been since its establishment in 1957.

"I don't know if it was a priority back then, it's just always been that way," he said.

Stamm said it is a priority now, and they got to experience firsthand just how accessible it was when one of their members used a wheelchair.

"I never heard that he had any problems," he said.

The member lived in the house for four years and was the president for two years. The only part of the house not accessible is the chapter room, which has four steps leading down to it. For chapter, the member would have to be carried down the steps. Stamm said he did not know why this was not fixed during renovations, but it never has caused many problems — even for their former disabled member.

Elaine Gruenbacher, senior in secondary education and Kappa Alpha Theta president, said her sorority is accessible to an extent. The first-floor entrance is accessible and rooms exist on the base floor; however, the bathrooms are not accessible.

"A wheelchair person can get into our house, but that's about it," she said.

Making the bathrooms accessible is in the long-term plans, Gruenbacher said.

Because of financial reasons and lack of an immediate need, it hasn't been the top priority, she said. After the woman went through recruitment, it made the house more aware of the need. She said if someone disabled did pledge their house, converting the bathrooms would become their top priority.

Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, said she feels most houses are interested in making their establishment accessible, but that the financial burden is prohibitive.

"I think everyone is interested in working toward that goal, but a lot of it depends on the house corporations and how they choose to prioritize it," she said. "We certainly encourage the chapters in making their houses handicapped accessible."

Students must protect their credit records

Credit cards can either be a blessing or a dangerous thing, depending on how they are used.

But sometimes, when they aren't used, it can create a hassle.

Some students apply for the card to obtain a free T-shirt, snack or small gadget. When the cards arrive, these students just cut them up and throw them away. Yet in the fine print, it states that if the individual does not call to cancel their card, there is an activation fee involved.

When the card is not used, this can result in lower ratings from the credit bureau. This can be the case when students have cards with a large credit amount because it creates the possibility of credit problems.

While it is all too easy to fill out the application, the small print needs to be looked at: for instance, the details in terms of the card's annual fee, the annual percentage rate, late fees and the overall financial charges.

In terms of the university, there are some requirements when there is solicitation in the K-State Student Union.

Last April, the Union Governing Board approved a motion that requires materials to be present on the positive and negative aspects of credit cards when students are applying for cards. However, that same information is not required elsewhere on campus.

This information should be mandatory not only in the Union, but on the campus as a whole.

Students, remember to read the small print, and when the cards arrive, make sure there are no hidden fees.

No free T-shirt or candy bar is worth the hassle of risking your credit.

HIGH HOPES

Columnist gives wishlist to freshmen

JOSEPH HURLA

I arrived at K-State three years ago naive, curious and well-fed.

I will graduate — with a little luck and maybe some well-placed cash — in December, naive, curious and malnourished.

I guess some things never change.

It might not appear that I have made much progress since my freshman year. However, that is not true — I have had some of the best years of my life at K-State and changed drastically since my arrival.

I hope the new class at K-State — the thousands of freshmen still trying to find out what college life really is — enjoy their time as much as I have. Since many of you still are trying to find out what college life is, let me give you a quick explanation. This might be the only time someone tells you what college life really is.

If you're in the residence halls, turn off your video game. If you're in a fraternity or sorority, tell your brother or sister to put down the paddle for a few minutes — this is important.

There are lots of things that I have done in college that I hope you all have a chance to do sometime, too.

I hope you live for months at a time on a steady diet of ramen noodles — with an occasional egg for protein.

I hope you go three straight days without sleep to prepare for a killer final in a tough class.

I hope you make up for it by sleeping the entire day before a pud final in an easy one.

I hope you feel the excitement in KSU Stadium as you and your friends ravage the goalposts.

I hope you make friends so wonderful they give you a reason to pull yourself out of bed every morning and trek to campus.

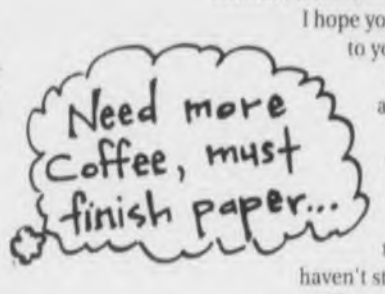
I hope they also are wonderful enough to understand when you decide not to.

I hope you remain such good friends with people you already know that you constantly try to persuade them to drop out of Washburn, quit their job at Dairy Queen and come to Manhattan with you. Dude, you would have so much fun!

I hope you go out on a hot summer night and make the sprinklers on campus your Slip 'N Slide.

I hope you waste your last few dollars of food money bowling and playing video games in the K-State Student Union.

I hope you go excitedly into an Aggieville dance club only to recall the painfully obvious fact that looms over your head — you can't dance.



I hope you still try.

I hope you meet the woman of your dreams.

OK, or man.

I hope you and your roommate become good enough friends that you go on 3 a.m. Pizza Shuttle runs together.

I hope you go to lots of parties and meet lots of people.

I hope you remember the fun and people the next day.

I hope you get in over your head.

I hope you get out.

I hope you find a job you love.

I hope you get paid better than I do.

I hope your mother gets upset with you when she learns the only meat product you've eaten since July is a hot dog.

And the only vegetable was ketchup.

I hope you have so much fun in Manhattan that you consider it home.

I hope you learn to appreciate your trips back to your real home.

I hope you oil up some cookie sheets and go sledding in the winter.

I hope you find a way to furnish your entire apartment for less than $20.

I hope you find a way to squeak through your classes knowing you haven't studied nearly enough.

I hope you do things that I've never done.

Careless driving leaves heartache behind

ERIN SCHNEWEIS

With two totaled vehicles under her belt, she changed my family's life forever.

One week ago today, a 20-year-old woman ran a stop sign and pulled out on the highway in front of my dad. He did everything possible to avoid hitting her, but struck her bumper. This caused him to strike a light pole and roll his company van numerous times in the ditch.

While my dad was in surgery, being treated for serious head injuries, she walked out of the hospital with a small cut on her head.

Maybe she is remorseful.

Perhaps there were moments when she wondered if the man she put in the intensive care unit was okay. But I have a feeling there is a lot more to the story than she knows.

For instance, how sick my mom, oldest brother and his wife were as they drove an hour and a half to the hospital; how the false rumors of how he might be paralyzed were running through their minds.

Does she know how it felt to literally hear the tears in one of my other brother's voice as he told me that I needed to get to the hospital as soon as I could? How the hour and a half it took me to reach the hospital seemed to take an eternity? Does she know that because of her reckless driving, she almost killed the man I love?

To her, this might be just another victim of her driving, but this was someone who meant a great deal to everyone who knew him.

This is the man whose mere presence I find strength in, the man whose words of wisdom have comforted me in almost every situation in which I needed him, the man whose guidance gave me the courage to stand up for what I believe in and to go against what I did not.

To her, it might have been a 48-year-old business man. Another person who was unfortunate to be in her driving path.

But to me, this is one of my best friends.

This is the man who let me stand on his toes and dance in our living room when I was a child; the man who, while he slept, wouldn't get too upset when he would wake up to find that I had put red, blue and yellow plastic barrettes in his hair; the man whom I love sitting outside on our deck with, listening to Jimmy Buffett music and talking about what really matters in life.

When she pulled out in front of him, she almost took away so many memories that he has been looking forward to making, like the chance for him to eventually hold his first grandchild; the chance for him to walk his only daughter down the aisle when she gets married; the chance to grow young with my mom.

Accidents happen. This is a part of life that must be accepted, but it makes me sick to my stomach to think what could have happened. As a family, we are comforted by the realization that he survived.

It seems like, as a society, we have the "seize the day" notion pounded into our heads. Too many times we forget that life is too short to hold grudges and to tell someone you love them. Over and over, we have been told that family is everything. In situations like this, you realize it's true.

I am not going to tell you to call your family and let them know how much they mean to you. Nor will I tell you the importance of writing a hand-written letter thanking them for everything they have done for you.

But trust me, there will come a time when you wish you would have. The question remains — will it be too late?

Purple Power Play on Poyntz successful due to assistance

Editor,

Thanks to help from many different groups and individuals in the community, this year's Purple Power Play on Poyntz was a great success. The extremely hot weather did not deter more than 20,000 people from celebrating K-State and the beginning of football season.

On behalf of the Board of Directors of Purple Power Play on Poyntz, I would like to thank FarmHouse fraternity members for their assistance in setting up and for cleaning up after the event. They also helped out by running the inflatable games that Varney's Book Store provided for the children. The FarmHouse members were a tremendous help in making the event run smoothly.

We also would like to thank Intrust Bank for its sponsorship of the cast stage and the spectacular fireworks show, and Cox Communications for sponsoring the west stage. Varney's deserves thanks for sponsoring the children's inflatable carnival, as does Coca-Cola for sponsoring the hospitality room. A special thank you also to Coach Bill Snyder and the team, as well as Greg Sharpe, the Classy Cats, Cheerleaders, KSU Marching Band and Willie the Wildcat for their participation in the pep rallies. Also, thanks to Hawley Printing, Manhattan Parks and Recreation, Riley County Police and Fire Departments, Soul Provider, Harry's Uptown and the Chamber of Commerce, as well as Brent Bowman, Schlotzky's, Manhattan Medical Supply and Salvation Army for the use of their buildings. Because of the cooperation and participation by all of these people and many more, Purple Power Play proved to be a fun-filled community event.

We look forward to next year's event before the first home football game. If you have any suggestions for next year's Purple Power Play, please write to Karen Schroeder, K-State Alumni Association, 2323 Anderson Ave., Suite 400, Manhattan, KS 66502, or e-mail to kschroeder@k-state.com.

Professor entertains students through UPC lecture on sex

By STACI HAUSCHILD
Kansas State Collegian

It's not often that someone encourages college students to have sex as often as they like.

"This is a great day for sex," said Betsy Bergen, professor in family studies and human services. "Someone said that you should only have sex on days starting with 'T.' Tuesday, Thursday, today, tomorrow, Taturday and Tunday. Wednesday, go to church."

Bergen, a professor at K-State since 1965, spoke about "How to Improve Your Sex Life" at 7 p.m. Thursday in the Union Main Ballroom.

Bergen said people are surrounded by sex from the time they are born.

"Is it a boy or a girl?" she said. "That is a sexual question. You can't tell by looking at the fingernails."

As children, boys and girls already set themselves up for their roles during sex, Bergen said. Girls look for a best friend and someone they can talk to, whereas boys look to be the best by competing against their friends.

"Women think the relationship is working as long as you can talk things out," Bergen said. "Men think it's not working if you have to talk about. Most people don't talk during sex. 'What's to talk about? Let's just do it,' right?"

And while Bergen said people should have sex — partner and casual — as often as both people enjoy it, she said there are ways to improve it.

In partner sex, Bergen said couples should find out their partner's needs and talk about it.

"Rule one is for women: take off your shell with your clothes, but don't do anything that you don't really enjoy," she said.

"Clothes. You say you wear clothes to attract men, but if you really wanted to attract men you wouldn't wear any."

Betsy Bergen, professor in family studies and human services

Bergen said couples should also find out their partner's needs and talk about them, as men and women want different things.

Men can't have sex without motivation, she said.

"Men are motivated when they feel needed," Bergen said. "Not to be needed is to be death for men. Always need a guy. If you don't need him, get rid of him and get someone you do need."

Women need to feel cherished, Bergen said.

"We need to be told, 'I love you.' Saying, 'She knows I love her. I don't have to tell her' doesn't work," she said.

Bergen also said women like things that begin with the letter "C."

"Clothes. You say you wear clothes to attract men, but if you really wanted to attract men you wouldn't wear any," she said. "Cuddling, communication, caring and companionship."

Men, however, like things that begin with "S."

"'S' for sex, for sex, for sex, for sports, for speed, for solutions, and for self," Bergen said.

Bergen said she thought both like things with the letter "F."

"'F' as in fun, fantasy and food," she said. "And you can add whatever else you want."

For good, casual sex, Bergen said both partners should be consenting. In addition, she said both partners should make it clear that the relationship is limited to sexual enjoyment, and that both partners are responsible for precautions with STDs and unwanted pregnancy.

Before the speech, members of SHAPE, STDs, HIV, AIDS Peer Educators, distributed condoms and safe sex brochures.

"We're promoting safe sex and awareness to K-State," Kristi Kreutzer, senior in life science pre-nursing, said.

Janell Hill, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management, said she had heard Bergen was a good speaker and wanted to hear what she had to say.

"She did a good job at keeping things geared at the college students' level," Hill said.

Hill said she learned more about how to treat each other in a relationship.

"There are things you don't realize about men and men don't realize about women," she said. "It helps you look at each other man than in a sexual way."

COACHING

Nelson said. "Coaching keeps me in the game."

To ensure that he could remain in the game, Nelson said he attained two coaching licenses which require written and practical tests. The E license required 28 hours of class time and the D required 38. Nelson said he got them, even though they aren't required, to make sure he was qualified to teach the youth.

Denise Braun, the Warriors team mom, said dedication is what makes Nelson the perfect coach for her 12-year-old son, as well as many others.

"Brett has done such a great job with the boys," Braun said. "He is very dedicated to the team, which makes the boys respond to him better."

Another reason she said the boys respond so well to him is because he is a young person.

"College students like Brett can relate to the kids' trials and tribulations," Braun said. "It hasn't been that long since he was their age."

Nelson said it might not have been that long ago since he was the same age as the youths he coaches, but he sees that as a strength to his coaching style.

"I'm a bit younger than some of the parents who may coach, and it's a little easier for me to get down to their level," Nelson said. "Besides, I think that they really look up to someone who is my age."

Manhattan Parks and Recreation also coordinates several city league youth sports teams, including soccer, that rely heavily on college students to coach.

Mike Buchanan, recreational supervisor, said more youth playing sports at a younger age requires more coaches.

Buchanan said 50 percent of the 56 fall soccer teams are coached by college students.

"We're fortunate to be in a college town," Buchanan said. "We don't have enough parents to go around. We rely on having college students who are interested in coaching."

Buchanan said it is not necessary to be a master of the sport to coach a youth team; however, the more coaches know, the easier their job is.

"More important than exceptional skills in the sport is to enjoy being around kids," Buchanan said. "Regardless of age, background or career, a good coach is a good coach."

Braun said she believes being in sports has endless benefits. Braun said the kids are learning much more than the game of soccer.

"They are learning teamwork and responsibility," she said. "Being involved in extracurricular activities such as this teaches them much more than just the sport."

Nelson said he is proud to be able to instill values in the kids he coaches. However, the pleasure doesn't stop there.

"I almost feel like I'm their age again. I remember how much I enjoyed the game when I was their age," Nelson said. "It feels good to help them like I was helped when I was learning."

CELL PHONES

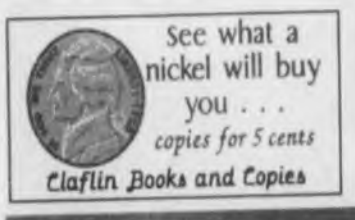
usually isn't a determining factor in loss of service," Quinton Morton, Sprint PCS employee, said. "If such a situation did arise, it could easily be fixed."

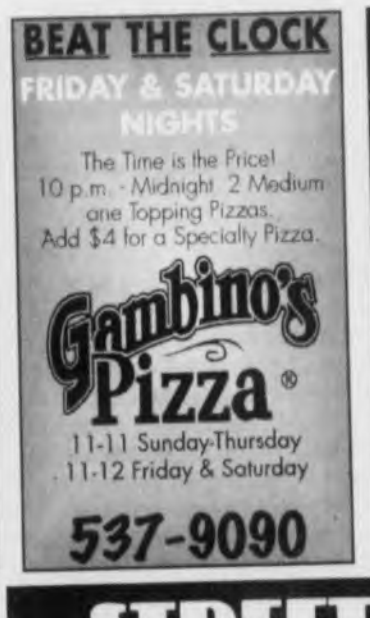
In addition, high air temperatures and humidity can cause problems.



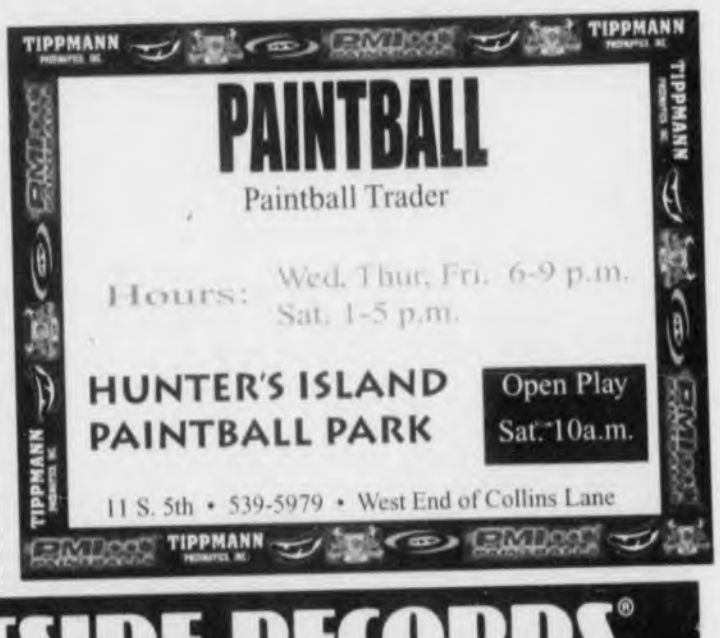
"With the tower on the east side of town, the heat has affected the antenna by overheating some internal components," said Scott Weaver, inventory manager for Sprint PCS. "However, such problems have not been occurring recently and are easily fixed."

The weather theory has been all but eliminated from the list of possible causes for bad phone connections. Geography plays only a small part because, although Manhattan is located inside of a valley with high hills surrounding the area, cell phone towers are situated on top of hills to accommodate this potential problem.

So many Manhattan residents and university students make phone calls that Sprint PCS towers are receiving up to 15,000 hits per day, with as many as 3,000-4,000 hits at any given time.



For local Sprint PCS customers, some of the current strain on the company's four towers will be taken care of by the installation of a new tower by Colbert Hills Golf Course.



"The tower will have service fairly soon, and the problem should be completely alleviated in the next couple of weeks at the most," Weaver said.

Training for Summer Olympics takes INTENSE PREPARATION

By JASON ARY
Kansas State Collegian

Most people would enjoy the opportunity to spend a summer traveling throughout Europe. A dream vacation for many, cities such as Rome, London and Paris are landmarks that beckon millions of tourists a year.

Nathan Leeper is no average tourist, however. While his passport bears the stamps of England, Italy, Norway, and half a dozen other European countries, he would be unable to enlighten you on the grandeur of the Eiffel Tower or the beauty of the Swiss Alps.

Leeper, a former K-State student and track member, made his rounds in Europe last summer in preparation for the upcoming Summer Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia.

Using the various European meets to fine-tune his skills, Leeper made the long journey back to the states in July to first compete for an Olympic roster spot. Going against some of the toughest competition ever in the event, Leeper knew he had his hands full.

"I was really quite confident, though," Leeper said. "Going in, I had the highest outdoor jump in the nation at 7 feet, 8 and 1/2 inches. The best jump in Olympic trial history is 7 feet, 8 and 1/2 inches."

After intense competition, Leeper managed to clear the bar at 7 feet, 6 inches, a jump well enough to secure him with the third, and final, spot on the U.S. Olympic high jump squad.

"It was the first time in my life I was happy to get third place," Leeper said, "and it will be the only time I'm happy with third place."

Joining Leeper on the U.S. high jump squad are former Arkansas track star and basketball player Kenny Evans and 1996 gold medalist Charles Austin. Austin, who won the gold in Atlanta and went on to set the Olympic record with a jump of 7 feet, 10 inches, is the person Leeper considers as his mentor.

"Austin is such a good jumper, though, I consider him to be the greatest high jumper to ever walk the face of the earth," Leeper said. "He really took care of me and took me under his wing, teaching me the do's and don'ts along the way."

While Leeper said Austin is his personal mentor, he still pays homage to many others, including his family, friends and K-State track and field coach Cliff Rovelto.

"Coach Rovelto is the best high jump coach in the country — he may even be the best in the world," Leeper said. "I came to K-State because and only because of him. If it wasn't for Coach Rovelto, I wouldn't have made the Olympics and I'd probably be back down on the farm."

With all of the help and guidance from some of the best in the world, Leeper feels quite prepared for the Olympic games.

"I'm really not nervous about all of this," Leeper said. "If I got caught up in all this hype the media and public portrays, then I wouldn't be able to go out and even jump 7 feet."

Leeper, a native of Protection, Kan., said he feels the training and preparation Rovelto has taught him has readied him for the toughest competition, including the Russian squad, which Leeper considers to contain some of the most potent and experienced jumpers.

"One of their guys has jumped 7 feet, 10 inches this year, but you don't know how they, or anyone else, will compete when it's time to jump," Leeper said. "There may be some unknown guy who jumps the best of his life, and he'll find his name on the leaderboard.

"On the other hand, you may see some of the world's best struggle, and they'll fall out of competition. You never know what to expect."

Even though Leeper is jumping better than ever, there is still one obstacle that has, and always will, challenge him.

"At 6-1, Nathan is relatively short, especially among the true world-class jumpers," Rovelto said. "That goes to show how talented he really is."

Rovelto said he believes that even though Leeper lacks in the height department, he has more than made up for it through his devotion and dedication.

"The odds of anyone making the Olympic team is astronomical," Rovelto said. "To really make it, you have to adjust and stick with the training."

Leeper will be leaving this weekend as his journey to Sydney begins. On Saturday, he will arrive in San Diego, where he will receive his Olympic uniform and go through processing before boarding a plane to cross the Pacific.

After arriving in Sydney, he will travel to the Olympic Village, where he is planning on doing a little relaxing before he begins final preparations for the games.

"Maybe I'll go chase some of those girls from all over the world around," Leeper said. "Chances are, though, that I'll just relax a little and check out the Village."

Even if Leeper brings the gold medal back to Manhattan, everyone will have to wait to celebrate. Right after the conclusion of the Summer Games, Leeper will be heading to the Middle East to compete in the Grand Prix Final in Qatar.

"When he gets back, I plan on taking him out to play some golf," former roommate and long-time friend Jason Kridner said. "Maybe I'll take him to Rusty's Outback so he can dunk a little on the goal."

However, Kridner said no big plans are in store for a huge celebration.

"Nathan's a pretty laid-back guy, he'd just like to kick back, relax and watch a little TV," Kridner said, "but I'm sure we will do a little celebrating amongst close friends."

Leeper's father, Mac, said the family is growing anxious for the upcoming Summer Games.

"We are extremely proud of him," he said. "We can't think of anyone else who'd better represent the U.S. better than Nathan."

Volleyball team overcomes losses

■ Sophomore, freshman replace former starters; lack of experience does not impede experimenting.

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

When the K-State volleyball team embarked on a seven-day, five-game road trip eight days ago, the outcome was a little uncertain.

In the wake of graduation and injury, the Cats were faced with replacing two proven outside hitters with a true freshman, Cari Jensen, and an inexperienced sophomore, Jenny Pollard.

Questions abounded, head coach Jim McLaughlin said.

"Those were the two big questions we had to answer. Could our outsides, with (Lisa) Mimic being down and losing Dawn (Cady), could they play?" McLaughlin said. "And they played. That was a huge plus for the trip."

The duo certainly did play. Both players were named to the Washington State Cougar Challenge All-Tournament Team, and continued their dominating play against BYU. Pollard recorded her third double-double of the season and Jensen chalked up a career-high 20 kills.

The statistics show good performances, but Pollard said she needs to improve on her consistency.

"In the first game, hitting, I think I did well, but then against Washington State I think I could have improved a lot," she said. "I think I need to work definitely on my blocking and being consistent on attacking."

The young outside hitters now have game-playing experience and a couple double-doubles under their belts, but McLaughlin agreed that they still have a long way to go.

"Now the focus is they need to improve," McLaughlin said. "They set a standard, now they need to improve that standard every day."

In addition to the quick growth from Pollard and Jensen, the entire team improved. However, the team will need more matches to rise to a championship level, McLaughlin said.

"We're a little bit better now," McLaughlin said. "We need a lot of matches. Experience is a great teacher."

In order to learn from experience, though, the team will have to learn not to carry over disappointment from one game to the next. For instance, the Cats should be upset with their two consecutive losses to Washington State and BYU, but they need to live in the present, McLaughlin said.

"We had some good highs, and we had some bad lows," McLaughlin said, "and more than anything, we're going to have that for a while.

"We're going to start experiencing more highs, but it's how we handle the lows at this point in time."

Overcoming the two losses will be made easier by returning home. The players, in addition to resting their weary legs, finally will get a chance to play in the familiar surroundings of Ahearn Field House and its supportive fans, Pollard said.

"We'll get fueled by the fans and emotion in each other, and I think we'll pull this weekend off," she said.

The Cats will have to rebound quickly, however, because their three opponents this weekend, Bradley, Air Force and Virginia Tech, all have winning records. To win, K-State will have to avoid playing into their opponents' strengths, as they did at BYU, Pollard said.

"When we're doing the things that we do well, we were beating them," she said. "We ended up playing their game. Coming off of two straight losses, we're ready to play well."

2 football players honored by Big 12

Senior defensive end Monty Beisel and junior wide receiver Aaron Lockett were both selected as SBC Big 12 Conference Football Players of the Week.

Players were chosen by a select panel of media covering Big 12 football for games played Aug. 26-Sept. 2.

Beisel received Defensive Player of the Week after crediting 13 tackles, including five unassisted, after the coaches' full tape review in K-State's 27-7 win over Big Ten opponent Iowa in the Eddie Robinson Classic in Kansas City, Mo.

The Douglass, Kan., native also recorded three tackles for losses of 11 yards and two sacks for nine yards.

Meanwhile, Lockett was named Special Teams Player of the Week for his efforts in the Wildcats' 54-10 shellacking of Louisiana Tech on Saturday in Manhattan.

Lockett posted 65 net yards on three punt returns, including a 69-yard return for a touchdown midway through the fourth quarter.

The 5-foot-7-inch wide-out also had a rush on a reverse for a career-best 55 yards to set up a touchdown. He also caught three passes for 24 yards to total 144 all-purpose yards for the evening.

Cross-country runners win conference honors

Junior Shadrack Kimeli and sophomore Amy Mortimer have been named the Big 12 Conference Cross Country Runners of the Week after winning the men's and women's individual titles, respectively, at the Wichita State Gold Classic to open the 2000 season, Sept. 2, at Raft Golf Course.

Kimeli won the four-mile race in his Wildcat debut with a time of 20:09.61, helping the Cats to a third place finish among seven teams.

Mortimer, a returning NCAA All-American, won the 5000 meter women's race by more than 21 seconds over senior teammate Korene Hinds with a time of 17:51.22.

This is the second Big 12 Cross Country Runner of the Week award overall for Mortimer, last year's Big 12 Cross Country Freshman of the Year.

Mortimer helped the Cat women, ranked No. 4 in the FinishLynx/NCAA Division I Cross Country preseason poll, win the team title at the Wichita State meet, as the team finished five athletes in the top six individually.

Variety of activities to draw crowds to Hutchinson for annual state fair

By DAVID LAUNDER
Kansas State Collegian

Livestock, carnival rides, exhibits and concerts are a fixture in Hutchinson, Kan., for a little more than a week every year.

Today marks the beginning of the 88th annual Kansas State Fair, which will run through Sept. 17 at the Hutchinson fair grounds.

SARA MARTIN/Collegian

As in the past, the fair will feature events aimed to entertain a variety of people. Attractions such as petting zoos, magicians and carnival rides will be set for children, while presentations, food exhibits and evening concerts will satisfy the older fairgoers.

"When I went as a kid, I had a lot of fun," Marshall Meek, junior in public relations, said. "There were enough things to do for everyone, so I never got bored."

Debbie Anderson, director of competitive exhibits, said the fair traditionally has been a showcase for 4-H exhibits and livestock from around the state. This year, once again, she said she expects that participation will be high.

"We've had lots of entries," Anderson said. "There seems to be a great turnout overall."

The state fair offers several activities visitors can participate in to enhance their fair experience.

Instead of quick walks through the livestock barns, fairgoers will have the opportunity to get a closer look at the animals, Anderson said.

After viewing the livestock, visitors will have the opportunity to judge and render their own verdicts as to the best animal in each category.

Presentations then will be given on the criteria used to judge livestock by fair officials.

In addition to the judging, barn tours also will be given daily from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., allowing fairgoers to see and learn about the different animals shown at the fair.

While the fair has much to offer in the way of farm-related exhibits, it does not lack music or special events.

This year, officials have lined up several country, rock and pop musical acts, including Third Eye Blind, Def Leppard, Dwight Yoakam and LFO.

A wide range of other events will also take place throughout the fair.

Bull Blast, the bull-riding championship, will open the grandstand events tonight.

The Paul Bunyan Lumberjack Show, which will be at 10 a.m. Sept. 14 and 15 will feature World Champion lumberjacks showing off their ax throwing, tree climbing and log rolling skills.

Other attractions also will include A.J. Lutter, a chainsaw sculptor and a circus that has three shows daily.

Bill Leslie, president of Catalyst Creative Services, said the fair has something for everyone without having to spend a lot of money.

"To me, it's a heck of an entertainment value," he, said. "There is nowhere else you can go for a reasonable price and do so many different things."

Fair to provide eclectic musical line-up

By SARAH MCCAFFREY
Kansas State Collegian

Entertainment at this year's state fair aims to attract fans from every demographic.

"We want something there for everybody," said Brad Rayl, board member for the state fair.

The musical acts featured at the fair this year include bands that range from pop appeal to rock to country. Some of the acts include Third Eye Blind, LFO, Youngstown, Def Leppard and Creedence Clearwater Revisited. The country acts that will be on stage at the fair include Dwight Yoakam, Suzy Bogguss and George Jones.

LFO and Youngstown were added to the lineup to provide entertainment for younger audiences, said Bill Ogg, fair general manager and secretary.

"LFO and Youngstown are geared for a teen and preteen demographic," Ogg said.

Third Eye Blind will appeal to a younger audience, while groups like Creedence Clearwater Revisited, which is composed of two original CCR members and three new faces, will attract an older audience, he said.

Ogg said ticket sales for the venue are lower than expected.

"It's growing, but it's certainly not the prefair sellout of past years," Ogg said.

In regards to ticket sales, Rayl said Def Leppard is the most popular, with 7,000 tickets sold as of Tuesday.

In comparison, Youngstown and LFO have only sold 2,100 tickets.

Rayl said the reason for low ticket sales deals with the popularity of the bands. In years past, acts such as NSync and Britney Spears performed at the state fair to sold-out crowds because of their popularity.

Even though LFO and Youngstown may not be as well known as previous acts featured at the state fair, Gill Cunningham, vice president of Romeo Entertainment Group, said they still have much to offer.

"LFO, as far as quality of performance, is as good as NSync or the Backstreet Boys," Cunningham said. "I think most people will like the quality of the performance."

AP 1st-place votes decieving of actual team performance

Derek Boss

National rankings.

Those two words have more authority and jurisdiction than anything associated with college football.

It's what it all comes down to in the end.

Whoever's No. 1 — they're the national champions. No. 2 — they're the ones who got battered and pillaged by the national champions. And the rest of the pack? They don't get remembered much at all.

But until the end of the season, those rankings have a much higher acclaim. Even the 25th-ranked team plays as if it's preparing to compete for a national championship.

Those college football programs that have the honor of being amid the top-25 teams in the nation — well, they deserve some bragging rights.

But when the country has several sub-par programs receiving No. 1 rankings in the polls, all hell breaks loose.

Now, granted, the top-two teams in the country should get the majority of the first-place votes. In the latest AP poll, No. 1 Nebraska received 39 of those votes, while No. 2 Florida State tallied 28.

Pretty reasonable, huh?

Well, you'd probably expect the other remaining votes to be distributed among the No. 3 and 4 teams, right?

Think again.

Instead, those votes wound up with the likes of No. 6 Wisconsin and No. 7 Texas (I'd just like to add that I hold no logical conclusion why those two programs are ranked this highly in the first place).

First off, the Badgers receiving a first-place vote is ludicrous. Wisconsin is known as the team "without Ron Dayne." Try and name several of their players, and you end up saying, "Well, they don't have Ron Dayne anymore, do they?"

Without Dayne, the Badgers will be lucky to survive in the Big Ten Conference, let alone try and make a run towards the national title.

Oh, and you can't forget Texas. The Longhorns, for reasons classified as unknown, received two (yes, I said two) first place votes by the AP pollsters.

Now, the fact that they're ranked above K-State is painful enough, but when they start getting tabbed as one of the nation's elite, I've got an ample problem with that assessment.

Don't get me wrong — Major Applewhite is a great quarterback, and he'll do great things for the Longhorn program this year, but I'm afraid he's still got a purple haze running through his head from the beating he's received from the Wildcats the past two years.

Let's just say he checks his back a little more often these days.

But Texas does get the luck of the draw, as they don't face K-State this season. There's a few less concussions for Applewhite, at least.

Yet, I still don't get where those two first-place votes came from — they're must be a few Texans amid the AP pollsters, or at least some Wildcat haters.

Nevertheless, if you think the votes Wisconsin and Texas received irritated me the most, think again.

No, there was one final first-place vote recipient that really drove me up the wall.

UCLA.

After an upset victory over then-No. 3 Alabama last weekend, the Bruins opened a lot of eyes in the college football world.

They deserve some recognition. They have a quality program, and they showed that as they shocked the Crimson Tide.

I'd go out on a limb and even say they deserve their No. 16 ranking, but they surely don't warrant a first-place vote. How ridiculous is that?

A team goes from being unranked to ranked in a single week, and then the AP poll has the nerve to give them a first-place vote?

Let's not get too carried away now.

Pretty soon, first-place votes are going to be handed out all over the country. They'll be everywhere. Heck, No. 25 Southern Mississippi lost to Tennessee last weekend, why not give them a first-place vote, too?

Before we know it, teams such as Ball State are going to start getting first place votes. Oops, did I say Ball State? I didn't mean to spread a bad vibe, like they're a weak opponent or anything.

Anyway, first-place votes should be distributed wisely and appropriately. Just because a team does well a particular week doesn't warrant them the right to such a prestigious vote.

They're not something you can just waste. They've got to be cherished, man.

Whether this frivolous first-place vote controversy continues the rest of the season remains to be seen.

But it's still early in the season. At least there's still hope on the horizon.

CLEANUP

of the house manage their affairs.

Messelt said it was his duty to find an insurance adjustor to take care of the house as well as find alternate housing for the displaced TKEs. Of the 68 TKE house residents, 28 were relocated to the Days Inn while their rooms were cleaned out.

Representatives at the Office of Student Life and a few K-State fraternities offered rooms for the displaced TKEs, but members of the house preferred to move as a group, Muehring said.

"We had plenty of offers, and that's something we really appreciate, but we opted to stick together," he said.

Dave Brown, adjustor with America Central Adjusting, was hired to handle the initial fire investigation. Brown, in turn, hired an electrical engineer to test the safety of the fraternity house as well as a cause-and-origin specialist to determine the source of the fire.

So far, the cause is still unknown.

"We have ruled out the possibility of an electrical fire," Brown said. "That was something we were really concerned with."

Initial stories of the fire, which appeared in the Manhattan Mercury and Collegian, reported an hour-long lag time between the sounding of smoke alarms and the discovery of the fire. Brown said these reports were untrue.

"I read some reports on that initially, but it sure sounded like there was some misinformation going around," he said. "If it had burned for over five minutes, it would surprise me."

Newspaper reports that Muehring turned off the smoke alarm due to problems with frequent false alarms also were untrue, Brown said.

"They turned off the alarm to communicate with each other," he said. "I'm quite impressed with John, actually. He got all of his people out, and he did a miraculous job."

Now that the initial investigation is almost complete, Messelt said that his company will continue working with the TKEs for the next few weeks as the damage is repaired. Fortunately, the residents of Room 305 have the benefit of home-owner's insurance under their parents' policies.

As far as the damage to the house goes, Messelt said the TKE insurance policy will cover expenses.

"As far as damage, it's all insurance related," he said

The clean-up has moved quickly, Muehring said, as members of the fraternity work with Brown and Company/Caspers Restoration Company from 9 a.m. and into the late evening each day. Tasks that are ahead include replacing the carpet in the third floor hallway, painting and sealing walls and ceilings damaged by smoke and water, and otherwise preparing rooms for members living out of hotel rooms.

"We're adding a room or two a day," Messelt said.

All resident of the first floor are back in the house, and a few displaced second-floor dwellers are expected to be back by the weekend, Muehring said. Meanwhile, third-floor residents hope to have their refurbished rooms ready in the next two weeks.

House operations have seen little change, Muehring said, as the TKE members work to maintain a sense of normalcy. Activities such as philanthropies and intramural sports will continue. Next week, TKE will sponsor its annual Powderpuff Football tournament, a flag football league featuring sorority members as players. Muehring said the games helped raise $1,500 for worthy causes last year, and the tournament is something the TKE house refuses to set aside.

The incident might bring some benefits. Representatives of the Greek Affairs office might plan fire-safety seminars for other fraternities and sororities, Muehring said, and use TKE members as speakers.

The fire also will bring a new focus to safety around the fraternity house.

"Our house will be a lot safer than it has been," Muehring said. "We're going to work with the fire department and probably develop a better escape plan."

Posting these escape plans on doors will be a new feature, and the addition of advanced smoke detectors and a sprinkler system will be discussed, Muehring said. Although one fire drill is performed each semester, the TKE president said they might be run through a bit more often.

Local women compete in Miss Kansas USA

REED DUNN/ Collegian

Miss North Central Kansas, Jane Margaritis, dances during the opening act at the Miss Kansas USA 2001 pageant at Maize High School in Maize, Kan. Margaritis was given the spirit award and special achievement for the swimsuit competition.

By REED DUNN
Kansas State Collegian

Growing up, Gretchen Harth never dreamed of being a beauty queen. She literally put on a new face to compete in the Miss Kansas USA pageant.

"This is all new," Harth said. "It was the first time I wore nails and bought make-up. When I was there, I even had one of the delegates do my make-up."

Harth, fifth-year senior in family studies and community services, was one of 29 women competing for the title of Miss Kansas USA 2001 this weekend at Maize High School in Maize, Kan.

Each contestant was selected to compete in the state pageant through an application and interview process, naming them with a regional or city title. In most cases the contestants are able to select their title name as part of the application process.

Miss Kansas USA 2001 was also a first for Lindsay Vogel, senior in marketing, and Leslie Wilson, junior in nutrition and exercise science.

"It took a lot of dedication in knowing what you want," Vogel said. "It was a lot of focus on who you are, and what you want out of it."

Even though Vogel did not have the experience of other delegates, she was able to lean on her college and pageant roommate, Jane Margaritis, senior in elementary education, for advice.

"She was a huge motivator," Vogel said. "I couldn't have asked for a better situation. She did nothing but help me."

Margaritis said having so many competitors from K-State was like having a personal cheering section. She said even though she has experienced the pageant before, it was important for her to have that support.

"Being in a pageant forces you to step out of your comfort zone," she said. "That's basically what it's all about."

Personal growth and friendships are what Margaritis said delegates can get from the competition. Even though she did not win the title, she said she was pleased with the outcome.

"I know I did my best, and that means more than any crown or banner could," she said. "I'm engaged, so this is my last pageant. It brought a closure to it all."

Charita Vine, former K-State student, said all of the women have to go into pageants knowing they will compete at their highest potential level.

"You hope for the best, but you never really know how you're going to finish," she said. "All you know is that your going to do your best."

Wilson said having the women from K-State competiting in the pageant is something positive for the university.

"Not only were there the quantity of people, I think the girls of K-State were quality," she said. "I think that says a lot for our university."

Along with the competitors having ties to K-State, Brie Strohmeyer, Manhaitan native, was a contestant in the pageant. Strohmeyer was a top-five finalist, and was

Wefald delivers address, hopes for good year

By APRIL MIDDLETON
Kansas State Collegian

President Jon Wefald contributes many factors to the success of K-State in the year 2000.

Friday's annual State of the University Address gave Wefald the opportunity to share what he said he has known since he came to K-State: that the university is doing very well and will continue to improve.

WEFALD

"We will become one of the top 10 land grant schools in the nation," Wefald said.

He addressed the importance of remembering what K-State is and what the university is all about. The same things that have brought the university to where it is today, he said, will continue to carry it.

"We will get to the top the same way we have gotten where we are today: big dreams, perseverance, teamwork, thinking outside the box and the willing to take risks and try new things," Wefald said.

During the address, Wefald spoke about the accomplishments the university has seen and areas that are still being improved.

One of the greatest challenges, he said, has been getting faculty salaries to the level at which they need to be. K-State has seen great improvements in this area, Wefald said, including a 5.9-percent increase this year.

Basketball coach fired at Indiana after 3 decades

By AMY FORLITI
The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS— Indiana University fired coach Bobby Knight, ending three tumultuous decades at a school where he was one of basketball's best coaches, but also one of its most volatile.

The decision was announced Sunday by university President Myles Brand.

Knight's temper finally did him in last week when he grabbed a student by the arm to lecture him about manners. The coach had been under a "zero-tolerance" school policy that included no "inappropriate" physical contact with students.

Brand, who criticized Knight for repeatedly flouting the school's conduct policy since it was set in May, said he gave the coach the option of resigning. Knight refused, Brand said, and was fired for a "continued pattern of unacceptable behavior."

Brand stressed that Knight's confrontation with freshman Kent Harvey was not the only reason for the dismissal of the 59-year-old Hall of Fame coach.

"If that was the only instance that took place, you would not be here today," Brand told reporters.

Brand said he stands by his decision to not fire Knight in May and to institute the conduct policy, calling it the "ethical and moral thing to do" because of Knight's contributions to the school.

4-Hers compete at 88th Kansas State Fair this week

By KRISTEN DYMACEK
Kansas State Collegian

The market lamb barely moved as Trevor Lundberg ran the clippers down the side of its face, completing the last-minute grooming before show time.

"I'm finishing shearing him," Lundberg said. "I have to smooth out the hair, make sure it's clean cut."

KANSAS State Fair
SEPTEMBER 8-17, 2000
HUTCHINSON

The 15-year-old 4-H member from Frankfort, Kan., said his Suffolk sheep had to be ready on several levels in order to get a good placing in the sheep show.

"I have to make sure he's good and clean and he braces and leads without a halter in the ring," Lundberg said.

Lundberg is just one of the hundreds of 4-H members competing this year at the 88th Kansas State Fair.

Lindy Lindquist, associate extension specialist for 4-H youth development, said 4-H is an important aspect of the state fair because there are almost 12,000 4-H exhibits this year.

"It's a festive atmosphere even though there is an element of competition," Lindquist said.

4-H, an organization that offers more than 30 projects, including foods, photography, clothing and livestock, is open to youth ages 7-19 to enroll and participate in.

Lindquist said members work all year on the projects and exhibit them in county fairs. The entries that receive state fair blue or purple ribbons are qualified to compete in the state fair.

"This is an opportunity for 4-H members to compete beyond a local level," she said. "This is a chance for 4-Hers all over the state to see what other 4-Hers are doing and maybe learn or get new ideas from them."

Caitlin Cash, a 14-year-old 4-H member from Riley County, said there were several reasons she enjoyed competing at the state fair.

"I like the feeling of competition and achievement," Cash said. "I also enjoy seeing what other 4-Hers throughout the state are doing."

Cash, whose entries included lemon yogurt muffins and a demonstration on potatoes, said the state fair was an opportunity for her to grow in confidence.

"I've become a lot more proficient with speeches and demonstrations," she said. "I've had good leadership opportunities."

Local water considered no longer contaminated

Eighty-one people living just north of Manhattan no longer need to boil their water before using it, officials said.

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment lifted the boil water advisory Friday, saying in a press release the water was now considered safe.

The advisory was issued Aug. 31 after KDHE discovered coliform bacteria in the water supply of a subdivision located on the north side of Rocky Ford Avenue and south of Barnes Road, east of Highway 24.

Mark Davis, area water sampler, said residents in all 33 affected homes can now drink tap water safely after efforts by D and W Water Co. and KDHE to make the water safe.

"D and W and KDHE did extensive sampling Wednesday for coliform bacteria," he said. "All samples came back negative."

Crews worked last week to raise the levels of chlorine in the water to combat the high levels of iron, Davis said.

Eventually, D and W customers will receive water from the city of Manhattan's supply, Davis said. Until that time, KDHE will continue to monitor the system to ensure the quality of water remains consistent, Davis said.

Fiedler dedicated Saturday

By JIM REINTJES
Kansas State Collegian

Alice Fiedler shared a secret as she cut the ribbon to the Fiedler Hall and Library on Saturday afternoon.

"In my trust, I have provided a substantial major endowment to Kansas State University to cover the needs of Fiedler Hall and Fiedler Engineering Library in perpetuity, so as the years go by and world changes and opportunities arise to make the world a better place, Kansas State University will be in a position to lead the way and stay on top," Fiedler said.

The $12 million, 75,000 square-foot addition will bring classroom, laboratory and office space to the engineering complex, K-State President Jon Wefald said.

Donald Rathbone, dean emeritus of Engineering, said he thinks Fiedler's donation will make her the primary donor to the university at this time.

"When it's all said and done, it will be near $8 million," Rathbone said.

Rathbone said donors who gave $100,000 were given the title of "angel."

"I've decided to call you a saint," Rathbone said, talking to Fiedler. "I don't think angel was quite sufficient."

Fiedler said she was surprised at the size of Fiedler Hall.

"I had pictured in my mind all the area as half the size that it is, but when I walked in here I was overwhelmed," she said.

Sarah Dohrmann, sophomore in industrial engineering, agrees.

"Its awesome," Dohrmann said. "It's going to be great because we will have great access to technology. It's all here, ready and available for us."

Terry King, dean of the College of Engineering, said he can't wait for the new addition to be utilized by the students.

"We want to get students in here as soon as possible so they can start studying," King said.

King said the new addition has improved the college, but that they can't stop improving.

"Clearly we think we are on the leading edge of teaching and technology, and this can do nothing but move us up the ladder in this regard," he said. "Of course, you always have to keep moving ahead."

The Fiedler Engineering Library will occupy 20,000 square feet, complete with a high-technology distance learning facility.

The Department of Civil Engineering will occupy 65 percent of the addition, which David Steward, assistant professor for the department, said is a good thing.

"It's nice to get all of the civil engineering students together in one space," Steward said. "We have more lecture space now. It's a really good thing, the respect that the students give to the program, the respect that employers and other schools give to the program, and with that you get better students. It's going to be real beneficial."

Austin Amershek, senior in civil engineering, said the addition will be helpful.

"I'm very glad that they have a new addition," Amershek said. "The library is going to be very helpful for us and the laboratories. It will bring us up to date."

Construction began Oct. 2, 1998, which was funded with $5 million in state funds and more than $5.3 million from Fiedler.

Cory Lafferty, senior in computer engineering and Engineering Student Council president, said the addition is a rare opportunity for engineering students.

"I hope it 's something that College of Engineering students will recognize as a once in a lifetime college experience," he said.

Seaton renovation to benefit College of Architecture, Planning and Design

By MAGGIE BLUNK
Kansas State Collegian

Intermingling the colleges of landscape architecture, interior architecture and architecture is one thing the new Seaton Hall renovation has improved for the students and faculty in the College of Architecture, Planning and Design.

Architecture students, faculty, parents and alumni celebrated Saturday afternoon at the dedication ceremony organized to honor the recent renovations done to Seaton Hall.

"It has been a miraculous transformation in nine months," Dennis Law, dean of the college, said in his welcoming speech. "We have provided a perfect learning environment for our students."

The renovation dedication was sponsored by Endicott Clay Products Co. Larry Joe, sales representative for the company, said he felt it was a good opportunity to support K-State.

"As manufacturer of products that graduates need to be exposed to, we felt it was important to be here and support the new facility," he said. "We like that this school is thought of highly on a national level and we thought we'd take advantage to be involved."

The $6 million renovation, which included $5.2 million in state "Crumbling Classroom" funds, involved gutting and reconfiguring Seaton's east wing first and second floors.

K-State president Jon Wefald announced the numerous awards and recognition the students and faculty have obtained in the college. He also said that according to the top-150 architecture firms across the U.S., K-State is ranked No. 10 in having the best experience hiring students.

"Our faculty has been excellent," Wefald said."They make sure our students are ready when they graduate."

Tours of the renovation followed the ribbon-cutting ceremony.

The newly remodeled building includes 21 studios, three classrooms, 10 faculty offices, a conference room, a new Department of Interior Design office and a two-story atrium, which honors the first black person believed to have received a degree in architecture from K-State, James Pierce.

"The atrium links us to our main lecture hall," Matt Farris, senior in architecture, said. "It'll be a place for students to gather."

The main benefits of the renovation are the availability that students and faculty have with each other, the efficient space, being among the other colleges, and being in a safer working environment, faculty member Kenneth Brooks, said.

"My students have access to me and to each other because of the new high level of integration of information technology," Brooks said. "With the new design of overhead computer access, each student is able to constantly be sharing information and do their projects more efficiently."

Brooks said the conditions of the students' previous studios would only allow a set amount of computers to have access at one time.

"Now, we have high powered work stations and the ability to have a computer on every student's desk," Brooks said.

LaBarbara James Wigfall, faculty member, said she likes that the freshman have more of an opportunity to get a feel for the college and their future.

"It's important for freshmen to see where they are going," she said. "With my office being in a different hallway then most of their studios, if they come see me, they'll be exposed to the work of the older students."

Lindsey Gardner, senior in architecture, said she is excited about the new studios and all the other additions to the building.

"I won't have to worry about written doctors notes excusing me out of studio because of bug bites," she said. "Overall, this puts a better appearance for the college."

Law said the studios prior to the renovation, created out of industrial spaces, were very inefficient.

The Ken Ebert Design Group, Architects and Planning Consultants Inc., developed the master plans and served as the architect for the first phase plans and construction.

"Everything is much cleaner, neater, more organized and better lit," Ryan Woolridge, May 2000 graduate in interior architecture, said. "I'm impressed, things have definitely improved."

Cellular phones used in class bother others

When cellular phones first hit the market one of their key purposes was for emergencies. Even today, it is intelligent to have a phone in case something happens to your car and you need immediate assistance.

Granted, things have changed. Cell phones are now compact, and companies are now offering more convenient packages for their customers.

In certain situations it is acceptable and appropriate to have a cell phone — for instance, if you want to meet up with friends, and you can't get ahold of everyone before you leave your house.

But there are certain times when it is not appropriate to have them — they can be rude in restaurants and on special date nights.

One place they have no business being at is in class.

If you need to bring your phone to class, shut it off. It is unbelievably rude to disrupt an entire group of people who are trying to listen to a professor. Students do not pay a large sum of money to listen to your social life.

Studies have shown that talking on a cell phone and driving should not be combined. Perhaps the same can be said about people walking to class and trying to chat on their phone. They usually are not paying attention to other people around them. If people cannot walk across campus without using their cell phone, then they have problems.

Cell phones are becoming more and more of a necessity. They are one of the many advantages to this wonderful era of technology we have encountered, thus embraced.

It is a shame that our thoughtfulness in regards to this technology have not made the same giant leaps.

Australian drag queens should not be shunned during Olympic festival

Oh, to be a queen for a day.

Wouldn't we all like to transform into some sort of royalty long enough to experience the benefits of the paparazzi's flashing lights, newspaper headlines or just simply to dress up in anything that is considered outlandish (excluding the attire of Britain's Queen Mother)?

On Friday, the opening ceremonies of the 2000 Olympics are scheduled to take place in the host city of Sydney, Australia.

Included in those ceremonies are the athletes, of course, but also the cultural community of drag queens that are ever-present in a city that has been dubbed, "the world sleaze capitol" of drag queens, by Australian Federal Parliamentarian Bob Katter.

So the "to-be" queens have sparked yet another controversy for the world of athletes that never seems to be far away from making its own headlines with bizarre incidents (i.e. Tonja Harding having Nancy Kerrigan whacked before the Winter Games at which Kerrigan won the silver medal).

Apparently, the drag queens are to be a part of the closing ceremony that is paying tribute to great Australian movies, notably Oscar-winning "The Adventures of Priscilla, Queen of the Desert," which featured three cross-dressers traveling through the Australian Outback.

So, of course, now there are all sorts of right-wing reactionaries on the back (not literally) of the Sydney games officials to delete this part of Sydney-based culture.

Officials are dismissing the concerns.

I am not gay, (do not freak out, people who know me: this is not a "coming-out" column, rather an "I advocate the rights of gays" column), but I am quite democratically minded, and I see no problem with the drag queens of Australia having their day at the closing ceremonies.

I know the Olympics are athletically based, but another part of Olympic controversy, from the past and present, lies in where the games are actually located. A hell of a lot of money and political undermining goes on to get locations secured by countries all over the world. So when a city is given the right to be host of the worldwide competition, then why is local culture (granted, the red-light district of Amsterdam, I will agree, as being questionable) argued against being displayed as well?

Tourism is a massive industry throughout the world. Sydney and Australia as a whole are set to make loads of money off travelers and their expenses while in the country.

TARYN FORT

Sydney obtained the right to be host, so I would think that those attending the ceremonies and games would be cheated in a way by not receiving a glimpse of culture.

So, what if that culture exudes gays and lesbians?

It's lame that all of those right-wingers out there still hold onto their anti-gay thoughts like George W. Bush holds onto his daddy's fortune.

This is an opportunity for worldwide exposure of the power that our generation can have, and that we are going to keep upholding as adults on the horizon of leadership.

There always will be picketers and closed-mindedness when it comes to something as controversial as gay rights, but this is going to happen, so why not take a bit of it in instead of closing it out?

I have friends who are gay, and they are just the same to me as my straight friends. They might have partners of the same sex, but more than anything I applaud them for acknowledging a step in their lives that I can only imagine as being highly difficult to do. It's hard enough growing up, much less dealing with the drama I have seen society throw upon gay people.

This is yet another situation in which closed-minded political leaders are trying to force their closed-minded views on the public.

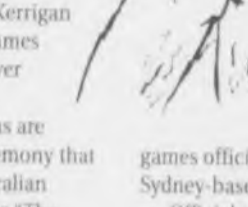
Thank goodness this type of leadership is in the process of becoming as archaic as the typewriter, because tradition is respectable to a point, but originality is the trend for the future.

Let the guys dress up like girls and wear glitter and high heels and expose their sexual orientation on television as a part of respectable Australian culture, not just as a condemned part of society.

As Katter puts it in a negative sense, I take it in a positive one: "L.A. has Hollywood, India has the Taj Mahal, and Sydney has drag queens."

I've been to Hollywood, and although not as impressive as I'd have liked, I took it in with all of the ridiculous traveling antics that I have an enormous gift for doing.

As far as the Taj Mahal goes, who doesn't want to see the most romantic architectural wonder in the world? Who?



And as for Sydney, I'd go there, too. Drag queens and all. I am open to culture-shock, as everyone should be. Take it in, watch it, you don't have to support it, but allow it to happen, because as anyone in Britain is highly aware of: the queens of the world seem to have no intention going away anytime soon.

Bush's claims to philosophies unfounded

"I'm getting a little nervous about writers snooping around my heart," said George W. Bush in a July interview. He was discussing religion at the time. Specifically, the faith that Bush, long before Lieberman was announced as Gore's running mate, made a central part of his campaign.

Remember the remark he made in the primary debate in Iowa? The then-candidates for the Republican nomination were all asked, "What political philosopher or thinker do you identify with and why?" Bush answered, "Christ, because he changed my heart."

TERRY WELCH

Now, there are many reasons why this is a bad answer: 1) Bush was not being asked which political philosopher he admired or respected, but which philosopher he identified with. In other words, which political philosopher he is most like. George W. Bush may be a good man, but, come on, he's no Jesus Christ.

2) The reduction of Christ to the level of political philosopher is rather heinous. As Father William Maestri pointed out in an article in the Clarion Herald, many people wanted Christ to become a political figure in his time, but Christ fled each of these advances. "If there is anything that Jesus is not," Maestri wrote, "it is a political philosopher."

3) It sounds phony, frankly. Many writers and politicians — on both sides of the political aisle — have derided the remark. One member of the (admittedly) left-wing Jesus Seminar is said to have called it "so embarrassing that even grade school children blushed."

However, calling the remark phony would be snooping around Bush's heart, and I will try not to do that. On the other hand, his actions are up for grabs. Therefore, it should be perfectly fine to attempt to glean from the candidate's actions his views on how the teachings of Christ should apply to the political realm. Remembering that, when Talk magazine asked him to name something he isn't good at, Dubya answered, "Sitting down and reading a 500-page book on public policy or philosophy or something," and that he equates Jesus' teachings with political philosophy, it should be no surprise if we find some discrepancies between his actions and his stated "change of heart."

Most obviously, there is the matter of the death penalty. I know that most U.S. citizens consider themselves Christian and that nearly two-thirds support the death penalty, but there comes a time when we must admit that this is incongruous with the teachings of Christ. There is not only the biblical example of Christ saying "He who is without sin may cast the first stone," but the church that Bush attends — United Methodist — has spoken out against the practice of capital punishment. It even addressed the "eye for an eye" issue in its 1980 resolution that opposed it, saying, "In spite of a common assumption to the contrary, 'an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth' does not give justification for the imposing of the penalty of death. Jesus explicitly repudiated the lex talionis (Matthew 5:38-39), and the Talmud denies its literal meaning and holds that it refers to financial indemnities."

For honesty's sake, though, I must admit to you that Gore is also an advocate of the death penalty. However, Gore has not presided over the deaths of nearly 120 people. He did not work to "streamline" the death row process in Texas. He did not make light of any of these executions, either, as Bush did in that same Talk interview, when he joked about executed prisoner Karla Faye Tucker's response to Larry King's question "What would you say to Governor Bush?" by saying, "Please," Bush whimper(ed), his lips pursed in mock desperation, "don't kill me."

But this is his tough love, right? His compassionate conservatism. But my dictionary defines "compassion" as "deep awareness of the suffering of another coupled with the wish to relieve it."

Bush seems to lack both of these qualifiers. His state ranks second in the number of children living in poverty, yet he told the Austin Statesman, "I saw the report that children in Texas are going hungry. Where? You'd think the governor would have heard if there are pockets of hunger in Texas."

There are other ways in which Bush's philosophy of compassionate conservatism seems to be at odds with biblical teachings. For example, did you know that his tax cut is antithetical to the Bible? Bush has said that it's "compassionate to give people their money back."

Unfortunately, Governor Bush missed the fact that Paul, one of the apostles of his favorite political philosopher, does not agree. He wrote in 2 Corinthians 8:14-15 that Christians should strive for "an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want.... He that had gathered much had nothing over; and he that had gathered little had no lack."

In fact, Luke's description of the early church is nearly that of a commune. In Acts 44-45 he says that those first Christians had "all things in common" and "sold their possessions and goods and parted them to all men, as every man had need." I'm not saying that this should be Bush's goal, but a tax break seems to be the last thing he should be concerned with.

All of this adds up to the question: What must Bush's heart have been like before, if it's like this after Christ changed it? But he told that other reporter that he doesn't want us snooping there, remember? Before he asked that his heart be left alone, though, Bush said, "I hope this isn't another story where you doubt my authenticity."

I don't know what that other reporter answered but, for my part the answer would have to be "I guess this is, Governor Bush. I guess this is."

Stranger's kindess in Union appreciated by KSU student

Editor,

Since people always complain about the lack of positive stories in the news, I thought I would share an experience I had recently.

If there is one advantage the K-State Union Bookstore has over other area businesses, it is not competitive pricing. Rather, it is the location. The location is so prime, that many of us will pay top dollar for midrange items despite our collective college debt. And, unfortunately, the Union Bookstore always has what you need. That's why I went.

I was in the bookstore Wednesday morning to replace a pair of lost swimming goggles and to buy batteries for my calculator. I had waited long enough to buy batteries that the only thing appearing on my calculator was my reflection. The cursor had long since disappeared.

I found a set of four AAA batteries hanging on a pillar near the cash register. As I stood in line, the gentleman in front of me looked over his shoulder at the yellow and black package of batteries in my hand.

"You know, you can get twice as many of those at Wal-Mart for the same price," he said.

I told him that I did know, but I didn't have the time to get to Wal-Mart since I had to use my calculator for an assignment due. Hence I had to go to the Bookstore; $5 be damned.

But he was determined to save me that money.

"Well, I think I have four of those batteries in my bag," he said. "I'll give them to you."

'Huh?' I thought. 'This guy is going to give me $5 worth of batteries for free?' I didn't know him. As far as I could tell I had never rescued him from drowning or given him my parking spot at McCain. He had never dumped a beer on me or crashed into my car. This guy was going to give me the batteries for free — no catch.

I paid for my goggles and exited the store. He was standing just outside holding another yellow and black package, this one larger, with 4 batteries remaining in it.

I took the batteries. I offered to pay for them, but he refused; $5 worth of batteries. As far as I can tell, my calculator is working fine — I don't have to look at my reflection anymore.

So it seems that people can be randomly kind, and now I have a debt to return an act of random kindness to someone else. Perhaps I need to go stock up on supplies at Wal-Mart.

Anyway, I owe that gentleman a thank you.

Thanks.

Professor coaches ball during 2-week Zimbabwe vacation

KAREN MIKOLS/Collegian

Robert Linder teaches the History of Baseball in American culture, along with other history classes at K-State. He traveled to Zimbabwe this summer to coach baseball.

By NANCY HULL
Kansas State Collegian

There's a place K-State history professor Bob Linder calls "the museum."

Books line the walls from the floor to the ceiling, and keepsakes and pictures from Linder's life clutter the room.

"It's a collection of memorabilia from baseball, 30 years of teaching at K-State and all the places in the world where I've traveled," Linder said.

This museum is on the second floor of Eisenhower Hall. This museum doubles as Linder's office.

New to the collection is a gold paper weight that was given to Linder by the Zimbabwe Baseball and Softball Association. Linder's torn and faded baseball glove sits next to the gold gift.

Baseball has been a significant part of Linder's life since age 8. Linder grew up in Salina, Kan., and attended Emporia State University. After playing baseball and coaching little league ball while in college, Linder went on to play minor league baseball around Kansas. He now teaches The History of Baseball in American Culture, the class he calls his pet course.

In July, he was called on to take his love of the game into the lives of high school softball and baseball players in the struggling nation of Zimbabwe.

Linder began his summer in Australia. For the past 15 summers, Linder, the man some call "Crocodile Bob," has spent the summers working on a two-person writing project that uncovers the history of Australia's Protestant religion.

When Linder received an invitation from an old friend to spend the last two weeks of July in Zimbabwe, he said he couldn't resist.

Linder's old friend is Fred Sorrells, a 1980 K-State graduate. Sorrells lives in Zimbabwe with his family and is the national development officer for baseball and softball in Zimbabwe. He oversees the entire sports program for the country of Zimbabwe.

Linder was invited to Zimbabwe to help coach high school baseball and softball. He also managed to teach about a dozen high school classes during his two-week stay.

Coaching a high school girls' softball team is one of Linder's fondest memories from Zimbabwe.

"I have three daughters, so coaching girls really brought back the memories," he said. "They were all just a joy to coach. I really fell in love with the team."

Water, electricity, utilities and roads were absent from Epworth, the city where Linder coached. The players lacked uniforms, and they were forced to share equipment with the boys' team.

Despite these conditions, Linder said the team was successful.

"It was through enthusiasm that they won," he said. "They were good softball players that were eager to learn."

While the people of Zimbabwe don't claim baseball as the nation's favorite pastime, Linder said the people took a great interest in the sport.

"They see American baseball on television, and they're fascinated by it," he said. "The game comes so natural for the natives."

To help educate the nation on baseball, Linder and two other men put together a series of 12 TV programs that aired on one of the nation's two channels.

Aside from educating the local people, Sorrells said Linder was an incredible resource for the young players.

Sorrells said Linder spoke to a group of orphan children and gave an impersonation of Babe Ruth.

"It was remarkable, and the kids loved hearing about an orphan who grew up to be the most well-known baseball player in history," Sorrells said.

One out of 10 people living in Africa are disabled, and they are often looked down upon, Sorrells said.

"Sport offers an opportunity to bring hope into a rather dismal situation," he said.

To make improvements in the lives of Zimbabwe students, Sorrells has plans to build a sports complex on a 10-acre plot of land in the needy Epworth area. Right now, lack of funding for the building is a problem.

Virginia Mixer, instructor and administrative assistant dean in the College of Education, and Manhattan's College Heights Baptist Church have provided resources for the Sorrells family and are looking into raising money for the Epworth project. The Sorrells are one of the church's three missionary families.

Mixer met the Sorrells and Linder through the church, and she helped link them together this summer.

She showed Linder a video about AIDS in Africa before he left for Zimbabwe.

"I think that once he got there and understood the problem first hand, it was much worse," Mixer said.

Linder said that living in a nation with severe civil unrest, a 50-percent unemployment rate and the highest number of AIDS cases in Africa caused him to be sympathetic towards the people.

"Going over there is like stepping back about 50 years. They just live in constant tension," he said. "They just need some leadership and a little help."

Linder said that adapting to life in Zimbabwe wasn't an extremely shocking experience.

"I've learned over my years of traveling to do what's necessary to adapt to people," he said. "It just really broke my heart to see how the kids live there."

Linder said he is now more sensitive to the people of Africa.

"There are so many things that we take for granted. We take for granted that there will be roads, a supply of gas and reliable postal service," Linder said. "We need to realize that the rest of the world doesn't live like us, and we do need to help out."

DOMINATING THE COURT

Wildcats sweep home tournament, 3-0

By SAM STIERS
Kansas State Collegian

K-State's women's volleyball team won three matches in a dominant fashion this weekend en route to winning the 2000 Wildcat Classic Tournament at Ahearn Field House.

The 20th-ranked Cats (6-2) never lost a game and rarely trailed during their matches against Bradley (6-1), Air Force (2-4) and Virginia Tech (4-3).

The Cats had lost their last two games heading into the tournament, and head coach Jim McLaughlin said Ahearn was a welcome sight to a team that had yet to play at home.

"We get to be at home and not travel," McLaughlin said. "After going to Washington State and playing five matches within that week, fatigue sets in after playing that much — and when fatigue increases, learning decreases, and we needed to get home and rest a bit."

Kelle Branting spikes the ball over the outstretched arms of Virginia Tech's Holly Disser in the Wildcats 15-2, 15-4, 15-7 victory at Ahearn Field House Saturday night. Branting was named to the all-tournament team, along with teammates Disney Bronnenberg and Liz Wegner.

K-State played Bradley on Friday night, and Air Force and Virginia Tech on Saturday. McLaughlin said winning the tournament was good, but more importantly, he said, was the chance the tournament gave him to evaluate the team.

"I think there was some good, some medium and some bad," McLaughlin said. "But we improved, and there was more good at the end of the tournament. It's preparing us for Big 12 play, and that's when the wins really count."

Senior middle blocker Kelle Branting said the team played well for being as fatigued as they were from the long road trip.

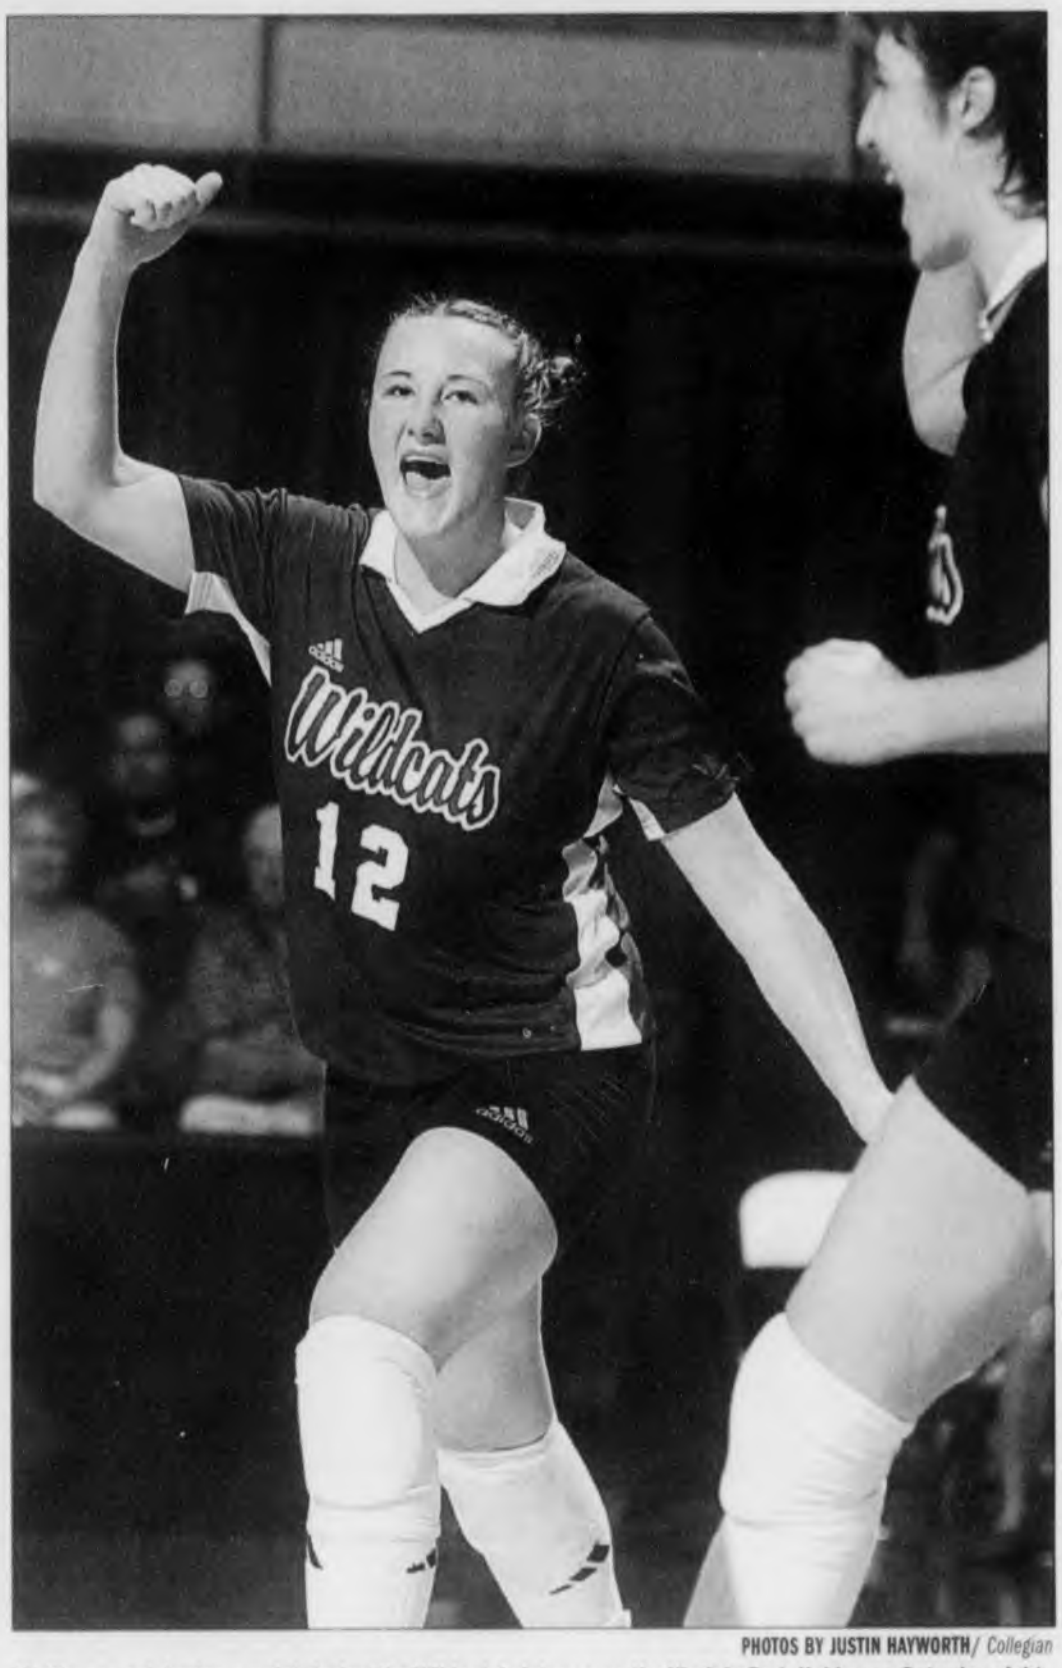
"I think our offense is looking really good," Branting said. "We need to get better on defense. Our blocking has kind of been breaking down lately. But we're siding out and hitting for a high percentage and serving for a high percentage, which is great — so it's promising."

K-State looked impressive throughout the tournament statistically, compiling a .397 attack percentage for the tournament. K-State overwhelmed its opponents with powerful attacks. Outside hitter Liz Wegner led the Cats with 37 kills during the tournament.

The Cats handed Bradley its only loss of the year, and trailed only twice the entire match, winning 15-5, 15-7, 15-3. Freshman outside hitter Cari Jensen racked up a team-high 13 kills during the match.

Air Force was only able to score 14 points during its match with the Cats, losing 15-4, 15-6, 15-4. Senior setter Disney Bronnenberg had 50 assists and four Cats had double-digit kills, as K-State racked up a season-best .471 team hitting percentage.

The last match of the tournament pitted K-State against Virginia Tech. The Cats won 15-2, 15-4, 15-7, holding the Hokies to a -.032 attack percentage during the first game and a .071 percentage for the match. Sophomore outside hitter Jenny Pollard led the Cats with 12 kills and committed no errors in 23 attacks.



Bronnenberg said she was happy with the way the team played during the tournament and was confident heading into Big 12 play.

"I think we all played well," Bronnenberg said. "We are ready to go. We've got a long way to go, but for right now I really like how we're coming together."

McLaughlin said he was happy with the way the team is learning and the effort it showed on the court.

"We need a little bit of rest and a couple good days of training, then we'll be ready for Big 12 play," McLaughlin said. "We're a lot better than we were two weeks ago."

Up next, the Cats will travel to Ames, Iowa, for a 7 p.m. meeting Wednesday night with Iowa State.

Men's, women's golf teams travel to Lincoln to begin fall season

■ 17 schools appearing in competition this week at Husker Invitational.

By DAN SMITH
Kansas State Collegian

K-State's women's golf team will travel to Lincoln, Neb., to tee off Monday in the AllTel Husker Invitational.

This year, Lincoln's newest course, the Yankee Hill Country Club, will be host to K-State and 15 other schools for the two-day event.

The course will run 36 holes Monday and 18 Tuesday.

Six of K-State's golfers will make the trip to Lincoln, after a weeklong qualifying tournament at Colbert Hills determined the traveling team and individual entry.

Junior Edie Murdoch set the pace in qualifying this week, finishing with rounds of 76, 77 and 78.

Freshman Christine Boucher shot 77, 73 and 78, and also will make the trip after qualifying fourth this week.

Boucher's first tournament of her collegiate career will be a tough one, with six of the 16 teams entered finishing in the top 50 last season.

"I'm pretty nervous," Boucher said, "but I'm here to play golf, and I know I can play good."

Head coach Kristi Knight also knows that Christine can play, and said she is excited to see her perform next week.

"It doesn't surprise me at all that she qualified," Knight said. "She plays the game well."

Fresh off a U.S. Open appearance, sophomore Miranda Smith also will compete next week in Lincoln along with sophomore Elise Carpentier, junior Lindsay Hammerschmidt and senior Carrie Chambers.

Hammerschmidt was frustrated by her qualifying performance, but earned a place on the team by shooting rounds of 82, 82 and 79.

"I could have done a lot better, but I'm really excited to travel to the first tournament," Hammerschmidt said.

"I want to be able to travel and give the team some competition in practice."

Chambers will compete in Lincoln as K-State's lone individual entry after compiling the team's sixth-best score in qualifying play with rounds of 81, 87 and 76.

Chambers was added to the traveling roster Wednesday, after Knight received a telephone call from the Nebraska coach inquiring about individual entries.

Knight said she's excited to see the results of her team's hard work at practice, and said her team is ready to play the new venue.

"We've got lofty goals for the year," Knight said, "and this is where it all starts."

■ 12 teams to compete today, Tuesday at par-71 Fairway Club Invitational.

Kansas State Collegian

K-State's men's golf program travels north today to kick off the fall 2000 season.

The Wildcats will make their first appearance in the 12-team Fairway Club Invitational at the par-71 Firethorn Golf Course in Lincoln, Neb.

Three other Big 12 teams will compete in the two-day tournament: Iowa State, Missouri and Nebraska. Also in the field are Drake, Illinois State, Lamar, Louisiana-Lafayette, Michigan State, UNC-Charlotte, Sam Houston State and Southwest Missouri State.

After more than a week of qualifying play at Manhattan's Colbert Hills, head coach Tim Norris named the K-State participants for the Invitational.

Junior co-captain Scott McNeely leads the Wildcats, after a team-best six-round qualifying average of 74.5. McNeely was two shots away from setting the Colbert Hills course record by shooting a 70 during qualifying action.

Freshman A.J. Elgert will be making his first collegiate golf appearance this week not far from home. Elgert, a Lincoln East High School graduate, came to K-State after winning the 2000 Nebraska State Championship and Junior Amateur Championship.

Dan Demory is the Wildcats' only returning senior, and qualified for the Invitational by shooting an average of 75.17 in qualifying play.

Junior Bryan Milberger enters the 2000 campaign after becoming K-State's first Big 12 Championship All-Tournament Team member last season.

Sophomore Daryn Soldan was the last to qualify for the invitational after averaging a 76.33 during qualifying.

Local ska band releases CD exhibiting variety of talents

music review
"I don't think you hear me, though"
By: Ruskabank

By JJ DUNCAN
Kansas State Collegian

Ruskabank, truly an asset to the Manhattan music scene, releases an album worthy of its talent with "I don't think you hear me, though."

With hooks that pull the listener in, lines that would stick in an amnesiac's head and music with a sense of humor, Ruskabank's album is a must for any CD collection.

It is rare that a local band releases an album of high enough quality to rival that of mainstream labels. Ruskabank does it with an ease that could fool the listener into thinking it had done a few more albums.

The band starts off strong with the catchy track, "Cheer Up," that gets listeners ready to skank right away. The album boasts good taste with a track line-up that makes time fly while listening to the album. The front end of the album is lively with the single "Give it Up" rounding off the fast-paced ska sound.

The fourth track, just when all the skankers are getting sweaty, slows it down with the humorously cheesy "Lover's Sea." Throughout the whole album, the talent and jazz background of the band shines through, proving that sometimes in popular music, knowledge and skill still count.

Every track on the album is worth listening to. The band seems to know that the song is what counts and doesn't bog down its sound with lengthy solos just to show off.

An added bonus to the album is its party-music value. The album is great to listen to alone, but pop this disc in at a party, and it inspires dancing and a general feel-good feeling throughout. Ahhhh, I get all teary-eyed thinking about it.

Another little benefit of the album is that it is an enhanced CD. When the disc is put into a computer, it has a band photo and a video for the popular song, "My Friends."

A good album sets up the fast stuff in the front end, but doesn't blow its top until the last couple of tracks. Ruskabank ends the album with two tracks that make the listener feel the need to applaud. The screaming denouement of "All my fans (are dead)" is matched perfectly with the closure brought by "Not the only one."

New 'Egomaniacs' album needs improvement

music review
"Primer"
By: Egomanicas

By JJ DUNCAN
Kansas State Collegian

With an album like this on the shelves, the Egomaniacs are asking to be humbled.

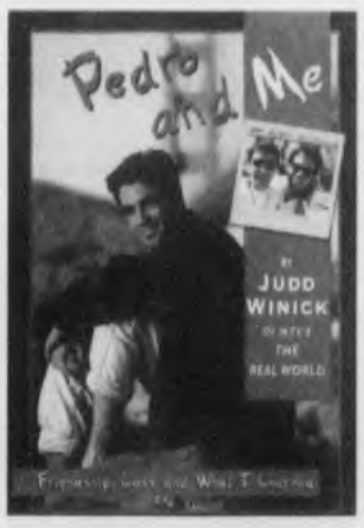
Unfortunately, "Primer" fails to record and reproduce the energy that makes the Egomaniacs a good live band. This is evident from the first track, "Whiteshirt/Birdshit," which is a great song performed live because of its energetic crescendos that get the listener's attention. But it fails on the album because it sounds like sappy post-alternative rock.

As the album progresses, it gets harder and harder to pay attention to. It isn't so much that tracks such as "Swooner" and "Big Truck" don't show any talent, because they do. They just don't have anything to keep the listener hooked.

The middle part of the album just doesn't help at all. There is nothing that makes the listener want to hear it later. However, even though the track isn't very memorable, the band get points for using a "Simpson's" reference for one of its song titles, "Nelson Munce."

As the album comes to a close, "e/go," which sounds like it should be the flagship song of the band, is a let-down. The track turns out to be just a boring instrumental that takes up space on the back end of the album. Maybe it holds special significance to the band, but it probably shouldn't have made the cut.

Don't let this album steer you away from the band. It is good live, and if it spends more time and uses better judgment in the future, it has the potential to release a strong album.



"Primer" simply holds up to its name. It sounds like the band is laying down a foundation to build on. Even though right now it's shaky and unstable, there could be something later.

The bottom line seems to be that the band needs to learn to write for recorded music. When performing live, it is easier to capture an audience's attention through energy and empathy, but it doesn't work on a cold plastic CD. They just don't have anything that makes the listener want to keep listening.

The Egomaniacs need something to be egomaniacal about.

Tale of 'Real World' star's life, death greatly rewarding

book review
"Pedro and Me"
By: Judd Winich

By Ken Wells
Kansas State Collegian

If you were a fan of MTV's "The Real World" San Francisco cast, "Pedro and Me" is simply a must-have. And even if you've never watched the show, you'll find it charming, moving, and brilliantly crafted.

Judd Winich, once the starving comic artist of the "Real World" cast, has spent 2 1/2 years crafting "Pedro and Me," a black-and-white comic book that looks at not only his time with Pedro Zamora, the HIV-positive member of that cast, but also at what brought them and what kept them together through Zamora's illness.

Winich strays away with a linear plot, which is perfectly fine; anyone with a degree of familiarity with the characters knows how it ends already. The impressive element of Winich's story is the detail and depth into which it delves into the lives of both Winich and Zamora. Winich takes an unflinching look at several painful topics: his initial hesitation and discomfort at living with an HIV-positive housemate, Zamora's discovery of his infection at age 17 and his fear of telling his family and classmates and Zamora's painful and gradual disintegration from an AIDS-related illness.

As a simple narrative companion to the show, "Pedro and Me" is excellent. As an item of sequential art, this book is oddly reminiscent of Art Spiegelman's landmark work "Maus," a similarly biographic graphic novel of a survivor of Auschwitz telling his story to his son, Spiegelman.

"Pedro and Me" lacks the epic scope and historical background of "Maus," but nonetheless rings with the same emotional undertone. Whereas the horrors of Spiegelman's book involved the systematic persecution and execution of a race, "Pedro and Me" takes a narrower perspective, keeping its view tight on Zamora and the effects of his illness his family and friends, and is no less evocative for its narrower focus. Even the comparison to "Maus" is a rare compliment and highly deserved in this case.

Reading "Pedro and Me" feels almost like an exercise in using the principles Scott McCloud put forth in "Understanding Comics" — Winich uses shading and white space with perfect efficiency. Each moment of the 2 1/2 years Winich spent on this project shines through. There are moments of poignancy, humor and raw pain in the pages of "Pedro and Me," and Winich handles it all with felicity, grace and obvious affection for its subject.

"Pedro and Me," despite the near-pop-icon status of its characters, gains its strength from its adherence to universal themes: love, death, loss and, mostly, fear.

Some readers are more familiar with the story, but every reader can connect to these themes — and Winich's skill and craft makes that connection effortless. Intricate in its detail but simple in its dramatic focus, this work's depth belies its size and format — it's simply an entertaining, moving work worthy of anyone's attention.

"We are starting to make a dent in where we stand compared to other universities," he said. "Are we there yet? No. We still have room to improve."

Wefald addressed the importance the faculty has on the success of the university. Without them, he said, K-State could not operate.

"The faculty is, without a doubt, the heart and soul of the university," he said. "Our reputation is a direct reflection of our university's faculty."

Wefald also addressed the importance of the students in making 2000 a good year for K-State.

"I sincerely believe that no university has better student leadership than we do," he said. "We empower our students, and they always do the right thing."

The success K-State students have seen, Wefald said, must prove that the university is doing something right. K-State is No. 6 in the nation in number of Marshall, Rhodes, Truman and Goldwater scholars.

"We are the only public university to be ranked in the top 10," he said. "We must be doing something right to get the top students in our university."

Provost James Coffman briefly discussed "Education Evolution at K-State" after Wefald delivered the State of the University Address.

Coffman discussed the factors involved in shaping the university's future. Some of those factors, he said, are K-State's reputation as a student-centered research university, the explosion of technology and an expanding market for advanced and continuing education.

Another issue Coffman addressed was the need for K-State to focus on how the university is viewed in the world, not just Kansas.

"We know Kansas loves K-State and our alums love K-State," Coffman said. "We need to focus hard on how we are viewed in the world of universities."

Coffman's suggestions on how to do this paralleled Wefald's thoughts that the K-State has been doing everything right. The future of K-State, according to Coffman and Wefald, will rely on continuing to improve as the university has in the year 2000.

"We must engage in and embrace the technical world that is exploding, but not forget who we are in the process," Coffman said. "Let's play our game, not someone else's."

KNIGHT

"I still believe we had to give him one last chance," Brand said. "He failed to live up to that. That was his decision.

"His unacceptable behavior not only continued since then but increased."

The search for a new coach will begin immediately, Brand said, adding that he did not yet have any candidates. Knight, who reportedly was in Canada, where he often goes to hunt and fish, will be paid for the final two years of his contract.

Knight won three NCAA championships with the Hoosiers and guided the U.S. Olympic team to a gold medal in 1984.

But his behavior, which has included verbal and physical abuse of players, has been a problem since he took over the Hoosiers in 1971.

Knight has had one of the game's most notorious tempers: throwing chairs across the court, stuffing a fan in a garbage can, scuffling with Puerto Rico police and even kicking his own son on the bench.

Last spring, he was accused of choking one of his players during practice in 1997, an act caught on videotape.

Following a school investigation into that claim and others, Indiana warned Knight in May that he must adhere to the zero-tolerance policy, which included no "inappropriate" physical contact with students.

The university also suspended him for three games and fined him $30,000.

Meanwhile, Harvey and his two brothers have received numerous threats by phone and e-mail, said their stepfather Mark Shaw, a former local radio talk show host and a longtime critic of Knight.

Shaw said the teens never wanted to see Knight fired. An apology from the coach was all they wanted.

Harvey and his brothers want to stay at Indiana, Shaw said, and university officials have assured their family they will do whatever is necessary to ensure their safety.

"We'll have to see how that plays out. It's terrifying," Shaw said.

awarded special recognition in the evening gown competition. Overall, she was named first runner-up to Kristie Knox, who was crowned Miss Kansas USA 2001.

With the competition behind her, Harth said pageants are not something that fit into her sporty lifestyle. She said even though it was her first and last pageant, it was a great opportunity to learn about others and teach them about herself.

"I know I touched some different lives, and I was touched," she said. "I wouldn't change it for the world."

Lois Vanskike, Wichita, said she had been going to the state fair every year since she was a young girl.

"There's so much to see and do," Vanskike said. "I like the food, the rides, the exhibits and the special shows, just about everything but the hot weather."

Vanskike said this was the first year her 8-year-old grandson had been to the fair.

"He told me on the way over he's never seen a real live pig, so we'll definitely have to see them," she said.

Asbury contract bought for $655,000

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

K-State has committed $655,000 to buy out the contract of former men's basketball coach Tom Asbury.

According to financial information released to the Collegian by University Attorney Dick Seaton, the university will continue making biweekly payments to Asbury just as if he were an active employee.

At the time he was fired, Asbury was making a base salary of $165,600 and still had two years remaining on his contract.

Seaton said the university agreed to pay Asbury $339,000 in base-salary provisions contained in the settlement. Those payments began July 1, with the clause that $50,000 must be paid to Asbury by July 7. Regular payments will continue until the full $339,000 is reached.

Asbury also will receive $316,000 over a three-year period as the balance of the total settlement agreement.

"That's what we bargained to pay in addition to the salary amount," Seaton said.

That money covers additional financial incentives contained in the contract, such as deferred compensation, appearance fees and bonus incentives.

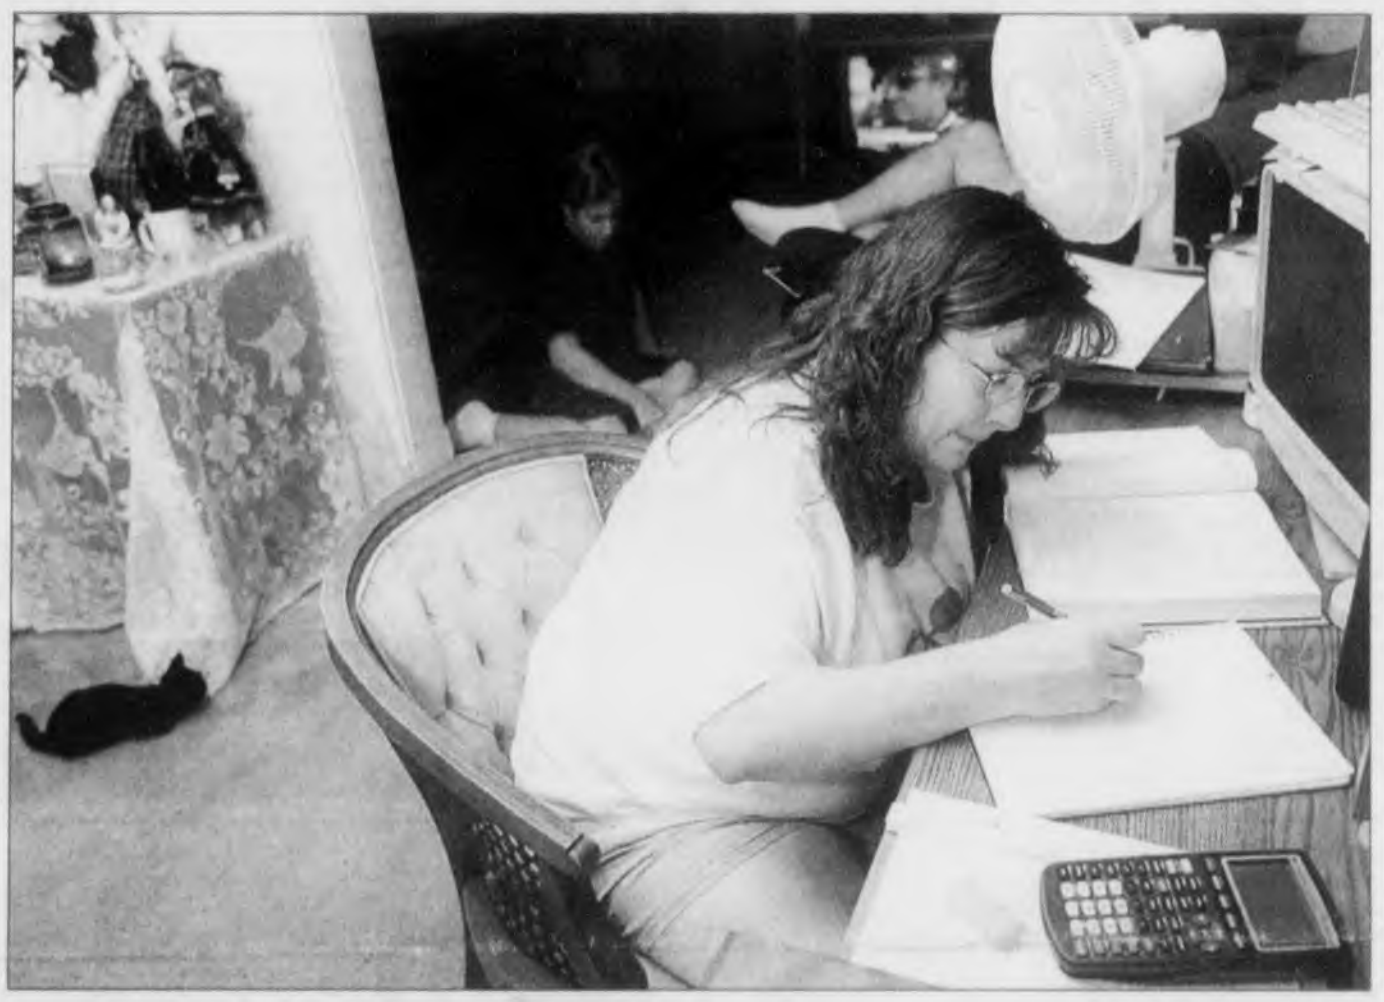
All financial terms of the settlement were discussed through a mediator from Topeka. The Topeka lawyer served as the intermediary between one side — Seaton, athletic director Max Urick and the university — and Asbury and his lawyer, Craig Altenhofen of Junction City.

"You have a neutral third party that goes back and forth trying to see if he can bring the terms to a common ground," Seaton said. "It takes time and involves a lot of discussion, that's the process. So that's what we did, and I think he did a good job."

Although financial terms of the settlement were reached in June, those stipulations were not made available to the public until last week.

Instead, K-State Sports Information officials issued a press release June 8 that confirmed a settlement had been reached, but said that "terms of the settlement are confidential, so neither party can comment on them."

The statement went on to assert that the settlement was accomplished in an amicable way and that both parties were pleased to have the matter resolved.



Urick said Monday there was a reason why terms of the settlement

Kim Boyd, freshman in accounting, works on her college algebra homework on a Sunday afternoon while her husband, David, and 13-year-old son, Chris, watch racing. The last algebra class she took was when she was 14 years old in high school, which was 19 years ago. Boyd is a non-traditional student. She was married her senior year in high school and is going to college to get her accounting degree to advance in her accounting job.

Back in the swing of things

By APRIL MIDDLETON
Kansas State Collegian

Helping her three children with their homework is something that Kim Boyd, freshman in business, has mastered.

She never would have imagined the tables would turn.

However, Boyd has found herself, at least once this semester, listening patiently as her 12-year-old son attempts to help her find the mysterious link in her algebra equation that will make it clear to her.

"It's been so long since I've done any of this," Boyd said. "I sometimes think my kids have a better understanding of it than I do."

Boyd graduated from high school 15 years ago. She started school this semester as a part-time student.

In the weeks before school began she was concerned with finding a working balance between her job as an accountant, her family and school. Now, she said, that has become the easy part.

"The first week was a breeze," Boyd said. "I didn't have any problems getting everywhere and getting things done."

Boyd is taking two classes this semester. Because they both cut into her time at work, that has been the biggest change in her schedule. Boyd said she must put in 40 hours at work each week, and to do that, she puts in a few hours on Saturday.

"As long as I put in 40 hours and get things done, it's fine," she said. "I go in early and take short lunches sometimes. Going in on Saturday isn't that bad."

Three weeks into class, Boyd's biggest challenge is getting back in the swing of schoolwork and exams. Boyd said school has been challenging and frustrating.

"It feels weird to be back in the classroom, especially with kids who are so much younger than me," Boyd said. "It's fine until I feel stupid in the questions I'm asking. It seems like I always need more clarification than others."

Nancy Bolsen, director of Adult Student Services, said Boyd isn't alone in her occasional uneasiness in the classroom.

"I think there are always students with the same questions," Bolsen said. "Someone just has to get past the intimidation and raise their hand and ask it."

Adult students, Bolsen said, often feel a need to have more information because they haven't had the recent exposure to the classroom as many traditional students have. She said this

Alaska native finds entertainment in intramural sports

By NANCY FOSTER
Kansas State Collegian

Three weeks ago, Kyle Yaege arrived in Kansas. A little nervous, but mostly excited, he began his K-State experience.

Now, after a few weeks in the state, Yaege, freshman in business, said he doesn't miss his home of Anchorage, Alaska, one bit.

"I'm not really homesick at all, missing my parents or my brother or my dog — especially my dog," he said.

His mother, however, hasn't dealt with it as easily.

"I'm already getting harassed to call once a week," he said.

His father, Chris Yaege, said it hasn't been too hard on him with Kyle away. Having him gone during the summers helped subside those feelings.

Budget cuts to be under discussion

By CRISTINA JANNEY
Kansas State Collegian

It was pencils versus photocopying and equipment versus work study this spring during the College of Arts and Sciences' battle of the budget.

These budget items, among others, come under the heading of operating expenses, which were cut in departments in the college during budget reallocations earlier this year.

INSIDE
Find out how much money each area lost.
Page 10

Arts and Sciences departments were asked to cut those budgets by double-digit percentages in some cases, said Al Cochran, an Arts and Sciences faculty senator.

"We have to come up with money we don't have without taking away from other things that contribute directly to our mission," Cochran said.

Representatives of the college are expected to introduce a resolution during the Faculty Senate meeting today urging the administration to involve faculty more in the decision-making process in future budget reallocations.

In the usual process, entities on campus prepare their budgets, send them through the university channels to the Kansas Board of Regents and then on to the Kansas Legislature.

1st Lou Douglas Lecture tonight on Army school

By NANCY HULL
Kansas State Collegian

Father Roy Bourgeois will deliver the first Lou Douglas Lecture of this fall's four-lecture series at 7:30 tonight in Forum Hall.

UFM, along with the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice and the Unitarian Universalists of Manhattan, are bringing Bourgeois' lecture, "School of Assassins: The U.S. Army School of the Americas," to the K-State campus.

John Franson, intern for UFM and senior in print journalism, said Bourgeois' lecture will fit in with the core issues of the lecture series.

"He will continue the quality speakers that have been brought in for past lectures," Franson said.

The lecture series deals with topics pertaining to human rights, social justice, world peace and international development.

Bourgeois will speak about the School of Americas Watch, which he founded in 1990. The watch is a research office in Georgia that researches and informs the public on the use of taxpayer dollars to train Latin American soldiers and the implications of the training.

Bourgeois was a naval officer for years and received the distinguished Purple Heart award. After being ordained as a Catholic priest in 1972, he worked with the poor in Bolivia and around Latin America before he founded the watch.

Olivia Collins, Lou Douglas Lecture Series coordinator, said this lecture should particularly benefit political science majors.

"These lectures can directly enhance students if their major is directly related to the topic," Collins said.

Collins said that, like all lectures, this one can enhance and enrich studies within the classroom.

"Undergraduate students in particular can benefit from the opportunity to hear outstanding speakers," she said.

Manhattan firefighters Clinton Castor and Scott Clark use a gas detector to check the gas levels Monday morning on the first floor of Anderson Hall.

Anderson Hall evacuates for gas leak; no injuries

Confusion over an abandoned gas line resulted in a landscape worker rupturing a live line west of Anderson Hall on Monday morning.

No one was hurt, and although a small amount gas leaked into Anderson Hall, the building was not evacuated.

The speed with which the line was shut off helped prevent problems with the leak, Rick Berry, Manhattan fire battalion chief, said. Maintenance Director Randy Slover said the gas was shut off within five minutes.

The location of the line outside of the building and wind that helped diffuse the gas also helped the situation, Berry said.

Fire crews searched Anderson Hall with detectors for any dangerous gas buildups.

Few pockets of gas were present, but nothing that would have been dangerous to humans, Berry said. These areas were ventilated.

The fire crews found no one in the building complaining of ill effects from the gas fumes, Berry said.

John Shearer of Blueville Nursery, Manhattan, said he was digging a trench for a sprinkler system as a part of the landscaping for the Union Plaza when he accidentally hit the active gas line.

He immediately realized he had hit the line and used his cellular phone to call the Division of Facilities.

Ruskabank celebrates release of recent album

Ruskabank is ready to celebrate the release of "I Don't Think You Hear Me, Though" at 9 tonight at Silverado Saloon with eight members, four horns and two Daves.

The Manhattan ska band's show also will feature local talent with Manhattan's Podstar, Wichita's O'Phil, and Brothers with Different Mothers, a group from Topeka. The doors will open at 8 p.m. for the album release party.

The release party was postponed until K-State classes began so that not only loyal student fans but also new listeners would be able to attend, said David Spiker, guitarist and lead vocalist. Spiker, a self-proclaimed advocate of local music, said it will be an entertaining evening.

"Come to the show and have a good time," he said. "You've got nothin' to lose. It's better than a movie."

Dave Studnicka, trombone player, said he agreed.

"It's better than doing homework," Studnicka said.

Jeff Bilberry, senior in advertising, has a long history with the band and helped set up the show by booking it at Silverado. Bilberry, a disc jockey at KSDB-FM 91.9, also has helped by promoting the show on the air, and he said the band was fun to see live.

"They are one of the most energetic bands in town, they also have some amazing songs and they are definitely not abrasive to the ears," he said.

"I Don't Think You Hear Me, Though" is the follow-up to the band's 1998 release, "This Took Some Time." Ruskabank, established in 1996, has grown musically over the years, Alex Thomas, lead singer for O'Phil, said.

"They have matured tremendously," he said. "They put in a lot of hard work, and they've become quite the musicians."

With four years and a second album now under its belt, Spiker said Ruskabank harbors no regrets about taking on an unabashed upbeat sound, a sound the band is closely attached to.

Carvings, leadership, football part of freshman's new role on campus

Freshman Craig Wanklyn jokes with other residence hall students after a Hall Governing Board meeting.

JUSTIN HAYWORTH/ Collegian

Eating dinner with his floor, going to football games and becoming a leader in Moore Hall all have been a part of Craig Wanklyn's project of carving himself into the K-State community during the past three weeks.

One of Wanklyn's favorite pastimes is carving logos for friends and family into limestone rocks. Much like his hobby, Wanklyn, freshman in architectural engineering, has worked on carving Manhattan into his new home by meeting people on his floor and becoming involved with residence hall life.

"It is starting to feel like home," he said. "It is hard to get used to a new place, but it is kind of becoming my home away from my home in Lakin."

Attending high school in Lakin, Wanklyn said he was a part of almost every activity in the book: basketball, golf, National Honor Society, band, scholars' bowl and many other activities.

Wanklyn's older brother, Kevin, senior in mechanical engineering, said he was proud of Craig's accomplishments in high school.

"I am totally impressed with the things he has done and the qualities he has amassed," Kevin Wanklyn said. "I hope he goes for his wishes and is well-respected along the way."

Earlier this semester, Craig Wanklyn said he did not have big plans to be as involved in college as he was in high school. He said it was important for him to get used to the transition of being in a bigger place.

Last Sunday night, he made the commitment to be a student leader in Moore Hall.

Craig Wanklyn said he decided to get involved in the residence halls because it was an organization that literally is close to home.

"I decided to be a part of the Hall Governing Board because it is based out of Moore and because the residence halls do a good job of scheduling things around other people's schedules," he said.

During the first week of school, students who live in residence halls typically elect the people they want to represent their floor in the HGB. Craig Wanklyn said he really wanted to be the floor HGB representative but had to be at an Engineering Orientation meeting that night.

After missing the election, Craig Wanklyn said he talked to a friend, Jon Krasnoff, sophomore in open-option and president of Moore Hall, about other leadership opportunities. Krasnoff suggested he run for Moore Hall representative for the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls.

"He expressed interest getting involved even before getting elected," Krasnoff said. "I was ecstatic when he decided he was going to run for the position."

Craig Wanklyn said it was important for him to become involved in order to become a part of the residence hall.

"This was just a way for me to see what is going on in the hall and hopefully make it an enjoyable experience for everyone," he said.

As the Moore Hall representative for KSUARH, his job will be to put together and help the KSUARH general body execute programming, activities and regulations within Moore Hall, and will have voting rights for the hall on KSUARH issues, Krasnoff said.

Krasnoff said he thinks sometimes it is hard for freshmen to take on leadership positions, but that he doesn't have any doubts in his friend.

"I think it is a good experience for him," Krasnoff said. "I was in his shoes last year as a freshman so I have a good idea what he is feeling right now. Craig is really excited about the position, which is very important to Moore Hall residents."

Craig Wanklyn is the second Wanklyn to live in Moore Hall in the past few years. His brother lived in Moore for three years and was president of the hall his last year.

"Kevin did a lot in his time here as Moore Hall president," Krasnoff said.

Craig Wanklyn said he is concerned that people will think that through his involvement he is trying to follow in the footsteps of his brother, but that is not the case.

"Kevin deserves credit for what he has done," he said. "I just don't want to be judged or expected to do the things that he did. We are different people and do different things, even though we are brothers."

Kevin Wanklyn said he thinks his brother could take the easy road and hang on him, but he said his brother takes his accomplishments and blows him out of the water.

"You may say that if he does follow in my footsteps, he has bigger feet and knows where he is going," Kevin Wanklyn said.

For now, it looks like Craig Wanklyn will stick to carving in his place, instead of filling in footprints.

"Many people might tell you a Wanklyn is a Wanklyn," Krasnoff said. "But Craig and Kevin are different in many ways, and that is what makes Craig really special."

FROM THE BEGINNING

attitude adjustment

Freshman adapts to college life in hometown

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

Christie Horton, freshman in open-option, expected a change when she entered college but had no idea it would be this large.

"It is a huge difference from high school," Horton said. "I am still trying to figure out a schedule that works for me. It is hard to adjust to all of the changes right at first."

Horton said one of the first differences she noticed was in the social aspect of college.

"In high school, you know everyone," she said. "I could walk down the halls and all the faces look familiar. At college, I am lucky if I see one person I know when I am going to class. That is a hard adjustment for me."

By pledging Kappa Alpha Theta sorority at the beginning of the semester, Horton said she has made that adjustment easier.

"The sorority helped me get involved right away," Horton said. "It gave me a chance to get to know people, so that I see those familiar faces around school. It is nice to have that as a freshman."

Horton also said the sorority helps her adjust to the way classes are structured at K-State compared to her high school.

"I really missed not having that one-on-one with the instructor in my huge lecture classes," she said. "But because of the other girls in my sorority, I can usually find someone who has been there and who can help me stay on top of my classes. It is an instant support system."

Katie Scheer, Panhellenic Council president, said she agreed that the sororities on campus offer instant support to freshmen.

"The sorority offers structure for the first semester," Scheer said. "It helps hold the students accountable for their academics and it provides a network for other ways to get involved. The students usually are successful because of the support group on and off campus the sorority provides."

Horton, who is from Manhattan, also is trying to find a balance between home and school life.

"Everyone just assumes because I am from Manhattan that the transition should be easier," she said. "It is just the opposite. It is more difficult to try and be independent because I have a safety net so close."

That independence is what Horton said she struggles with the most right now.

"I still have to make that final adjustment and be able to be away from my home life a little more," she said. "I want to be independent, but I still want to have a big part of that old way. It is a fine balance to try and be able to achieve."

To help ease the transition, Horton is living with her best friend, Sarah Wiegert, freshman in biology, in the residence halls.

"We thought it would be a good way to get to know other people, but still have each other," Wiegert said. "I am really glad we decided to live together, because we know some friends that went potluck and they are not adjusting as well. We at least have each other if we need support, or even if we just need to talk."

Horton said the only drawback to living in the residence halls is where their room is located.

"We are kind of secluded," she said. "On one side of us is the cleaning supply closet, the other side is the RA and across the hall is the bathrooms. We didn't think it was that bad until we went to a hall meeting and we didn't know anyone and all the other girls knew each other."

The roommates agreed that their top goal now is to branch out and meet others on their floor.

"We are just going to start knocking on doors and introducing ourselves if we have to," Horton said. "That is the easiest way I have found to adjust: just get out there and make friends."

Faculty members' input necessary in financial cuts

K-State administration should involve the faculty more when it comes to dealing with the budget.

This involvement would be extremely helpful when it comes to downsizing of the budget, a.k.a. financial cuts.

To acquire a budget, entities on campus prepare their own, then send them through university channels. They eventually end up in the hands of the Kansas Board of Regents and, finally, the budget goes through the Kansas Legislature.

However, that doesn't mean everything is in the clear.

This spring, the departments of the College of Arts and Sciences were asked to give up $133,845. This is a large amount of money to try to determine what gets eliminated and what doesn't.

Colleges were notified they would have to give up part of the funding in their budgets for other needs at the university and throughout the regents system. The complete reallocation was $618,214.

In the past, colleges have been able to reallocate money on the collegiate level, but some of K-States' colleges weren't able to do that.

This will affect students in terms of missed opportunities.

The entire budget dilemma won't be fixed just by asking for more candid input from the staff, but that is an important starting point. The K-State faculty have the most in-depth knowledge of the necessity of retaining certain items from the budget cuts.

Another key unit that will help the situation is for administration to acquire more input from students.

Every college experiences budget cuts, but if administrators start questioning those it directly affects, perhaps the solutions will be better for everyone.

Does Bobby Knight coach equestrian?

Sorry, Wooldridge, but can we buy your contract out? We want Bob Knight.

Yeah, is there any chance of Jim Wooldridge being Bob Knight's assistant?

I missed the game yesterday. Can anyone tell me how bad the Chiefs lost?

Dang, it's too bad we rushed to make such a big decision on hiring that other basketball coach. We could've had Bobby Knight.

I'm not going to school for five years to be called an interior designer.

■

Yeah, I really don't understand that zero to five drinks ad. I think it's probably because I'm still hung over. But OK, thanks.

Hey, I was wondering if we could get a translator to my micro-econ class, because I can't understand a word that guy says.

If there are any other fellow Hoosiers out there, relax. We will get through this somehow.

For whoever returned my wallet in Waters Hall, I really appreciate it. Thanks a lot.

Up in smoke

Too much emphasis on 'victims'; smokers have rights, too

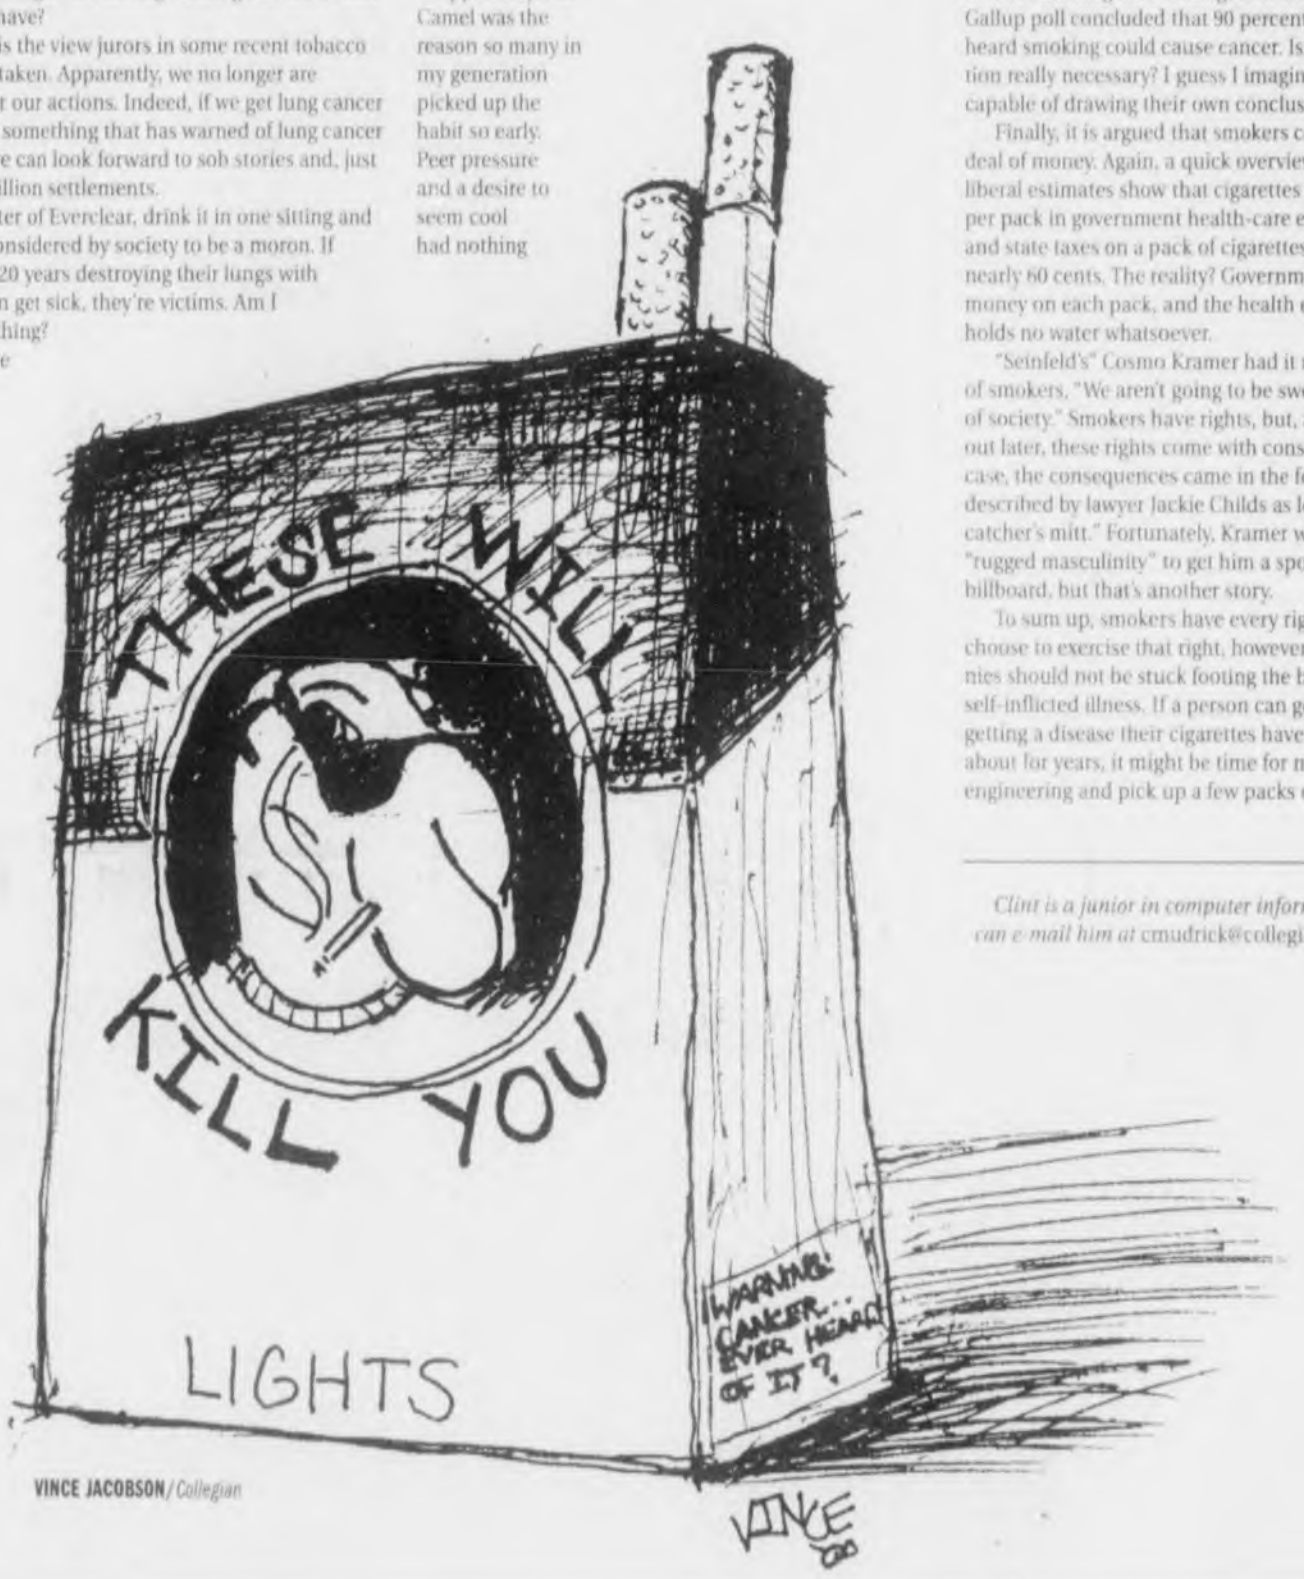
CLINT MUDRICK

Believe it or not, smoking is bad for you. No, I'm not making this up; according to recent lawsuits, cigarettes are harmful.

Those of you who were surprised by that first paragraph would be perfect candidates for juries in one of the several suits filed against tobacco companies. The decisions in some of these cases: tobacco companies need to pay lung cancer "victims" because these innocent smokers were deceived into thinking smoking wasn't bad for them.

John Stuart Mill, free-will philosopher, must be rolling in his grave. It turns out we Americans are idiots who do whatever the cute talking camel and flashing signs tell us to do. We all know smoking makes us cough, stink and die, but if the people on the Newport signs are having such a good time, what choice do we have?

Sadly, this is the view jurors in some recent tobacco lawsuits have taken. Apparently, we no longer are responsible for our actions. Indeed, if we get lung cancer from smoking something that has warned of lung cancer for 35 years, we can look forward to sob stories and, just maybe, $12 million settlements.



If I buy a liter of Everclear, drink it in one sitting and get sick, I'm considered by society to be a moron. If people spend 20 years destroying their lungs with cigarettes, then get sick, they're victims. Am I missing something?

I never have been a smoker. I've had a puff or two off a cigarette. I found the taste to be terrible, but that was OK because it also made my breath appalling and everything I drank for the remainder of the night tasted equally bad. Having said that, smokers have the right to smoke.

To go further, banning smoking from bars is like banning giant belt buckles from Longhorns — it just makes no sense. Still, I'm getting annoyed with the complaints of smokers and their lawyers. Let us tackle three of the main arguments given against tobacco corporations.

First, it is said that flashy advertising and deceptive warnings encourage people, specifically children, to smoke. After all, the hundreds of thousands who started smoking in high school couldn't have done it simply because they wanted to, so it must have been that damned Joe Camel.

Apparently, Mr. Camel was the reason so many in my generation picked up the habit so early. Peer pressure and a desire to seem cool had nothing to do with it. It was all the camel.

VINCE JACOBSON/Collegian

It seems to me that any child above the age of 12 who smokes because a talking camel smokes has problems far beyond the realm of tobacco use. Children smoke because adults smoke, and blaming a camel with sunglasses is just an easy deflection of blame.

Even adults apparently deserve no blame for smoking. After all, the cigarette packs don't have big enough labels on them.

Does anyone seriously believe this? Those who smoke know that smoking is bad for them. Warnings continue to get harsher; smokers are not deterred. It is my earnest feeling that Camel could change its name to "These Will Kill You, Lights" and, so long as Camel is the smoothest, its sales will not drop a bit.

Second, it is argued that tobacco companies only recently declared smoking addictive and harmful. Consider the facts. In 1964, the surgeon general released his first warning on the dangers of smoking. A 1954 Gallup poll concluded that 90 percent of Americans had heard smoking could cause cancer. Is an official declaration really necessary? I guess I imagined Americans were capable of drawing their own conclusions.

Finally, it is argued that smokers cost states a great deal of money. Again, a quick overview of facts. Even liberal estimates show that cigarettes cost about 40 cents per pack in government health-care expenses. Federal and state taxes on a pack of cigarettes, however, total nearly 60 cents. The reality? Government is making money on each pack, and the health expense argument holds no water whatsoever.

"Seinfeld's" Cosmo Kramer had it right when he said of smokers, "We aren't going to be swept into the ashtray of society." Smokers have rights, but, as Kramer found out later, these rights come with consequences. In his case, the consequences came in the form of a face described by lawyer Jackie Childs as looking like "a catcher's mitt." Fortunately, Kramer was able to use this "rugged masculinity" to get him a spot on a cigarette billboard, but that's another story.

To sum up, smokers have every right to smoke. If they choose to exercise that right, however, tobacco companies should not be stuck footing the bill for smokers' self-inflicted illness. If a person can get $12 million for getting a disease their cigarettes have warned them about for years, it might be time for me to give up engineering and pick up a few packs of Marlboros.

Prohibition of alcohol at games hypocritcal

ZAC COOK

I love gamedays. I love the smoke of the barbecue. I love the festive atmosphere on our deck at Woodway Apartments. I love meeting the out-of-town fans from Louisiana Tech who have driven 11 grueling hours and still maintain their Southern-drawl humor. I love laughing at them as they yell at the beginning of the game, "Who let the dawgs out? Woof ... woof ... wooooof!" But what I hate is the confused look on their faces as they enter our stadium parking lot.

What, you might ask, is there to confuse visiting fans? Sure, the sea of purple has been known to disorient even the most die-hard of visiting fans. But the confusing aspect I speak of is a small sign at each parking lot gate. A sign that reads, "State law: Alcoholic beverages are not allowed on the premises."

Most people don't even know about these signs. They have gotten used to seeing that most tailgating involves a little alcohol. It's just a part of the atmosphere. They wouldn't have a clue where these signs are that tell of a law broken each and every gameday. And it is clear the law serves no purpose left unenforced. It only damages the integrity of the rest of our laws.

The solution is simple. Stop the hypocritical stance that confuses visitors and makes our university look bad.

One solution would be to enforce the law. I'm not a big proponent of that one, because

1) It would rank as the hardest law to enforce since the 1645 law that you couldn't walk on the grass and yell loudly, or, in college terms, as hard to enforce as getting a parking spot on campus.

2) Coors needs to make up lost revenue after losing 77,500 gallons of precious Rocky Mountain refreshment into a river. That's about 4,800 kegs, or, in college terms, $250,000 worth of brew, give or take a few Franklins.

3) Alumni like to have a cold one, too, and if you take refreshment away from them, they might be inclined to stop donating, in college terms, millions more dollars to our scholarship drives. I don't know about you, but as an undergrad, I'm all for university endowment.

The solution I see is to change the law and take down the confusing signs. Yes, it would take an exception to a state law,

They have gotten used to seeing that most tailgating involves a little alcohol. It's just a part of the atmosphere. They wouldn't have a clue where these signs are that tell of a law broken each and every gameday.

but guess what? If it isn't changed, the law will just be abused as it is now. Some might say this encourages drinking. No, we will not be putting up signs that read "State law: You must drink more than zero to five drinks 61 percent of the time you are here." Or any signs that suggest fans chug one when we score a touchdown. Let Willie do pushups for our points. We simply will allow fans to continue what they have been doing, without breaking any laws.

Some might also say that allowing alcohol in the parking lot damages efforts to keep it off other state property. Well, we aren't exactly prohibitionists anywhere else. Residence hall occupants of age can have up to one case of 3.2-percent beer in their rooms. The K-State Student Union has been serving beer in the recreation area since fall 1995. Coincidentally, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex also opened in fall 1995, so all of those extra calories gained at the Union can be sweated out. Ah, the masterminds of K-State planning. Give students more opportunity to gain calories, give students more opportunity to burn calories. I love this place.

So, after examining the pros and the cons, I will take a Reaganistic role and demand, "K-State, tear down these signs."

In other gameday news: There would need to be a modification to the parking lot, whether the law is changed or not. We need a better effort at recycling all of the cans thrown away.

Also, if the weather remains hot and dry, people parking in the grass should probably be required to bring a fire extinguisher before everything goes up in flames. I've seen too many tipsy people spill hot coals and nearly torch the section. I know if I were parking out there, I would be packing Class C red with black hose protection. But, luckily, I'll be kicking back at the Wood with the Christmas lights on and the burgers grilling, waiting to meet new people.

K-State football rules.

Inattentive cellular phone use endangers more drivers

By JENNIFER O'NEILL
Kansas State Collegian

They're a national obsession — not to mention one of the most dangerous things on the road today, according to some law enforcement officials.

Cellular telephone usage has skyrocketed, making driving and talking a vile mix in the wrong hands, said Mark Bruce, second lieutenant of the Kansas Highway Patrol.

"Safety is being compromised to an extent," Bruce said. "People are accepting the risk because of the convenience of the phone."

Cell phones are playing an increasing role as something that diverts the driver's attention from the road to the person they're talking to, resulting in inattentive driving, he said.

There is no documented evidence that proves cell phones are responsible for drivers having more accidents, but law enforcement agencies certainly think they're contributing factors.

In fact, a study done in 1996 by the Rochester Institute of Technology suggests that people who use cell phones while driving have a 34-percent higher risk of having an accident.

Bruce said driving should be the one and only task while people are behind the wheel.

"There are already numerous distractions in the car such as music, children, other passengers and even eating," he said. "A cell phone is just adding one more opportunity for trouble."

Bri Dusin, senior in accounting and finance, said her parents purchased her cell phone right before she came to K-State because they wanted her to be safe while traveling on the interstate.

Dusin said she agrees the cell phone trend has become a problem for people on the road and has witnessed careless drivers.

"I've seen people run lights and rear-end people at stoplights while they're talking on their phone," she said.

Dusin said she feels safer talking on her cell phone while on the interstate with fewer cars around and not as many distractions.

Lt. Buddy Mays of the Riley County Police Department said cell phones do pose a bigger problem within city limits.

On city streets, there are so many things to be processed, such as street signs and stoplights, animals and pedestrians, Mays said.

That's not to say the problem should be ignored while driving on the highway.

"On the interstate, you are going much faster," Mays said. "All you need is one small mistake at 70 miles per hour to be fatal."

He said problems include people swerving in and out of lanes, driving slow in the passing lane and not using turn signals.

Authorities said cell phones have served their original purpose and helped save many lives. They've helped to get to people in emergencies faster and get reckless and drunk drivers off the road quicker. If used right, cell phones are great tools. When they're not, they're contributing factors to a number of car accidents.

Bruce said there is no such thing as absolute safety for cell phone users on the road. The Highway Patrol recommends letting another passenger do the talking or pulling over and not getting back on the road until the conversation is over.

"People don't like that solution because it takes the convenience factor away from the phones," he said.

Frequent cell phone users are turning to headsets that easily can be plugged into the handset.

Bruce said the headset presents a benefit by putting both hands back on the steering wheel, but it still doesn't address the driver's divided attention.

"Headsets are a step in the right direction and at least an acknowledgment by the driver that he's trying to be more safe," he said.

GOING BACK

problem will dwindle as they get accustomed to school again.

Studying in the evenings is one challenge Boyd has handled well. She said instead of sitting in the living room on the computer like she did before, she's sitting in the living room working on homework. She said her family handles the situation well, also.

"It hasn't changed much here," Kim's husband, Mike, said. "We just have to make sure to give her more quiet time."

Time alone to get away from everything is a need Boyd said she has discovered since starting school. She said the biggest obstacle for students with circumstances such as her need to make sure they don't get in over their heads.

"The biggest thing is that I have so much on my plate," Boyd said. "Sometimes I just need time for myself."

Bolsen said the discovery of this need is common among adult students who are trying to balance so many components in their lives.

"Adult students sometimes feel drained from giving so much of themselves out to everyone else. Their desire to be alone fulfills a need to bring everything back into balance," Bolsen said.

Boyd said when she needs to get away and just be herself she wanders around the mall. Sometimes she simply finds a quiet bench to sit on and watch other people.

"My family always asks me when I get back, what I did or what I thought about," Boyd said. "The truthful answer is nothing. I don't talk to anyone. I just walk. Sometimes you need that kind of time."

Mike Boyd said that any changes in home life, including him cooking more, aren't a problem.

"Kim wants to be in school and she wants her degree. That's what's important," he said.

Boyd said the degree at the end of the tunnel is what keeps her motivated.

"Knowing that in the end I'll have gotten the degree that is so important for my job keeps me going," Boyd said. "I've wanted to go back to school for so long and now I am. I guess I don't have any regrets."

CONTRACT

were not disclosed publicly.

"Personnel matters are kept confidential," Urick said. "Both parties agreed to treat it in that way, and that's what we did."

Asbury was fired as head coach March 10 after a six-year stint with the Wildcats. He ended with an 85-88 record, including a 9-19 overall record and 2-14 mark in Big 12 Conference play last season.

Asbury now is in California, where he once earned a real-estate license, working for a mortgage company.

K-State Sports Information declined any further comment on the Asbury contract settlement stipulations.

In addition, Wildcat men's basketball coach Jim Wooldridge was out of town on a recruiting trip and was unavailable for interview.

However, on Wooldridge's behalf, Urick said the Asbury buyout package will have no effect on the way this year's basketball program is administered.

"Everything is independent of one another," Urick said. "It had no impact on us or any other program."
